L. 625, a blank space was left in a deed of composition for one principal debt, the exact amount of which being ascertained was inserted in the blank the next day, in the defendant's presence and with his assent. He subsequently recognized the deed as valid in various ways, especially being present when his wife executed it and joining with her in a fine to inure to the uses of the deed. It was held that the deed was valid, although the blank was filled up after its execution.

IV. FORM.

A. In General. As a general rule no particular form is essential to constitute a composition.[58] It may be effected by deed,[59] or by parol,[60] and even, when the statute of frauds does not forbid, by an oral agreement.[61] It is not essential that all the creditors should join in one agreement; they may compound separately, if their several agreements are in pursuance of a common understanding and purpose.[62] And it is not necessary that there should be a formal release,[63] or even an express agreement for a release. Such a release or agreement may be implied from the terms of the composition.[64]

B. Composition by Deed[65]—1. Assignment to Trustees. The method of composition by deed most frequently employed in early times and one that is still often made use of is an assignment of his property by the debtor to trustees, who are usually but not necessarily some of his creditors, in trust to convert the assigned property into money, and distribute the proceeds ratably among such of the creditors as shall come in as parties to the deed, either by signing it or accepting its provisions.[66]

2. Deed of Inspectorship. Another method of composition by deed is what is called a deed of inspectorship, by which the property of the debtor is assigned for the better security of the creditors, but he is permitted to manage it himself for a specified time, under the supervision of certain individuals appointed for that purpose by the body of creditors, whose duty it is to see that the property is disposed of in the manner most conducive to the interests of the creditors. In these cases a release is usually given to the debtor, which is either absolute and takes effect at once or is conditional upon the fulfilment by him of certain terms.[67]

3. Letter of License. Another form of composition by deed is what is known as a letter of license, by which the creditors covenant for a temporary suspension of their rights and bind themselves not to sue or molest their debtor for a certain specified time, during which he is allowed to carry on his trade or business at his own discretion.[68]

65. When the law of compositions was still in the formative period, and the opinion prevailed that a composition without some new consideration was merely an accord, what would to-day be considered as a strict composition agreement always took the form of a deed under seal, which supplied the consideration supposed to be necessary; and while it is now admitted everywhere that a composition need not be made by deed, it is nevertheless preferable when practicable to effect a composition by means of such an instrument. 4. Modern Composition Deed. The last form of composition by deed and the one of latest origin, but on account of its efficacy and simplicity now employed more frequently than any other, is what for the sake of distinction may be called a modern composition deed, by which the debtor, or someone in his behalf, agrees to pay to each creditor who accepts the deed a fixed sum, or a certain percentage or proportion of the debts due him, either at once or at a specified future time, either in a lump or in instalments, and either with or without security for the performance of the agreement, on condition that the creditors will accept what is thus offered them as in satisfaction of their entire claims; while the creditors, in consideration of the performance of the debtor's undertaking, agree to accept the composition and to relieve the debtor from all further liability to them, either absolutely, or upon performance.[69] The instrument need not provide for a present executed composition, but may be merely an executory agreement to enter into a composition in the future.[70]

C. Parol and Oral Compositions — 1. Parol Composition. Before it was established that a composition agreement carries its consideration in itself so far as the creditors are concerned, and therefore forms an apparent exception to the general rule that acceptance of part of a debt is no satisfaction of the whole, without a new consideration, it was held that a composition must be under seal so as to import the necessary consideration, and that a parol composition was not binding.[71] But it is now well settled that a parol composition is valid and binding equally with one under seal, when the debts compounded are simple contract debts, and also wherever the distinction between simple contracts and specialties has been abolished.[72] It has been doubted, however, whether a composition of a not obtain a discharge, and in the latter an agreement that the debtor should assign to creditors, and that the trustee should dispose of the property assigned as directed. In the latter case also the extension of time was embodied in the composition.

Without a seal or a new consideration a letter of license is merely an extension of time and cannot bind the creditors. Pitts Sons' Mfg. Co. v. Commercial Nat. Bank, 121 Ill. 582, 13 N. E. 156; Henry v. Patterson, 57 Pa. St. 346; Whitmore v. Turquand, 3 De G. F. & J. 107, 7 Jur. N. S. 377, 30 L. J. Ch. 345, 4 L. T. Rep. N. S. 38, 9 Wkly. Rep. 488, 64 Eng. Unless it provides for a release or a discharge of the debtor a letter of license cannot by itself constitute a composition. O'Brien v. Osborne, 10 Hare 92, 16 Jur. 960, 44 Eng. Ch. 92. Hence it is usually made with and as an adjunct to a deed of composition. Gibbons v. Vouillon, 8 C. B. 483, 7 D. & L. 266, 14 Jur. 66, 19 L. J. C. P. 74, 65 E. C. L. 483.

A letter of license which does not refer to a composition deed is not equivalent to an assent to the deed. Whitmore v. Turquand, 3 De G. F. & J. 107, 7 Jur. N. S. 377, 30 L. J. Ch. 345, 4 L. T. Rep. N. S. 38, 9 Wkly. Rep. 488, 64 Eng. Ch. 84.

Ala. Civ. Code (1896), p. 1806, provides that "all settlements in writing, made in good specialty, where the distinction is preserved, should not be under seal.[73] But it would seem clear that there is no good reason for requiring a seal to a composition of such debts, since a composition is binding even when not operative as a release.[74]

2. Oral Composition. Unless it is otherwise provided by statute, an oral composition is valid whenever a parol composition would be;[75] but in cases that fall within the statute of frauds the composition must be in writing; for example, where a third person without any interest undertakes to pay the composition or secure its payment,[76] or when the composition concerns an interest in lands[77] or falls within any other clause of the statute.[78]

78. Brunskill v. Metcalf, 2 U. C. C. P. 431.

Reasons for rule.— In Brunskill v. Metcalf, 3 U. C. C. P. 143, 153, on a motion for a new trial, Macaulay, C. J., said: "If the property to be assigned is such that an executory agreement in respect thereof is by the Statute of Frauds required to be in writing, and signed by the party to be charged therewith, I find no authority for treating composition agreements as differing, or upon any other footing than other agreements for the sale and purchase of such property as respected mere choses in action or contracts that in law cannot be assigned so as to substitute the vendee in the place of the vendor — as in building contracts — however such an assignment or an agreement therefor may in law constitute a valid consideration for anything undertaken and agreed to be done by the other party. Still, if the subject is an interest in real estate, or goods exceeding 10*l.* in value, or for something not to be performed within a year, it seems essential to be proved by a written note or memorandum when set up and relied upon in support of an action, or by plea, as a good subsisting agreement against an action.— In Alchin v. Hopkins, 1 Bing. N. Cas. 102, 3 L. J. C. P. 272, 4 Moore & S. 615, 27 E. C. L. 561, Tindal, C. J. (speaking of the agreement in that case), said 'it appeared that it was never signed by the defendant. In case therefore the creditors should sue upon it they would be met by the preliminary objection that a contract for the profits of a living, &c., was for an interest in, or concerning lands, &c., and that no action would lie upon it as it had not been signed by the defendant, or by any person by him thereunto lawfully authorized'— wherefore he held the proof insufficient: 'for,' he said, 'the principle on which such an agreement is held to operate as an answer to an action by a creditor who has come into it, is, that there has been a substitution of a new agreement by mutual consent, and on good consideration, in the stead or place of the old contract, which was the point established by the case of Good v. Cheeseman. The new or substituted agreement must therefore of necessity be one which is legal and valid, &c.'— In Emmet v. Dewhurst, 15 Jur. 1115, 21 L. J. Ch. 497, 3 Macn. & G. 587, 49 Eng. Ch. 453, Lord Chancellor (Truro) held the agreement within the Statute of Frauds, and that it must be in writing; and see also, Laythorpe v. Bryant, 2 Bing. N. Cas. 735, 2 Hodges 25, 5 L. J. C. P. 217, 3 Scott 238, 29 E. C. L. 735; Barber v. Fox, 2 Saund. 136." But in Anstey v. Marden, 1 B. & P. N. R. 124, 2 Smith K. B. 426, 18 Rev. Rep. 713, the defendant, being sued by the plaintiff for a debt, defended on the ground, that previously, when he was insolvent, a verbal agreement was entered into between several of his creditors and one Thomas Weston, whereby Weston agreed to pay the creditors ten shillings in the pound in satisfaction of their debts, which they agreed to accept, and to assign their debts to Weston. It was held

V. PARTIES.

A. The Debtor. When the debtor compounds personally with his creditors he is of course a necessary party,[79] although he is not required to execute the composition agreement, but may become a party by simply accepting the composition and acting under it;[80] and when the composition is entered into by a third party on the debtor's behalf, as is allowable,[81] the debtor himself need not become a party at all.

B. The Creditors — 1. What Creditors Must Join — a. In General. It is not necessary to its validity that all or even the greater part of the creditors should join in a composition, unless there is a requirement to that effect in the agreement, either by express stipulation or by necessary implication;[82] and in the absence of such a requirement if any two or more of the creditors join the composition will be valid and binding upon them and the debtor.[83] that this agreement was binding, and not within the statute of frauds, since it was not a collateral promise to pay the debt of another, but an original contract to purchase the debts; and that the plaintiff could not recover.

In some of the cases there are expressions that would seem to indicate that all or at least the majority of the creditors should enter into a composition; but these expressions are either mere dicta, or have since been overruled. See Lanes v. Squyres, 45 Tex. 382; Reay v. Richardson, 2 C. M. & R. 422, 1 Gale 219, 4 L. J. Exch. 236, 5 Tyrw. 931.

When all creditors holding claims over one hundred dollars are to sign, and any such creditor does not, those who have signed can sue for their original claims. Raudenbush v. Bushong, 43 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 366.

A composition "not to be binding unless signed by all the unsecured creditors" will not bar an action by a creditor who has signed, unless signed by all the unsecured creditors. Walker v. Mayo, 143 Mass. 42, 8 N. E. 873.

When all are to sign except certain named lienholders, it must be shown that all signed who were required to, or the composition will not be binding; and the fact that the agreement recites that the subscribers have little prospect of realizing anything on their claims and that the composition is made in order to secure something thereon out of the debtor's property, will not justify the importation into it, by construction contrary to its express language, of an intention that other secured creditors than those named shall not be required to sign. Artman v. Truby, 130 Pa. St. 619, 18 Atl. 1065.

Effect on third parties.— The makers and indorsers of the composition notes will not be liable thereon, unless the required number of creditors sign the composition. Doughty v. Savage, 28 Conn. 146; Falconbury v. Kendall, 76 Ind. 260; Enderby v. Corder, 2 C. & P. 203, 12 E. C. L. 528. And when it is agreed that a surety shall not be bound unless all the creditors execute the composition deed, and the deed is delivered to one creditor to get the signatures of the rest, but all do not sign, the surety will not be bound. Johnson v. Baker, 4 B. & Ald. 440, 23 Rev. Rep. 338, 6 E. C. L. 551.

What will not excuse breach of condition.— When a composition is not to be binding unless all the creditors become parties it will not bind if one does not sign, although that one is paid in full within the time allowed for signing (Turner v. Comer, 6 Gray (Mass.) 530; Durgin v. Ireland, 14 N. Y. 322; Spooner v. Whiston, 8 Moore C. P. 580, 17 E. C. c. Construction of Stipulation as to Joining. A requirement that a certain number of the creditors shall join will be construed strictly as against the creditors and will not be extended to cases beyond its letter,[86] or be held to apply to

Cas. No. 7,831, 14 Int. Rev. Rec. 94, 5 West. Jur. 448. And see Enderby v. Corder, 2 C. & P. 203, 12 E. C. L. 528, where the debtor was a bankrupt at the time of the composition.

When breach will be ignored.— But on the principle of de minimis, when all were required to sign, and one creditor who had a debt of two dollars and fifty cents only did not, it was held that the others could not take advantage of the omission. Fahey v. Clarke, 80 Ky. 613. And in Bean v. Brookmire, 2 Dill. (U. S.) 108, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 1,170, 2 Am. L. Rec. 222, 6 Am. L. T. Rep. 418, 5 Chic. Leg. N. 314, 7 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 568, 7 West. Jur. 324, where the deed was not to be binding unless all the creditors signed, and over ninety-eight per cent in value signed, it was held that the failure of the others to sign would not prevent the recovery of a fraudulent preference given to one of the creditors, it appearing that the greater part of the creditors believed that all had signed in good faith.

Waiver of condition.— A condition that all must join may be waived by the creditors. See also infra, V, B, 1, d; VII, C.

86. See cases cited infra, this note.

What amounts to a requirement that all must join.— The following have been construed as requiring all the creditors to join: "If the creditors of the said church would release their claims against the said church, the plaintiffs would release their claim." Shenandoah M. E. Church v. Robbins, 81 Pa. St. 361, 362, 2 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 592. "In consideration of the payment in cash to us by Albert Wunderlich within twenty days from this date of the sum of $383.80, being 50 per cent. of his entire indebtedness to us, and in consideration of other creditors accepting a like percentage of their respective claims and demands against him in full settlement and compromise thereof, we hereby agree to accept such percentage of our said claims and demands against him in full settlement and compromise thereof." M. A. Seed Dry-Plate Co. v. Wunderlich, 69 Minn. 288, 289, 72 N. W. 122. "In consideration that Milford G. Falconbury will agree to pay us, the creditors of Sylvester Kendall, fifty cents on the dollar of our claims against said Kendall, within twelve months from this date, with ten per cent. from date, and secure the same by a mortgage on the house and lot of said Kendall, in Greensburg, made by said Kendall and wife, the notes to be signed by said Falconbury, we agree to release said Kendall from all further liability on said indebtedness. Upon all the creditors of said Kendall signing this paper, said Falconbury is to execute his notes to said creditors as above specified, and said mortgage to be executed March 2d, 1876." Falconbury v. Kendall, 76 Ind. 260, 261. "We, the undersigned depositors and creditors of the Allemannia Bank of St. Paul, for the purpose of effecting a reopening of said bank, hereby agree with said bank, and with each other, that we will accept in payment of the amounts due us from said bank, which are respectively set opposite our names hereinafter, certificates of deposit of said bank, or its successor in case of a reorganization, payable in five annual instalments of twenty per cent. each, to bear interest at two per cent. per annum, and to be dated on the day of the reopening of said bank." Abel v. Allemannia Bank, 79 Minn. 419, 421, 82 N. W. 680. In Chase v. Bailey, 49 Vt. 71, an action of assumpsit for money paid, etc., the defendants, who were insolvent, and had been trying to compound with their creditors, and whose property had been attached at the suit of one of their creditors, introduced in evidence in bar of plaintiff's claim, a written instrument signed by plaintiff and others, but not all of their creditors, hy the attaching creditor, and by the defendants themselves, whereby it was agreed that "the creditors of" the defendants should "accept their pro rata parts of the sum of twelve hundred dollars in full satisfaction of their respective claims," that their several dividends should be ascertained by ascertaining defendants' entire unsecured indebtedness, and dividing said sum pro rata upon such indebtedness, paying to each creditor such a part of such sum as his debt was of such entire indebtedness, and that the defendants and the attaching creditor should pay to each creditor his part of said sum upon demand, after execution of said instrument, and after proof of, or agreement upon, the sum due. It was held that this instrument required that all the creditors should become parties, and that as it was not executed by all, it was not binding upon the plaintiff.

What is a sufficient signing.— Acceptance of a composition or security satisfies a requirement that all creditors shall "sign." Jolly v. Wallis, 3 Esp. 228. In Chittenden v. Woodbury, 52 Vt. 562, hy a deed of composition an insolvent dehtor covenanted to pay his creditors a certain percentage on their respective claims, provided all creditors "came into the arrangement"; and the creditors severally agreed that if he would do so they would discharge their several claims. Certain of the creditors of a solvent firm of which the dehtor was a member did not sign the deed. It was held that the contract did not require such creditors to sign; and that the provision of the contract requiring all creditors to sign was a condition of the debtor's and not of the creditors' covenant. In Richardson v. Pierce, 119 Mass. 165, one Rindge, a creditor of the debtor Pierce, holding a promissory note of which Pierce was the maker and one others than the parties for whose benefit it is made.[87] And it must be expressed or implied clearly and unequivocally, for in the absence of a specific provision to the contrary it is but fair to infer that the agreement was intended to be binding on as many as might enter into it, without regard to the action of others.[88]

d. Waiver of Condition as to Joining. A requirement that a certain number of creditors must join may be waived by the others, and the agreement will then be binding upon them;[89] but the proof of such a waiver must be clear.[90]

2. Who May Avail Themselves of the Composition. When a composition is not in terms limited to any particular class of creditors, any creditor may avail himself of its provisions, whether he signs the agreement or not;[91] but if it be limited to a certain class (for example, to unsecured creditors, or to those who shall sign, or the like), then only those who are within the class specified can claim its benefit.[92] Furthermore, a creditor who acts inconsistently with or Lochman the indorser, signed a composition deed by which the creditors of Pierce released all claims against him, the deed to be null and void unless signed by all his creditors, and wrote after his name the words, "provided this does not release the indorser in any manner." In an action against Pierce by another creditor, who had signed the deed, Lochman's name did not appear among the signers of the deed; but it was agreed that if the signing by Rindge did not release the indorser, then all the creditors had signed. It was held that the composition deed was a bar to the action, as the condition annexed by Rindge to his signature was equivalent to a reservation of his rights against Lochman, and therefore did not release the latter. In Towne v. Rublee, 51 Vt. 62, Alwin A. Mead, one of the creditors, refused to sign the composition, whereupon one Amanda C. Clark purchased his claim and signed the contract. All other creditors signed. After all had signed the plaintiff learned of the refusal of Mead to sign and of the subsequent purchase of his claim and signing by Clark, and thereupon notified the debtor that he considered himself not bound by the contract, and would not abide by it and subsequently brought suit. It was held that the suit was prematurely brought; that the agreement became binding so far as the condition was concerned when it was so executed that all the debts were bound, as it was when Clark and the other creditors signed; and that plaintiff's notice that he would not abide by the contract availed him nothing.

Rule applied.— The expressions, "we, the subscribers, creditors," etc., and "we, the undersigned, creditors," etc., do not imply that all the creditors must sign. Lambert v. Shetler, 71 Iowa 463, 32 N. W. 424; Renard v. Tuller, 4 Bosw. (N. Y.) 107; Laird v. Campbell, 92 Pa. St. 470. A recital in a composition deed, "whereas, C. G. Hayes & Son, bankers, are indebted to the undersigned, their several creditors, in divers amounts, but by reason of sundry losses and disappointments are unable to pay and satisfy our demands in full," was held not to imply that the composition was not to become binding until all the creditors had signed it, the words, "their several creditors," not being synonymous with "all their creditors." Strickland v. Harger, 16 Hun (N. Y.) 465 [affirmed in 81 N. Y. 623]. A clause in a composition deed, "we, who have hereunto subscribed our names and affixed our seals, creditors of David H. Koehler and Burnard Kepfur, comprising the firm of Koehler & Kepfur, "limits the effect of the instrument to those persons who should become parties to it, and does not render it indispensable to its validity that all the creditors should execute the paper." Continental Nat. Bank v. Koehler, 4 N. Y. St. 482. In Carey v. Barrett, 4 C. P. D. 379, 380, at a meeting of the defendant's creditors, the following agreement was made and signed by all the creditors present: "We the undersigned creditors of William Barrett, of Tunbridge Wells, coal-merchant and builder, in consideration of 10*s.* in the pound on our respective debts set opposite to our respective names, hereby agree to accept the same in discharge of our said debts, on the understanding that no concealment or fraud has been practised by the said William Barrett, the whole of the creditors receiving not exceeding a like sum in discharge of their debts." This agreement was held to be limited to the creditors signing it.

3. When Creditors May Come In — a. In General. The right of a creditor to come in under the composition and share in its benefits, after it has been agreed upon between the debtor and others, depends somewhat on the nature of the composition.[94]

b. Effect of Limitation of Time For Joining — (1) In General. It is competent to provide in the composition agreement that only those who come in or sign within a limited time shall enjoy its benefits,[95] if the time thus limited is reasonable under the circumstances;[96] and while such a provision, if it does not

In Drever v. Mawdesley, 13 Jur. 330, 18 L. J. Ch. 273, 16 Sim. 511, 39 Eng. Ch. 511, a debtor and his father, in pursuance of an arrangement between themselves, conveyed estates of which they were seized for life and in remainder respectively, to trustees, in trust to sell for the payment of the debtor's debts; but no creditor was to be entitled to the benefit of the trust unless the trustees, after having investigated and allowed his debt, should give him a debenture for it. The trustees gave debentures to three of the creditors, after which one of the trustees instituted a suit against his co-trustees, etc., on the hearing of which the master was directed to take an account of "all" the debtor's debts due at the date of the conveyance, and to advertise for his creditors to prove their debts by a day to be named or be excluded from the benefit of the decree. The plaintiff and several other creditors of the debtor proved their debts under the decree, but the court, nevertheless, on a hearing for further directions, held that none of them except the plaintiff and the debenture creditors were entitled to the benefit of the trust.

Encumbrancers who claim priority over a deed of composition and fail in their contention will not be allowed subsequently to execute the deed and share in its benefits. In re Meredith, 29 Ch. D. 745.

But the mere bringing of an action to test the validity of the deed will not forfeit rights accruing under it. Latter v. White, L. R. 5 H. L. 578, 41 L. J. Q. B. 342 [affirming 25 L. T. Rep. N. S. 658, 19 Wkly. Rep. 1149].

94. If it contains an assignment for the benefit of creditors a creditor may come in at any time before an account is settled, although he cannot disturb a dividend already made. Field v. Cook, 23 Beav. 600; Broadbent v. Thornton, 4 De G. & Sm. 65. One who executes a deed of composition after the time set for payment adopts it except as to time, and the debtor will be liable to pay on demand. Harvey v. Hunt, 119 Mass. 279; Bowen v. Holley, 38 Vt. 574. But a creditor who had notice of the deed shortly after it was executed by others and did not himself execute it cannot come in seven years after the death of the debtor, because the debtor cannot have the benefit of the consideration. Lane v. Husband, 9 Jur. 1001, 14 Sim. 656, 37 Eng. Ch. 656. And where the composition is for the payment of a fixed sum or specified instalments it would seem reasonable that a creditor who has not previously assented should not be allowed to come in after the time set for payment of the composition, or of the first instalment thereof, or at least a reasonable time thereafter, especially when the composition is paid by a third person; although of course as it is to the debtor's interest to compound with all, this question is not likely to be often raised. See infra, V, B, 3, b.

96. Broadbent v. Thornton, 4 De G. & Sm. 65. In Raworth v. Parker, 2 Kay & J. 163, 25 L. J. Ch. 117, 4 Wkly. Rep. 273, a composition deed contained a proviso that such creditors as should not execute or assent in writing to the deed on or before a certain day, or within such further time, not exceeding thirty days, as the trustees should appoint, should be excluded from the benefit of the deed. The trustees issued an advertisement, which stated their power of extending the time for execution. The debtor owed his son a large sum of money. The son was in America at the date of the deed. A solicitor who had acted for him when in England, wrote to the trustees on his behalf, on the last day for execution, signifying his assent contain words of exclusion, will not necessarily prevent a creditor from coming in after the expiration of the time set,[97] yet if it is exclusive either by express language or by necessary implication, it will debar any from coming in after the time limited has expired,[98] unless there are equitable grounds for relief, such as fraud, accident, or mistake, in which case a court of equity upon proper application will grant leave to come in.[99]

(II) ACTUAL EXECUTION WITHIN TIME LIMITED NOT ESSENTIAL. It is not necessary, however, that the creditors should actually execute the composition agreement within the time limited for joining; it will be sufficient if they assent to it and act under it.[1]

C. Third Parties — 1. IN GENERAL. A composition agreement may be effected by a third party in behalf of the debtor, either as his agent or independently,[2] and a partner may compound debts due to his firm[3] or he may compound to the deed. Subsequently he received from the son a power of attorney to execute the deed, and before the end of the period for which the trustees might have enlarged the time for execution, he applied to them to permit him to execute on behalf of the son. It was held that the son was entitled under these circumstances to the benefit of the deed, because it was the duty of the trustees to enlarge the time, so as to allow his attorney to execute the deed.

It was held that a mortgagee of part of the property, whose solicitor corresponded with the trustees on the subject of the mortgage, but who did not express any intention to come in under the deed for some years afterward, was not entitled to the benefit of the trust.

A clerk, authorized to represent a creditor at a creditors' meeting "in the most favorable manner," is authorized at such a meeting to act upon or to make in behalf of his principal, every proposition made in the course of that evening, tending to a fair and just composition; and can agree to an extension of time to make the necessary investigation of the debtor's affairs. Gardner v. Lewis, 7 Gill (Md.) 377.

Extent of authority.— When an agent is authorized to represent a creditor, and his principal assures the other parties that whatever the agent does will be satisfactory, the agent may not only grant an extension of time, but may bind his principal by a clause in the agreement prescribing a penalty for a breach by the creditors. Hill v. Wertheimer-Swarts Shoe Co., 150 Mo. 483, 51 S. W. 702.

The same party cannot be agent of both debtor and creditor in making a composition; but when the composition has been agreed upon between the creditor and an agent of the debtor, the latter may then become the agent of the creditor for another and distinct purpose; for example, the creditor may direct the agent to receive the composition money for him, and in that case delivery to the agent will bind the creditor. Hinckley v. Arey, 27 Me. 362.

The debtor is responsible for the acts of his agent, and hence will be responsible for the false representations or concealments of the latter, if he (the debtor) was aware of the real state of the facts at the time, although those representations were innocently made, and without the knowledge of the debtor; for the knowledge of the agent is the knowledge of the principal. Elfelt v. Snow, 2 Sawy. (U. S.) 94, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,342, 6 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 57.

The knowledge of the agent is the knowledge of his principal; and consequently the payment by an agent employed to effect a compromise of an additional sum to induce a creditor to enter the composition, not disclosed to the others, will invalidate the composition. The directors of a corporation may compromise and release a claim of the corporation, especially when that authority is conferred upon them by the articles of association. In re Melbourne Locomotive & Engineering Works, Ltd., 21 Vict. L. R. 442.

When the president of a bank subscribes a composition agreement at its office with the apparent approval of one of its directors, and the bank receives the composition notes and endeavors to collect them, it sanctions the acts of its officers in obtaining the notes, and an objection to the authority of the president to sign the composition is untenable. Continental Nat. Bank v. Koehler, 4 N. Y. St. 482.

Act of cashier.— In Chemical Nat. Bank v. Kohner, 85 N. Y. 189 [reversing 8 Daly (N. Y.) 530, 58 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 267], a debtor proposed to compound with the plaintiff bank and two other banks, and the other banks agreed to compound if plaintiff would. The debtor proposed to the cashier of the plaintiff bank to secure its claim by a note with one Goldsmith as indorser. The cashier consulted with plaintiff's president, and at the request of the debtor's agent wrote to one of the other banks on paper with the bank heading, signing as cashier, that plaintiff proposed to take the debtor's note, indorsed as above, and to discharge the debtor in full on payment thereof. The plaintiff subsequently repudiated this agreement; but before the debtor learned of the repudiation he had settled with the other banks and been discharged. It did not appear that he owed any other debts. He afterward tendered a certified check for the agreed amount which was refused. The president and cashier were the active managers of the plaintiff bank; must be clear;[8] and a composition made by an agent without authority or in excess of his authority will not be binding.[9]

3. Personal Representatives. An executor or administrator may compound the debts or claims of his decedent.[10]

VI. Construction.

A. In General — Strict Construction. A composition agreement should be strictly construed,[11] and should not receive an interpretation more comprehensive than the reasonable import of the language used will warrant;[12] but language other than technical terms should be construed in its popular sense.[13] The agree-the composition was not repudiated on the ground of want of authority in the cashier; and there was no evidence that he acted without authority. Compromises were of common occurrence in that bank. It was held that the plaintiff was bound by the agreement and could not recover the original indebtedness.

8. Vineberg v. Beaulieu, 4 Montreal Super. Ct. 328, holding that the mere fact of attendance at a meeting of creditors will not clothe a clerk with authority to assent to a composition on behalf of his master.

A deed of composition, signed by a mandatory without any authority to accept a composition is not binding on his principal. Bolt, etc., Co. v. Gougeon, 7 Montreal Leg. N. 40.

Absence of authority.— An agreement for a composition by the creditors of an insolvent bank, which upon its face implies coöperation of all to whom it is indebted, will not authorize the person to whom it is delivered to effect such composition to consent to any settlement not concurred in by all the creditors of such bank. Abel v. Allemannia Bank, 79 Minn. 419, 82 N. W. 680.

Estoppel and ratification.— In Lawrence v. Anderson, 17 Can. Supreme Ct. 349, 351, the defendant pleaded a release by deed. On the trial it was proved that the defendant had executed an assignment for the benefit of creditors, and received authority by telegram to sign the same for the plaintiff, who was one of his creditors. The deed was dated Oct. 8, 1881, and afterward, with knowledge of it, the plaintiff continued to send goods to the defendant, and on Nov. 5, 1881, he wrote to the defendant as follows: "I have done as you desired by telegraphing you to sign deed for me and I feel confident that you will see that I am protected and not lose one cent by you. After you get matters adjusted I would like you to send me a check for $800." In April, 1885, the defendant wrote a letter to the plaintiff, in which he said: "In one year more I will try again for myself and hope to pay you in full." In November, 1886, the account sued upon was stated. It was held that the execution of the deed on his behalf being made without sufficient authority, the plaintiff was not bound by the release contained therein; and as he had never subsequently assented to the deed or recognized or acted under it he was not estopped from denying that he had executed it. But when a composition is procured by an unauthorized representation by an agent, the debtor cannot adopt its benefits without at the same time being bound by the representations; and therefore an unauthorized representation by an agent that the composition will not be binding unless all sign will render the composition void, if all do not sign, as to a creditor who signed on the faith of that representation. Mere assent to a composition without defining its terms will not bind the assenting creditor to accept a composition by which the original claim is novated and discharged. Vineberg v. Beaulieu, 4 Montreal Super. Ct. 328.

"All borrowed money."— In Register v. Spencer, 24 Md. 520, a deed of composition contained a provision for the payment of "all borrowed money and accommodation notes," etc. It was held that the words "all borrowed money," include in ordinary popular sense all sums of money loaned by a creditor to a debtor, without regard to the mode, or the existence of any security or evidence of indebtedness; and there being nothing in the context to limit the meaning of the words, it was incumbent on the party who objected to the above interpretation to establish by clear and satisfactory proof that the terms used had acquired and were used in a technical or peculiar sense.

13. See, generally, Contracts.

"Creditors" will generally be construed to mean secured as well as unsecured creditors. M. A. Seed Dry-Plate Co. v. Wunderlich, 69 Minn. 288, 72 N. W. 122; Cobleigh v. Pierce, 32 Vt. 788; Kinsing v. Bartholew, 1 Dill. (U. S.) 156, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,831, 14 Int. Rev. Rec. 94, 5 West. Jur. 448. The fact

ment should be limited in its effect to such matters as were within the contemplation of the parties[14] and should be construed in the light of the financial condition of the debtor at the time it was executed.[15]

B. Construction as a Whole — Intention of Parties. A composition agreement should be construed as a whole, and so that full effect may be given to all its parts, and inconsistencies be avoided;[16] and although the construction will be varied to meet the intention of the parties, this intention must be collected from the instrument itself and not from matters dehors the writing;[17] and consequently parol evidence is not admissible as a general rule to explain or contradict a written composition.[18]

C. Effect of Particular Recitals on General Terms. General words in the agreement may be restrained by a particular clause or recital;[19] but a mere that the agreement recites that the subscribers have little prospect of realizing anything on their claims, and that the composition is made in order to secure something thereon out of the debtor's property, will not justify a construction, contrary to its express language, that secured creditors shall not be required to sign. Artman v. Truby, 130 Pa. St. 619, 25 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 63, 18 Atl. 1065.

But "general creditors" was construed to mean unsecured creditors only, in Noyes v. Chapman-Drake Co., 60 Minn. 88, 61 N. W. 901.

14. Lipman v. Lowitz, 78 Ill. 252. In In re Hollister, 3 Fed. 452, a composition agreement contained a provision that upon any debts or claims which the bankrupt should pay thereunder, for which he was merely surety, he should "have the right to collect and receive, towards helping me [the bankrupt] to meet and comply with the above proposition [of composition], from my principal or his estate, for remuneration therefor, or a proper pro rata therefrom, for what may be paid as aforesaid on such debt or claim." This proposition was accepted by a creditor for whom the bankrupt was surety, the principal being in bankruptcy at the same time. It was held that the composition agreement gave the surety a contract right to prove the payment thereunder as a debt against the principal's estate, upon which he was entitled to a pro rata dividend; and that the creditor must credit the debt with such payment, and prove only for the balance.

A release in the deed of composition will be construed as a release of the balance only, where the debtor and a creditor are mutually indebted to each other. Fazakerly v. McKnight, 6 E. & B. 795, 2 Jur. N. S. 1020, 26 L. J. Q. B. 30, 4 Wkly. Rep. 677, 88 E. C. L. 795.

Absolute release.— When a composition contains an absolute release for a consideration then paid, a creditor cannot show by parol evidence that it was not intended to include a certain debt in the composition, and that the debt was in fact not included (Meyer v. McKee, 19 Ill. App. 109; Van Brunt v. Van Brunt, 3 Edw. (N. Y.) 14); nor that it was intended to include an omitted debt (Rice v. Woods, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 30).

Discussions among the creditors and their impressions about the claim of one of them before accepting the deed, and afterward, cannot be allowed to control its interpretation and construction, in the absence of all charges of fraud in procuring its execution. Register v. Spencer, 24 Md. 520.

"Conditional release."—But when a release, although absolute in its terms, is entitled "conditional release," parol evidence is admissible to show an express condition that all releases to be executed should be binding only in the event that all the creditors should come into the composition. Tutt v. Price, 7 Mo. App. 194.

Parol evidence, when admissible.—In Hartford, etc., Transp. Co. v. Hartford First Nat. Bank, 46 Conn. 569, it was held that parol evidence was admissible to show that the amount for which the creditor signed the composition was that of his unsecured claims, and that the agreement was not intended to apply to another secured claim.

When the deed refers to a schedule a gen-statement of the indebtedness due to a creditor will not necessarily limit the effect of the composition to the debts specified.[20]

VII. PERFORMANCE AND BREACH.

A. Performance in General. A composition must be performed strictly and punctually, and any infraction of its provisions by one party will release the others from its obligation, in so far as that party is concerned.[21] All conditions eral release may be held to refer to scheduled debts only. Averill v. Lyman, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 346.

An attachment by one creditor of the goods of the debtor is a breach of the composition, and a fraudulent disposition of property, or an intended fraudulent conveyance, will release the creditors from the obligation of a composition. Hill v. Wertheimer-Swarts Shoe Co., 150 Mo. 483, 51 S. W. 702. A voluntary payment of one of the creditors in full will constitute a breach by the debtor. What will not excuse default.— When a debtor, in compounding with his creditors, gives them the security of a third person for the last three instalments he will not be discharged on payment of these instalments only if the first instalment remains unpaid. Walker v. Seaborne, 1 Taunt. 526. Absence from the country will excuse payment on tender only when the creditor leaves after the composition. Fessard v. Mugnier, 18 C. B. N. S. 286, 11 Jur. N. S. 283, 34 L. J. C. P. 126, 11 L. T. Rep. N. S. 635, 13 Wkly. Rep. 388, 114 E. C. L. 286. And the fact that the debtor did not obtain the signature of the last creditor to the composition deed until after the time fixed for payment will not relieve him from his default, if the operation of the instrument is not dependent on that circumstance. Vogt v. Fasola, 41 N. Y. App. Div. 467, 58 N. Y. Suppl. 982.

When default will not avoid composition.— The non-payment of an instalment due will not vitiate a release given by a creditor who by a secret arrangement with the debtor has already received more than the whole amount of the composition. Ex p. Oliver, 4 De G. & Sm. 354. A failure by mistake to pay an instalment due will not avoid a release if the instalment be paid or tendered seasonably. Newington v. Levy, L. R. 6 C. P. 180, 40 L. J. C. P. 29, 23 L. T. Rep. N. S. 594, 19 Wkly. Rep. 473.

When time for performance begins to run. — When a composition deed which provides for the acceptance by the creditors of twenty-five per cent of their claims, payment to be made within two months from the date of the instrument, is dated the —— day of August, 1898, the two months mentioned in the deed do not begin to run until the end of August. Vogt v. Fasola, 41 N. Y. App. Div. 467, 58 N. Y. Suppl. 982.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Compositions with Creditors," § 73½.

Extent of rule.— When it is agreed by a composition that the creditors shall accept notes indorsed by A, and A dies before the notes are executed, the creditors cannot be compelled to accept any other notes and the composition fails. Danzig v. Gumersell, 27 Fed. 185. But when the composition does not bind the debtor to deliver the composition notes to any one by name, and there is no proof that he had notice that the plaintiff was a creditor, the plaintiff cannot claim that the debtor is in default by reason of failure to deliver the notes, until he has made demand for them. Matthewson v. Henderson, 13 U. C. C. P. 96.

25. Dolsen v. Arnold, 10 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 528. In the absence of an express stipulation composition bills and notes are not payments until paid. Pupke v. Churchill, 16 Mo. App. 334 [affirmed in 91 Mo. 81, 3 S. W. 829]. In Constable v. Andrew, 2 Cr. & M. 298, 303, 4 Tyrw. 206, the defendant agreed to pay a composition of fifteen shillings in the pound, by two instalments; and a surety, in consideration that the creditors would discharge the defendant from all debts and demands on receiving such composition, agreed to pay a sum of money in part payment of the first instalment and to accept a bill of exchange drawn by the defendant in part payment of the second, the creditors agreeing "to discharge and exonerate Andrew, on payment of the said 15s. in the pound." It was also agreed that several bills of exchange, the amount of which was equal to the residue of the sum payable on the composition, which had been before indorsed by the defendant, and handed over to the plaintiffs, "shall be considered as in part payment of the said 15s. in the pound." It was held that the bills left in the hands of the plaintiffs were not under this agreement to be considered as an absolute payment, unless they were paid at maturity, and, one of them having been dishonored, that the defendant remained liable upon his indorsement.

26. Salomonson v. Blyth, 3 L. J. Ch. O. S. 169; Soward v. Palmer, 2 Moore C. P. 274, 8 Taunt. 277, 19 Rev. Rep. 515, 4 E. C. L. 144.

A mere notice from the makers that the notes will not be paid will not excuse the holders from demanding payment, at the place where the notes are made payable; and if the makers of the notes place the money in the bank to pay them the failure to pay does not occur, and the original debt is not revived

tion;[27] and where no time is set for performance the debtor will be allowed a reasonable time.[28]

B. Tender. Actual payment or performance of the composition is not essential, if the creditor refuses to accept it; a proper tender of payment or performance is all that is required, and the creditor refuses it at his peril.[29] But a tender notwithstanding such notice. Green v. McArthur, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 450.

When the terms of the composition require the creditors to apply for the composition notes they cannot claim a breach unless they do so apply. Solomon v. Laverick, 17 L. T. Rep. N. S. 545.

27. Clarke v. White, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 178, 9 L. ed. 1046 [affirming 5 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 102, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,540].

Applications of rule.— In Fahey v. Clarke, 80 Ky. 613, where all the creditors were required to join in the composition, and one creditor, who had a debt of two dollars and fifty cents only, did not join, it was held that the others could not take advantage of the omission. When the composition was to be effected by giving notes payable in thirty days, and subsequently the debtor agreed to pay in cash within the thirty days, and the other creditors agreed, the plaintiff was held to be bound also. Eisenhart v. Lynn, 29 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 113. A tender of a note on January 1, for the right amounts, at seven, ten, and thirteen months, is a sufficient tender of notes to be given February 1, at six, nine, and twelve months. Renard v. Tuller, 4 Bosw. (N. Y.) 107. When the composition was for notes to be given in ten days, at three, six, and nine months, and none were given, but the full amount of the composition was tendered after the ten days, but before suit, and the money was deposited in court, judgment was given for the defendant in an action for breach of the composition. Thurston v. Viau, 32 L. C. Jur. 244. In Mackenzie v. Mackenzie, 16 Ves. Jr. 372, where the composition notes were not paid when due, or until suit had been brought, it was held inequitable to the other creditors to allow the creditor to recover more than the amount of the composition. The fact that the assignee, instead of the assignor, pays dividends, under a composition by which the assignor was to carry on the business, will not vitiate the composition, where the assignee carries on the business with the aid of the assignor, and the dividends are really paid out of the fund intended. Matter of Leslie, 10 Daly (N. Y.) 76. In Geisse v. Franklin, 56 Conn. 83, 13 Atl. 148, an action on an account, the defendant and other creditors of the plaintiff had agreed to receive sixty per cent of their claims in full payment thereof, if paid by a certain time. Within that time the defendant, as trustee and agent of the plaintiff, had possession of funds of the plaintiff sufficient to pay all the claims. It was held that the defendant was bound by the agreement, although his claim was not discharged until after the time agreed upon. See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Compositions with Creditors," § 69.

28. Chapman v. Dennison Paper Mfg. Co., 77 Me. 205; Oughton v. Trotter, 2 L. J. K. B. 185, 2 N. & M. 71, 28 E. C. L. 566.

Illustrations.— When a composition provides that notes shall be given for equal amounts at six, nine, and twelve months from January 1, they need not be delivered or tendered January 1, but if no demand is made may be given within a reasonable time thereafter. Hall v. Merrill, 5 Bosw. (N. Y.) 266, 18 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 38. In Harvier v. Guion, 3 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 76, a composition was on condition that three fourths of the creditors should sign, but no time was limited for obtaining their signatures. The plaintiff covenanted that if the instalments of the composition were paid as due they would not sue until the expiration of the time limited for payment, and the instrument contained an absolute discharge until then of all suits commenced or to be commenced. It was held that the debtor had the full time to get the necessary signatures and that if the instalments were paid as they fell due the composition was a good defense to a suit by the plaintiff within the term of the covenant. But sixteen months is not a reasonable time for payment of a composition; and after a delay for that time the creditors can make their assent, and recover their entire debts. Bolt v. Lee, 16 Rev. Lég. 53. When a creditor comes in after the time for payment has arrived, the debtor is liable to pay him on demand. Harvey v. Hunt, 119 Mass. 279; Bowen v. Holly, 38 Vt. 574.

When tender is sufficient.— A tender is sufmust be unconditional,[30] and must be made to someone with authority to represent the creditor; a tender to a mere servant or workman is not sufficient.[31] A tender must be kept up;[32] but the weight of authority seems to incline to the view that payment into court is not necessary,[33] although of course it is always advisable, as being the safe practice. A tender may be waived,[34] for example, by a dispute as to the amount due,[35] or by refusal to accept a prior tender,[36] or by leaving the country after the composition is entered into.[37] The debtor need not tender more than the amount actually due under the composition.[38] Tender of payment of composition bills and notes is unnecessary; it is the duty of the holder to present them for payment.[39]

C. Waiver of Performance. Strict performance may be waived by any party interested; and in that case he may hold the others to their agreement,[40] ficient if refused without objection. Eaton v. Lincoln, 13 Mass. 424; Chemical Nat. Bank v. Kohner, 85 N. Y. 189 [reversing 8 Daly (N. Y.) 530, 58 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 267]. When the composition provides for the payment of a sum in cash and the execution of a note, the fact that the money was tendered on one day and the note on another is immaterial, if no objection was made at the time of the tender to its sufficiency. Schroeder v. Pissis, 128 Cal. 209, 60 Pac. 758. In Renard v. Tuller, 4 Bosw. (N. Y.) 107, a tender on Jan. 1, 1857, of notes for the right amounts at seven, ten, and thirteen months was held to be a sufficient tender of notes at six, nine, and twelve months to begin Feb. 1, 1857. In Thurston v. Viau, 32 L. C. Jur. 244, where the composition was for notes at three, six, and nine months, to be given in ten days, and none were given, but the full amount of the composition was tendered after the ten days had expired, but before suit was brought, and was deposited in court, it was held that the tender was sufficient.

When tender is insufficient.— A check or draft is no tender. Webb v. Stuart, 59 Me. 356; Browning v. Crouse, 40 Mich. 339. It is doubtful whether a certified check is a good tender; although it will be good if the creditor fails to object to it on the ground that it is not money. Chemical Nat. Bank v. Kohner, 85 N. Y. 189 [reversing 8 Daly (N. Y.) 530, 58 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 267]. An offer to pay, without producing the money or showing a waiver of production, is not a good tender. Bowen v. Holly, 38 Vt. 574. And a tender after the expiration of the time for payment or performance is not sufficient. Sewell v. Musson, 1 Vern. 210; Hill v. Rutherford, 9 Grant Ch. (U. W. 420, the debtor deposited the necessary amount in bank, notifying the creditor's attorney that it would be paid him on depositing with the bank a receipt in his client's name, acknowledging full satisfaction of the debt. This was held not to be a sufficient tender and no defense to a suit for the debt.

S. 234, a debtor being unable to meet the demands of his creditors, they signed an agreement (which was assented to by the debtor) to accept payment by his covenanting to pay two thirds of his annual income to a trustee of their nomination, and give a warrant of attorney as a collateral security. The creditors never nominated a trustee, and the agreement was not acted upon, although it appeared that the debtor was always willing to perform his part of the agreement. It was held that one cred-

and will himself be bound equally as if the agreement had been performed, whether it is avoided as to the others or not.[41] Acceptance of the composition money or securities after a default, with full knowledge of the facts, will constitute a waiver,[42] except when the composition is void;[43] but the debtor and trustees cannot waive performance by one creditor so as to hold another who would otherwise be released.[44]

D. Effect of Breach — 1. By Debtor — a. In General. A default or breach of performance of a composition agreement by the debtor entitles the creditors to an action against the debtor,[45] unless the agreement itself expressly restricts that itor could not maintain an action for his original debt.

41. Ilderton v. Castrique, 13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 506. And see 4 So. L. Rev. 817. In a composition deed the debtor covenanted to pay £1500 to trustees and to insure his life for that amount, but subsequently paid £500 to the trustees, and insured for £1000 only. It was held that a creditor who knew of the insurance soon after it was effected and acquiesced could not take advantage of the breach of covenant. Watts v. Hyde, 10 Jur. 127, 17 L. J. Ch. 409. In Howland v. Grant, 26 Can. Supreme Ct. 372, on default in performance, a new arrangement was made to which all the creditors assented; and it was held that a creditor who benefited by the arrangement and acted so as to induce the belief that he adopted it could not repudiate it on the ground that he did not fully understand it, without giving up the advantage he had received.

This rule holds good, especially when the composition is effected by giving notes with surety, for the surety is presumed to become a party on the faith of the discharge of the debt, and as relying on that discharge as furnishing him the means for an indemnity. Dauchy v. Goodrich, 20 Vt. 127.

The acceptance of security for the composition, and the execution of a discharge, are equivalent to a waiver. Dauchy v. Goodrich, 20 Vt. 127.

Acceptance of composition money.— In Browning v. Crouse, 40 Mich. 339, the debtor paid the composition irregularly and the creditors refused the lost tender and sued for the balance of their original claims. The defendant paid part and tendered the rest of the amount agreed upon, but the tender was not kept good. The creditors recovered judgment. It was held that this was erroneous; that under the circumstances the creditors could not claim a failure of the composition or the defendant a tender; and that the creditors should have had judgment for the amount still due under the composition with costs.

Mere silence, however, will not constitute a waiver.— In Danzig v. Gumersell, 27 Fed. 185, the proposed indorser of the composition notes died before the notes were executed. The debtor wrote to the creditors, notifying them of this fact and suggesting another indorser as a substitute, and closed his letter as follows: "Should you deem his indorsement sufficient, please advise me promptly." It was held that a creditor who did not signify his intention until notes indorsed by the proposed substitute had been accepted by the other creditors was not bound to accept such notes, and having refused to do so was at liberty to sue on his original cause of action.

W. 702, Marshall, J., said: "There is always present in such a contract [a composition] an implied agreement by the debtor that he will, in good faith, carry out the agreement, and that the status and rights of all parties shall not be changed to their detriment by any fraudulent or wrongful act of his. He could not therefore set up the composition agreement as a shield against his own fraud. The agreement of the creditors inter sese, is that they will extend the time of payment to a particular date, but there is always the implied stipulation that the debtor shall not act fraudulently with respect to the property and assets left in his care and management. This being the nature and extent of the agreement, if the debtor fraudulently disposes of his property before the extended time for payment has expired, there is no rule of law or morals and no precedent that prevents any of the creditors from immediately taking steps to protect himself. The composition agreement is broken, and the parties are then in the same attitude towards the debtor and each other as if no agreement had been made. Any other rule right.[46] A breach as to one is a breach as to all,[47] but the damages arising therefrom are severable and each creditor can sue separately.[48]

b. Cause of Action For Breach — (i) When Composition Is Executory. The cause of action for breach or default by the debtor varies according to the nature of the composition. If that is executory merely, and does not contemplate the release or discharge of the debtor until full performance, a breach or default avoids the composition and revives the original debt; and the creditor may sue for the whole of that debt or the balance over what he has already received under the composition, as the case may be,[49] or prove therefor in bankruptcy or insolwould make it possible for the debtor to effectually dispose of his property at his leisure, while the hands of his creditors were tied by a contract which he himself has broken."

The fact that the breach may operate to the advantage of the creditor will not prevent the avoidance of the composition. Artman v. Truby, 130 Pa. St. 619, 18 Atl. 1065.

It is not sufficient to prevent suit for the original debt to show that the creditor may eventually receive his whole debt from the debtor's property, if it is to be procured by violating the terms of the composition. Smythe v. Graydon, 29 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 11.

Parol evidence is admissible to prove noncompliance by the debtor with the conditions of the composition. Meyer v. McKee, 19 Ill. App. 109.

If after breach by the debtor some of the creditors who have assented to the composition accept from him payment of their claims by a conveyance of his property, the property so conveyed is not, in the hands of the creditors to whom it is conveyed, a trust fund for the equal benefit of all the debtor's creditors, and such creditors do not thereby become trustees by implication of the property so conveyed to them, for the benefit of all the assenting creditors. Montgomery Bank v. Ohio Buggy Co., 110 Ala. 360, 18 So. 273.

46. When a composition deed contained a clause that if default should be made in paying any instalment of the composition for twenty-one days, then it should be lawful for the trustees, by notice in writing, to declare the deed void, "and in such event the creditors shall be entitled to enforce their claims as if the said deed had never been made or executed," and a default occurred for twenty-one days, but the trustees did not give notice, it was held that a creditor under the deed was not entitled to serve a bankruptcy notice and present a petition in bankruptcy on account of the debt due him. In re Clement, 3 Morr. (II) When There Is an Absolute Release. If the composition is executed and there has been a complete novation by an absolute release or discharge, a breach or default will not avoid the composition or revive the original debt, and the only remedy of the creditors is an action for damages for non-performance, in which the measure of damages is the balance of the composition over what has already been received[53] (being practically an action to specifically enforce the composition), unless the release contains a provision that it shall be null and void on default, in which case a default revives the original debt,[54] or unless the entire composition is void, in which case the release is void also, and the original debt never has been discharged.[55]

the performance of a composition, the law implies a fresh promise, and the statute of limitations begins to run from the time of the breach or default.[56]

d. Abatement of Action. An action brought before the full time for performance has elapsed is premature and must be abated.[57]

2. By Creditor. A creditor who commits a breach of the composition will be liable to his fellow creditors in damages, if any accrue to them;[58] and an agent employed by a creditor to make a composition can bind his principal to answer in liquidated damages, or a penalty, in case of a breach.[59]

VIII. EFFECT OF COMPOSITION.

A. On the Parties — 1. Debtor — a. In General. A composition agreement binds the debtor equally with the creditors. He cannot revoke it, after any two of the creditors have assented,[60] and after paying the composition cannot recover part of it on the ground of mistake as to his liability for the claim.[61] But a composition will not bar the right of the debtor to recover, on a bill for an account, the amount paid a creditor because of overcharges.[62]

In Hamilton v. McClintock, 174 Pa. St. 28, 34 Atl. 302, the seller of promissory notes agreed with the purchaser to use all due diligence in collecting them. The seller had an additional and independent claim against the maker of the notes, and subsequently to the sale he signed a composition agreement with other creditors of the maker by which the creditors were to accept fifty per cent of their respective claims in settlement. The seller lumped his own claim with the notes, but had a secret agreement with the debtor by which his own claim was to be paid in full. The purchaser of the notes, without knowledge of this secret agreement, acquiesced in the settlement and was paid fifty per cent of the notes. It also appeared by some evidence in the cause that the maker of the notes had real estate out of which the notes could have been recovered in the exercise of due diligence. In an action by the purchaser of the notes against the seller to recover the unpaid portion of the notes it was held that the secret agreement of the seller with the maker was a fraud upon the purchaser; that under the circumstances the purchaser did not waive his right to due diligence on the part of the seller, by accepting fifty per cent of the amount of the notes, and that a judgment for the purchaser should be sustained.

L. 536, Patteson, J., said: "Now the deed contained an express clause that the release to Goddard should not operate to discharge any one jointly or otherwise liable to the plaintiff for the same debts. It is plain, therefore, that it did not release the defendant. The reason why a release to one debtor releases all jointly liable is, because, unless it was held to do so, the co-debtor, after paying the debt, might sue him who was released for contribution, and so in effect he would not be released; but that reason does not apply where the debtor released agrees to such a qualification of the release as will leave him liable to any rights of the co-debtor. Neither does such a clause qualifying the release operate as a fraud on other creditors; for, as it appears on the face of the deed, all who execute that deed are aware of it and agree to it."

claim, or the manner in which it was secured. Johnson v. Parker, 34 Wis. 596, 603. In this case Dixon, C. J., said: "Arrangements of this nature are of frequent occurrence and of the greatest practical importance, especially in commercial circles. The peace and tranquillity of the whole commercial world, or of great numbers in it, as well as that trust and confidence which are the life of trade and commerce, are to a great extent dependent upon the validity and finality of such settlements. It would not be easy to estimate, but the numbers are not small, in all our large towns and cities, of persons engaged in commercial pursuits who stand upon such settlements as the foundation of their credit and solvency; and, such foundation being taken away, pecuniary ruin must not only come to themselves, but loss and disaster must likewise fall upon many others, who, acting on the faith of the settlements, have entered into commercial dealings with, and given extensive credits to, the debtors making them. And this condition of things, owing to the misfortunes of some, the incapacity of others, and the dishonesty or extravagance of still others, as also to the contractions and expansions of the circulating medium and fluctuations of the money market, which are always occurring at periods more or less frequent, always has existed and probably always will exist, in all commercial communities. The indifference of the law to such settlements, or the easy and successful disregard of them by the assenting creditors, or any of them, must therefore always be attended with widespread disturbance and mischief, and be the constant source of distrust and alarm. Hence it is that the law is not indifferent to them, but guards and upholds them with a solicitude and watchfulness proportionate to the evils which must follow if it were otherwise. or if they were easily to be set aside, or broken up and abandoned for slight and trivial causes. For it is of the constitution of these agreements that they cannot be impeached or disregarded by one creditor without at the same time opening the door to all others, and annulling the settlement to all intents and for all purposes. Such are the constituent elements and essential qualities of them, that they must bind and conclude all the creditors joining in their execution, or they will bind and conclude none. If one creditor is permitted to go behind and disregard the agreement, every other must have the same privilege; and thus the whole settlement falls to the ground and loses all force by the successful attack or impeachment of one."

But if the debtor consents to the withdrawal he cannot afterward set up the composition as a defense to the original claim. Fellows v. Stevens, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 294.

When creditors meet on the invitation of their debtor and agree to extend their claims, with a provision that they should be paid in four instalments, and that the debtor should incur no new indebtedness pending the term of the extension, none of the assenting creditors can by legal steps or by agreement secure a preference over the other assenting creditors, at least until the debtor has committed a default. who join in the making or in the execution of the same from contesting each other's claims.[71]

b. Who Are Bound. It is not necessary, however, that a composition should have been signed by a creditor in order to make it binding upon him, and bar an action on the original debt. Assent or acquiescence, as by accepting the benefits of the composition or acting under it, is as effective as an actual signing;[72] and

But this is a relic of the days when the true consideration of a composition, and therefore the real reason why it should be treated as binding, were but imperfectly understood; and a better foundation for the binding nature of a composition is to be found in the fact that it is a contract upon sufficient consideration, and therefore cannot be broken at will. What will constitute assent.— Assent to a composition is evinced by surrendering debts and taking composition notes, as well as by signing the composition deed. Fellows v. Stevens, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 294. In Heitzenreither v. Long, 4 Pa. Super. Ct. 524, 539, Willard, J., said: "The evidence in the case fairly submitted to the jury established the fact of a common purpose among the creditors to secure the payment of their claims by compromise and settlement. Relying upon each other and each influenced by the presence, action and acquiescence of the other, meetings were held and by united action without a dissenting voice questions were voted upon and decided, committees were appointed and authorized to act according to their best judgment for the whole body of creditors, the action of the committees adopted, resulting finally in the adoption and ratification of the proposition presented by the individuals composing the copartnership, and a receipt of a one who has agreed to execute a composition deed or release, if he induces others to join or share the common purpose, will be bound equally with those who sign, although he afterward refuses to execute the instrument.[73]

c. Who Are Not Bound. But as no creditor is obliged to come in under a common-law composition unless he chooses to do so, such a composition will not bind creditors who neither join nor assent; and such creditors can sue or prove in bankruptcy or insolvency for the full amount of their claims.[74] Similarly, a cred-large sum of the money by the creditors, under the terms of the accepted proposition. Under the evidence submitted as above stated, the jury was fully warranted in finding the appellant a party to the settlement by his presence, action, acquiescence and subsequent ratification." In Mitchell v. Mitchell, 27 U. C. C. P. 160, the defendant, a trader, being in insolvent circumstances, wrote to the plaintiff, a creditor in Scotland, giving him a statement of his account and informing him of his intention to make some arrangement with his creditors, and that plaintiff must rank with the others on his estate, which he stated would not pay more than fifty cents on the dollar. The plaintiff replied expressing no dissent, and again that he was satisfied if no preference was given. In the meantime the defendant had effected an arrangement with his creditors for a composition of thirty cents on the dollar, on his representation that the plaintiff would accept it, without which the whole arrangement would have fallen through, and the defendant must have gone into insolvency. On the same day the defendant informed the plaintiff, by letter, of the arrangement, to which the plaintiff replied without expressing dissatisfaction, and afterward, without dissent, he received the instalments of the composition sent to him, and on the receipt of the last instalment acknowledged it as a payment of "the last instalment of your indebtedness to me." It was held that the plaintiff must be deemed to have accepted the composition with the other creditors and that he could not sue the defendant for the balance.

What will not constitute assent.— It is not sufficient to show assent that the creditor merely stood by and took no part in the matter. Mere silence will not estop. Danzig v. Gumersell, 27 Fed. 185; Biron v. Mount, 24 Beav. 642, 4 Jur. N. S. 43, 27 L. J. Ch. 191. Acceptance of the composition will not necessarily prove assent. E. 666, an assignment for benefit of creditors provided that all creditors assenting to it thereby discharged their claim against the debtor. Notice of the assignment was mailed to all creditors with a statement that those who wished to receive dividends must assent to the assignment. Subsequently one creditor received from the assignee a check purporting to be a final dividend intended to be accepted in full discharge of the creditors' claim, but which by mistake was for considerably less than the pro rata dividend. It was held that the receipt and use of the check were not sufficient to show an assent on his part to the composition and that he could sue for and recover the balance of his claim. After the composition agreement is complete, acceptance of the composition money will not make a creditor who never entered into the agreement a party thereto. Guilford First Nat. Bank v. Ware, 95 Me. 388, 50 Atl. 24.

itor who has not joined with the others, but who accepts a dividend under the composition after it is completed without becoming a party thereto, or being bound thereby, may recover from the debtor his full claim, less the dividend received;[75] but when, after an assignment for the benefit of creditors, some of the creditors compound for a fixed sum, non-assenting creditors cannot claim the entire surplus remaining after payment of the composition; they are entitled only to what would have been their pro rata dividend if the other had not accepted the fixed composition.[76]

enforced by the privies or personal representatives of the parties as well as by the parties themselves.[81]

2. Persons Primarily Liable For the Debt — Principal or Maker. A composition with a surety will not discharge the principal.[82] Nor will the maker of a negotiable instrument be released by a composition with the indorser.[83]

3. Persons Secondarily Liable For the Debt — a. Accommodation Maker. An accommodation maker will be discharged by an unqualified composition with the party for whose accommodation the note or bill was made; although if the remedies of the creditor against him are reserved he will remain liable;[84] but his claim against the payee and indorsee will not be discharged by a composition of the debts of either, to which he is not a party;[85] and a mere covenant not to sue the payee will not discharge the maker.[86]

b. Sureties — (i) When Discharged. A composition, whether executed or executory, will release the sureties for the debts compounded, no matter how beneficial it may be to them, unless they consent thereto, or unless the rights of the creditors against them are reserved; for they have a right to stand on the strict letter of their contract,[87] and their discharge will not be prevented by the fact that the composition was due to a mistake.[88] A composition, however, with one cosurety will not discharge the others; but the compounding creditor cannot recover from the other cosureties more than the proportion they would have paid, if the cosurety released had contributed his share.[89] The creditor may reserve his remedy against some cosureties, while releasing others.[90]

(II) When Not Discharged. A surety who consents to a composition[91] or joins therein[92] will not be released thereby; and a composition which does not take effect will be treated as if never signed and sureties will not be discharged.[93] If prior to the giving of the release by the creditors the surety has paid part of the debt and given a security for the remainder, the general rule will not apply and the creditor, notwithstanding the release, will retain his right against the surety in the absence of evidence to the contrary.[94]

But in Webb v. Hewitt, 3 Kay & J. 438, Vice-Chancellor Sir W. (iv) Measure of Liability of Sureties. A surety who remains liable to the creditor after a composition will be liable only for the difference between the debt and the amount received under the composition; and the creditor may prove in bankruptcy or insolvency only for this difference, and not for the whole debt.[99]

c. Drawer. The holder of a bill of exchange, who discharges the accepter by composition, cannot recover thereafter from the drawer, if the composition was made without the consent of the latter;[1] but if the remedies against the drawer are reserved the holder can then recover from him the difference between the amount due on the bill and that received under the composition,[2] and the drawer can recover from the accepter what he is thus compelled to pay.[3] d. Indorser. The indorser of a negotiable instrument, being practically a surety, will be discharged by a composition with the maker,[4] unless the creditor reserves his remedy against the indorser;[5] but if the indorser joins in the compo-

The debtor afterward by deed assigned his property to a trustee in trust to sell and divide the proceeds among his creditors, the creditors releasing the debtor from the debts due to them respectively; but there was a proviso in the deed that nothing therein should affect any right or remedy which any creditor might have against any other person in respect of any debt due by the debtor. It was held that this deed only amounted to a covenant not to sue the debtor, and that the surety was not released, but could pay off the principal to the creditor and recover the amount from the debtor.

The principal was in bankruptcy at the same time. It was held that as to a creditor for whom the compounding debtor was a surety only, this agreement gave the surety a contract right to prove the payment thereunder as a debt against the principal's estate, upon which he would receive a pro rata dividend; and that the creditor must credit the debt with such payment and prove only for the balance.

e. Guarantor and Others. The above rules apply to all other cases of secondary liability.[9] While a guarantor who does not consent will be discharged by a composition which does not reserve a right or remedy against him, he will not be discharged if the rights or remedies of the creditors are reserved or if he joins in or agrees to the composition.[10]

C. On Debts — 1. In General — Extinguishment. An executed composition supersedes the original causes of action, and settles the claims and extinguishes the debts included in it, and the rights and remedies of the parties depend thereafter on the new agreement,[11] while an executory composition merely suspends only intended to retain a claim upon the indorsers as additional security, in case from any cause the composition should fail; on the ground that to hold the clause to be a reservation of all rights against the indorsers would defeat the object of the composition, as the debtors would then be liable over to the indorsers. But the court was clearly wrong. See Green v. Wynn, L. R. 4 Ch. 204, 38 L. J. Ch. 220, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 131, 17 Wkly. Rep. 385 [affirming L. R. 7 Eq. 28]; Close v. Close, 4 De G. One of the trustees named in this deed was one Marquand, the defendant, who was the indorser of a promissory note made by the debtors, and held by the firm of M. Bruen & Sons, the plaintiffs, one of the partners of which firm executed the composition deed. This note was described in the schedule of debts annexed to the deed as due to "Isaac Marquand, indorsed to M. Bruen & Sons, 500 dollars." Marquand executed the deed as creditor as well as trustee. It was held that the execution of the deed by the holders of the note did not release the indorser; for upon the true construction of the whole instrument the latter, having signed as creditor as well as trustee, had thereby relinquished all right of action against the makers, and was to be considered as assenting to a discharge of the makers by the holders also, with a full understanding that his liability to them, as indorser, was not to be thereby impaired.

The broker negligently loaned the money on a second mortgage and thereby became liable to the plaintiff to make good the security. The property was sold for no more than sufficient to satisfy the first mortgage; and the borrowers, being insolvent, entered into a composition with their creditors, which was signed by the plaintiff and by which he released the borrowers from personal liability beyond the lien of the mortgage. It was held that the release of the borrowers by the plaintiff had the effect to release the defendant, the broker, from his contingent liability to the plaintiff.

the right of action on the original claims while it remains in force, and a breach of the composition will revive them.[12] In other words, an executed composition is a perfected novation while an executory composition is an inchoate novation. But in order that a composition may be regarded as executed, or as a complete novation, it is not necessary that it should be performed, unless the discharge of the debtor is conditional upon payment or performance. If it appears clearly from the language of the composition that the creditors intend that the agreement itself shall be a discharge of their claims, and that they accept it in satisfaction, the original debts will be discharged and extinguished, although the composition is not performed.[13] But a composition that is void, or fails for want of consideration, will not extinguish the original debt and the debtor will be liable thereon, although the release is absolute.[14]

In all cases where the creditors agree with the debtor and with one another to take a less sum than the amount severally due them in discharge of all, or where the discharge is conditional upon payment or performance, there is no discharge or bar to a suit upon the original debt, unless and until payment is made as required. If the agreement is performed, it is then a valid and final settlement of the debt. In the former class of cases, however, especially where the agreement is to transfer property to creditors in order to effect a settlement, the rule is that 'an acceptance, in discharge of a debt, of an agreement, with mutual promises on which the creditor has a legal remedy for its non-performance, is a satisfaction of the debt, although such promises are not performed.' Coe, signed a composition deed compounding all the debts of his immediate indorser, stating first all the accrued indebtedness to him, and added to this statement the words "contingent as endorser A. D. Coe note, 367.50." The creditor received his stipulated dividend, subsequently had the note protested for non-payment, and thereafter accepted a partial payment upon it from some of the prior indorsers. He then sued the immediate indorser, with whom he had previously compounded upon the note. It was held that he could not recover without allegation and proof that the immediate indorser had after demand failed to comply with the conditions of the composition deed.

In this state of affairs the creditor executed the deed generally, without specifying in the deed the amount of his debt or claim. Upon the ultimate account after the goods were sold, it appeared that a balance of £5348 was due to the creditor from the debtor; and it was held that the creditor was entitled to a dividend from the debtor's estate in the sum of £5348, and not merely in the sum of £1974.

When a composition recites that the creditors who become parties to it "release unto the said" debtors "the several debts and sums of money, written opposite to their respective names in the schedules hereto annexed," no other debts than those scheduled will be released, and parol evidence is inadmissible to show that it was intended to include other debts. Rice v. Woods, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 30. Where the plaintiffs held both a secured claim and an unsecured claim against the defendant, and joined with other creditors of the defendant in a composition agreement, in which they all designated themselves as "general creditors," and agreed to take from the defendant a certain consideration for their respective claims, the amount of each of which was stated, and the plaintiffs stated only the amount of their unsecured claims, it was held that the term "general creditors" meant "unsecured creditors," and that by executing the agreement the plaintiffs did not release their secured claim. St. 349] the plaintiff, holding claims against the defendant partly secured by mortgage, signed a composition agreement for the release of his unsecured claims. The defendant's other secured creditors did not sign this agreement, and it was understood that the compromise extended only to unsecured claims. Plaintiff and others afterward executed to defendant a release of all claims whatever, reciting that it was in consideration of his compliance with the agreement. Defendant did not pay or tender anything on the secured claims within the specified time, and knew that plaintiff did not intend to include them in the agreement or release. On a subsequent settlement in which the secured claims were included, a mortgage was given to secure a balance found due to plaintiff. It was held that it was founded on a good consideration.

Bank, 46 Conn. 569, where a creditor of an insolvent had with other creditors signed an agreement to accept twenty-five per cent upon their claims, the amount of the creditors' claim being stated in connection with its signature, and certain debts being reserved, it was held that, in the absence of any proof of fraud on the other creditors, a receipt afterward given by the creditor for its percentage, and also parol evidence, were admissible to show that the amount for which the creditor signed the composition was that of its unsecured claims, and that the agreement was not intended to apply to another secured claim. In Garnier v. Papin, 30 Mo. 243, one creditor signed the composition agreement, adding to his signature, "Provided I have the same endorsers for $3,500," and surrendered notes amounting to three thousand five hundred dollars. It was held that he thereby reserved the right to sue upon another note held by him and not included in the three thousand five hundred dollars, and that the indorsers on that note were not released. on which his demand is founded,[28] acceptance of the composition on the debts included will not prevent recovery on the amount not included.

D. On Collateral Securities — 1. When Will Be Released. When a composition amounts to a release of the debts compounded those debts are extinguished, and the creditors who enter into the agreement lose the right to retain or enforce any liens, equities, or collateral securities they may hold from the debtor, which revert at once to the latter, since to allow one creditor to retain and enforce such liens or securities would be a fraud upon the others.[29] A judgment creditor[30] or mortgagee[31] who releases cannot enforce his judgment or mortgage thereafter, and a lien creditor who relies upon his lien cannot have the benefit of the composition.[32]

2. When Will Not Be Released. A creditor may, however, retain his lien, equity, or security, if the others assent, and consequently may reserve his right to enforce such lien, equity, or security, as a condition of entering into the composition, if the reservation is made known to the other creditors;[33] and it would seem that a composition will not affect a collateral security given by a third person, who does not enter into the composition.[34] If the composition agreement does not amount to a release it will not affect the right of a secured creditor to realize on his lien or security, in addition to the composition;[35] and a creditor who does not compound need not notify the others that he holds securities of the debtor.[36]

Applications of rule.— When the first creditor to sign adds to his signature the words "without prejudice to the securities which I hold," and the other creditors sign under his name, the execution of the composition will not release the securities held by the first creditor. Duffy v. Orr, 5 Bligh N. S. 620, 5 Eng. Reprint 449, 1 Cl. & F. 253, 6 Eng. Reprint 912. When a composition agreement stipulates that the creditors do not waive any lien either of them may have upon the property assigned, the creditors will be presumed to have inquired as to the condition of the property and the liens to which it is subject, and in order to avoid such an agreement it must be proved that active fraud was practised upon the creditors. Nicolai v. Lyon, 8 Oreg. 56. In Squire v. Ford, 9 Hare 47, 15 Jur. 619, 20 L. J. Ch. 308, 41 Eng. Ch. 47, a deed conveying the real and personal estate of a debtor to trustees for the benefit of his creditors contained a covenant by the creditors that it should operate and inure, and might be pleaded in bar, as a good and effectual release and discharge of all and all manner of actions, suits, bills, bonds, writings, obligations, debts, duties, judgments, extents, executions, claims, and demands, both at law and in equity, which they or any of them had or might have against the debtor or his estate or effects, for or by reason of all or any of the debts or engagements to them respectively due or owing by him; such covenant not to destroy any mortgage, pledge, lien, or other specific security which any creditor possessed. It was held, upon the construction of the entire deed, that the general words used did not have the effect of releasing a judgment previously obtained by one of the creditors who executed the deed, so as to affect the priority of the creditor as between himself and a judgment creditor who was not a party to the deed, or so as to preclude the judgment creditor who executed the deed from enforcing the right which the judgment gave him as against the estate vested in the trustees.

E. Pleading and Proof of Composition — 1. PLEADING.[37] At common law a composition need not be specially pleaded in an action of assumpsit, but may be given in evidence under the general issue,[38] although under the code system of California it has been held that it must be pleaded specially, and cannot be given in evidence under a plea of accord and satisfaction.[39] But in pleading a composition specially it is not sufficient as a general rule to aver the fact of composition alone, but the debtor must also set forth the terms of the composition[40] and aver compliance with all conditions precedent,[41] and payment or performance or tender,

A creditor who wishes to retain the benefit of his security must either hold himself aloof from the other creditors, or distinctly communicate with them on the subject, if he acts in common with them. In Cullingworth v. Loyd, 2 Beav. 385, 4 Jur. 284, 9 L. J. Ch. 218, 17 Eng. Ch. 385, a debtor entered into negotiations for a composition with his creditors, but there did not appear to have been any general meeting, or any agreement entered into by them generally. One of the creditors stipulated that in addition to the amount of the composition he should have the benefit of an equitable mortgage (by deposit of title deeds) which he held. He accepted the composition, but did not execute the composition deed until after his equitable mortgage had been transferred by deed into a legal mortgage on the same premises. He then executed the composition deed, by which he purported to release the debtor altogether, without any reservation of the mortgage; and another creditor subsequently executed the deed. The stipulation that the benefit of the mortgage should be retained was not communicated to the other creditors; but there was no fraudulent concealment. It was held that the creditor could not retain the mortgage in addition to the amount of the composition and must pay the debtor the purchase-money received from a sale under a power of sale in the mortgage.

The creditor need not disclose the extent of his security; the fact that the reservation is made known to the others is sufficient. Henderson v. Macdonald, 20 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 334.

Doubtful agreement.— When in a composition by a surety indemnified by a deed of trust, the creditors reserve the right to enforce their claims against all others bound for the same debts, but discharge the surety absolutely, and it is left doubtful by the agreement which party shall have the benefit of the deed of trust, the trust fund should be divided pro rata among the creditors, without regard to the arrangements made by some of them with their sureties. Wiswall v. Potts, 58 N. C. 184.

When, prior to the release of the principal debtor, a surety has paid part of the debt and gives a security for the remainder, the creditor, notwithstanding the release, will retain his right against the surety, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary. Hall v. Hutchons, 3 L. J. Ch. 45, 3 Myl. & K. 426, 10 Eng. Ch. 426.

35. In Thomas v. Courtnay, 1 B. & Ald. 1, the creditors of an insolvent agreed by an instrument not under seal, that they would accept in full satisfaction of their debts twelve shillings in the pound, payable by instalments, and would release the debtor from all demands. One of the creditors who signed for the full amount of his debt held at the time as a security for part a bill of exchange drawn by the debtor and accepted by a third person; the money due on this bill having been paid subsequently by the accepter, it was held that the creditor might retain it, as the composition agreement did not contain any stipulation for the surrender of securities, and did not have the effect of extinguishing the debt.

Keay v. Richardson, 2 C. M. & R. 422, 1 Gale 219, 4 L. J. Exch. 236, 5 Tyrw. 931. A plea of composition which does not aver that the creditor agreed to take it or or facts sufficient to excuse performance or tender,[42] unless the agreement contains an absolute release.[43] A plea of an agreement to accept a composition is no defense without a further averment that the composition was accepted[44] and that it was accepted in satisfaction of the debt.[45]

2. PROOF. The proof must correspond with the allegations of the plea or the defense will be insufficient;[46] and the debtor will be bound by the case he has averred and cannot set up another at the trial.[47]

F. Payment of Expenses of Carrying on Business. When a composition agreement provides that the business shall be carried on by the debtor or a third party for the benefit of the creditors, the expenses of carrying on the business must be paid before the creditors are entitled to receive any part of the proceeds;[48] and a provision for the payment of such expenses if inserted in the composition agreement will not invalidate it.[49]

54. If a creditor holding a composition bond, by an agreement with the debtor for a valuable consideration, without the knowledge or consent of the surety, materially changes the terms of the contract of indebtedness, he thereby releases the surety. Bailey v. Boyd, 75 Ind. 125.

55. In Johnson v. Baker, 4 B. & Ald. 440, 23 Rev. Rep. 338, 6 E. C. L. 551, before executing a deed of composition it was agreed in the presence of the surety that the deed should be void if all the creditors did not sign. At the same interview the surety subsequently executed the deed in the usual way, saying nothing at the time of execution about the condition that all should sign; and the deed was delivered to one creditor to get the signatures of the rest. It was held that this was equivalent to a delivery of the deed in escrow, and as all the creditors did not sign it the surety was not bound. In Doughty v. Savage, 28 Conn. 146, a composition agreement contained a stipulation that it should not be binding unless signed by all the creditors. The composition notes, indorsed by the defendant as surety for the debtor, were delivered to the plaintiffs under this agreement. The agreement was not in fact signed by all the creditors, but this fact was not known to the surety when he indorsed the notes. It was further agreed between the plaintiffs and the debtor, as a condition of their signing the composition agreement, that the debtor should assume and include in the indebtedness which was the basis of the composition, a debt due them from another party for which he was not liable, and that he should give his note for the balance of the indebtedness not covered by the composition notes. This agreement was also unknown to the surety. It was held that in both these particulars the agreement was a fraud upon the surety, of which he could take advantage in an action brought upon the notes indorsed by him.

After a waiver of strict performance, a creditor cannot sue for the original debt, since that would be a fraud upon a surety for the composition, who must be supposed to become a party to the composition on the faith that the debt is discharged, and relying on that discharge as furnishing him the means for his indemnity. Dauchy v. Goodrich, 20 Vt. 127.

56. In Whittemore v. Obear, 58 Mo. 280, a composition agreement between creditors, the debtor, and a surety for the composition, provided that the surety should indorse certain notes of the debtor, provided that all creditors to amounts exceeding two hundred dollars should sign. It was held that it was the duty of the surety to see to it that all such creditors had signed the agreement; that his indorsement of the note as to a creditor who was ignorant of any failure in the fulfilment of the condition or its procurement by fraud was a waiver of that condition, that he could not avail himself of such failure or fraud against such creditor, and that even if the creditor was aware of such failure or fraud and chose to waive the objection it did not lie in the mouth of the surety to set it up as a defense.

57. The acceptance of a composition under a deed void under the bankruptcy act binds, and the creditor cannot recover the balance over the composition, since he acted under a mistake of law. Kitchin v. Hawkins, L. R. 2 C. P. 22, 12 Jur. N. S. 928, 15 L. T. Rep. N. S. 185, 15 Wkly. Rep. 72. In Howland v. Grant, 26 Can. Supreme Ct. 372, upon de-fact;[58] and the debtor cannot recover back a portion of the sum paid under the composition on the ground of an alleged mistake as to his liability, especially when he has made a full and careful investigation of his affairs prior to compounding and paying.[59] But when the creditor has made overcharges in settling the account under the composition the debtor may recover the amount paid because of such overcharges by a bill for an accounting;[60] and if by mistake he pays the whole amount of the debt under a fifty per cent composition, supposing the debt to be twice its real amount, he can recover half of the amount so paid.[61]

XI. EFFECT OF FRAUD AND MISREPRESENTATION.

A. In General — 1. Of Debtor — a. Generally. The policy of the law demands the utmost good faith on the part of the debtor in effecting a composition; and any fraud, misrepresentation, concealment, or suppression practised by him with respect to any material fact will vitiate the composition and entitle a creditor injured thereby to treat it at his option as null and void, at any time within the statute of limitations.[62] The mere receipt of part or even of all of the benefit of the composition will not validate the transaction, for a composition fault in the performance of the provisions of a deed of composition a new arrangement was made respecting the realization of a debtor's assets and their distribution, to which all the executing creditors appeared to have assented. It was held that a creditor who had benefited by the realization of the assets and by his action had given the body of the creditors reason to believe that he had adopted the new arrangement, could not repudiate the transaction upon the ground that the new arrangement was not fully understood, without at least a surrender of the advantage he had received through it.

What misrepresentations will avoid a composition.— A false representation that all will sign if one does, on the faith of which that one signs, will release him from the composition. Cooling v. Noyes, 6 T. R. 263. The concealment of the existence of a partnership is a fraud that will vitiate a composition by one partner. Carter v. Connell, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 392. Evidence that a partner, to induce a creditor to sign the composition agreement, had represented to him that the assets of the debtor firm would not pay more than fraudulent in its inception can be validated only by the receipt of a new consideration, and the receipt of the composition money or securities is not such a consideration, nor will it constitute a waiver of the fraud.[63] A prior conveyance in fraud of creditors will invalidate a composition,[64] and the debtor will be compelled to make good his representations at the option of the creditors.[65]

b. Representations as to Affairs or Assets. Misrepresentation or suppression by the debtor of any material fact in stating the condition of his affairs, the amount of his property, his debts, etc., will avoid the composition;[66] and although fifty cents on the dollar, that in fact a surplus remained after that payment, and that the partner confessed that he had secreted goods and kept two sets of books, one of which was afterward destroyed, is sufficient to raise the question for the jury as to whether or not the composition was procured by fraud. Smith v. Salomon, 7 Daly (N. Y.) 216.

What misrepresentations will not avoid a composition.— A misrepresentation as to the legal effect of a deed or as to a condition not inserted in the deed will not avoid the composition. Lewis v. Jones, 4 B. & C. 506, 8 D. & R. 567, 3 L. J. K. B. O. S. 270, 10 E. C. L. 679. See Smith v. Stone, 4 Gill & J. (Md.) 310. The mere fact that the debtor has made a previous assignment of property, which would be fraudulent as to creditors, if known to the creditor, or if not intended to mislead him, will not vitiate the composition. Phettiplace v. Sayles, 4 Mason (U. S.) 312, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,083. The fact that after a composition by a firm was effected one partner declared that the firm would make ten thousand dollars by the composition will make no difference as to its validity, if there was no misrepresentation or concealment of any material fact to induce signing. Renard v. Tuller, 4 Bosw. (N. Y.) 107. A composition will not be set aside in the absence of any proof of false representations or fraud except the omission of the debtor to inform his creditors that he had held the title to certain houses and lots, and had made a gift of them to another. Jackson v. Miner, 101 Ill. 550. Where a creditor is induced to join the composition by a representation that no person had received any other thing than the composition, the fact that a promissory note in excess of the composition rate was given to another creditor will not vitiate the composition, when that note has been adjudged void in an action thereon, since the creditor has suffered no injury. Bartlett v. Blaine, 83 Ill. 25, 25 Am. Rep. 346. A partial failure in the arrangement on the faith of which the creditors execute the deed will not avoid the composition. Matthewson v. Henderson, 15 U. C. C. P. 90. In Page v. Bent, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 371, it was held that when a defendant sets up the plaintiff's release of the demand in suit, and the plaintiff seeks to avoid the release on the ground that he was induced to make it by the misrepresentations of the defendant concerning his assets, etc., the burden of proof is on the plaintiff, and he must show that such misrepresentations were intentional, as unintentional misrepresentations in such a case will not render the release void.

63. Stuart v. Blum, 28 Pa. St. 225.

But a creditor who has accepted a note with surety for the composition cannot, after the payment of the note, repudiate the composition and sue for the balance of his debt, on the ground of a fraud of which he knew when he accepted payment of the note. 65. In Fraser v. Sutherland, 2 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 442, a debtor, in order to effect a composition with his creditors, offered them a mortgage on certain property, which property he represented as belonging to another person who desired to assist him. The creditors accepted the offer and took the mortgage, but afterward discovered that before it was executed the debtor had obtained a conveyance of the property to himself. It was held that under the circumstances the conveyance was subject to the mortgage.

The concealment of assets is a fraud upon the creditors. Armstrong v. Mechanics' Nat. Bank, 6 Biss. (U. S.) 520, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 545. If the debtor leaves the creditor under a false impression as to the extent of his estate the creditor can sue for the balance of his debt. Vine v. Mitchell, 1 M. & Rob. 337. In Wenham v. Fowle, 3 Dowl. P. C. 43, he is not required to disclose his financial condition unless asked, so long as he does nothing to mislead, and the composition cannot be assailed solely on the ground of failure to make such disclosure,[67] yet, if the duty of making such disclosure is cast upon him by circumstances, he must make a full and fair statement or the composition will not be permitted to stand against objections.[68] But a mere statement of opinion as to his pecuniary condition and the state of his property at a time of financial distress is not such a misrepresentation as will invalidate a composition.[69]

c. Fraud of Agent of Debtor. The fraud or misrepresentations of the debtor's agent will avoid the composition equally with that of the debtor himself,[70] and the fraud of a partner will vitiate a composition by the firm.[71]

d. Creditor Must Be Misled. In order to avoid a composition on the ground of fraud or misrepresentation by the debtor it must appear that the creditor who assails it was misled thereby, and thereby induced to join in the agreement;[72] and fraud practised on other creditors will not invalidate the composition as to those not affected by it.[73] And if one compounds a debt with a full knowledge of all the facts, acting at arm's length upon his own judgment, he must abide the consequences. Neither fraud nor mistake can be imputed to such an agreement.[74]

e. Effect of Creditor's Fraud. The fact that the creditor who assails the

When a creditor who has been defrauded into joining a composition sues for and recovers his full claim, that fact will not invalidate the composition as to others who are not affected by the fraud, merely because the equality between them is destroyed. Cheveront v. Textor, 53 Md. 295. In such event the composition is void as to the defrauded creditor, and the case stands as if he had never entered into it; and as the principle of equality applies only between those who enter a composition, it has no application to such facts. A finding by the jury that one creditor has been defrauded, in a suit brought by him, does not conclusively establish that others have been. Cheveront v. Textor, 53 Md. 295.

composition has himself been guilty of fraudulent conduct toward other creditors will not prevent him from obtaining relief,[75] unless the fraud or misrepresentation of which he complains was connected with, or committed in, the perpetration of, the other fraud.[76]

f. Remedies of Creditor — (I) In General. A creditor who has been induced to enter into a composition by the fraud or misrepresentation of the debtor may at his option bring suit to set aside the agreement or release,[77] or may disregard the composition and sue directly for his original claim, or the balance of that claim over what he has received under the composition,[78] or may sue for damages for the fraud.[79] If he sues in equity, however, the court is not bound to vacate the release absolutely, but may subject the defendant to liability for the payment of his debts to the extent to which his property has not been applied to that object.[80]

(II) Rescission and Restoration.[81] When the transaction is a pure composition, the creditor may sue for the balance of his original claim, without formal rescission and without restoring or offering to restore what he has received under the composition, since his right of action is not for the fraud, but on the original

75. The setting down of a debt of forty-five thousand dollars as only twenty-five thousand dollars is a fraud upon other creditors only, and the creditor who is guilty thereof can avail himself of the debtor's fraud, and recover the balance due on his original claim over and above the composition. Huntington v. Clark, 39 Conn. 540. If a composition is induced by the false representations of the debtor, the fact that a creditor deceived thereby was fraudulently preferred will not debar him from suing for his original claim. Elfelt v. Snow, 2 Sawy. (U. S.) 94, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,342, 6 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 57. And the debtor cannot recover the secret preference. Armstrong v. Mechanics' Nat. Bank, 6 Biss. (U. claim, revived by the failure of the composition because of the fraud.[82] If the transaction amounts to a compromise, however, the creditor cannot retain what he has received and sue for the rest as due upon account or contract; he may rescind and restore, and then sue for the original debt, but if he retains the sums paid under the composition he can sue only for damages for the fraud.[83] It seems also that when a third party compounds the creditor must rescind and restore before he can sue the original debtor for the debt.[84]

(III) MEASURE OF DAMAGES. When the creditor sues upon his original claim the measure of damages is of course the sum remaining unpaid;[85] but in an action based upon the fraud, the measure of damages is the amount that the creditor would have received if no fraud had been practised.[86] If the creditor sues for damages for the fraud only he cannot recover the original debt either on the ground of this or any other fraud; he is bound by the case he has alleged.[87]

(IV) EVIDENCE. In any form of action the statements of partners are evidence on the question of fraud,[88] which is for the jury, not for the court;[89] and when the creditor sues for damages for the fraud, any evidence which tends to show what he would have received on a fair application of the debtor's assets is admissible.[90] The evidence of one witness, if clear and uncontradicted, is sufficient to establish that misrepresentations were made.[91]

(V) LIMITATION OF ACTIONS. As in other cases of fraud, the statute of limitations will not begin to run until the discovery of the fraud, or until the time when it should have been discovered by the exercise of due diligence.[92]

2. OF CREDITORS. When one creditor, by fraud or false representations, induces another to enter into a composition, the latter cannot avoid the composition if the debtor be innocent, and the guilty creditor did not act as the debtor's agent; but the guilty creditor will be liable in damages to any one injured by his fraud, or will be held to make good his representations;[93] and

Where a creditor's signature to a composition agreement has been obtained by fraud on the part of the debtor, the creditor, upon the discovery of the fraud, although he has received under the composition the amount specified in full payment of his debt, may maintain an action upon the original cause of action for the unpaid balance, without first bringing an equitable action to set aside the composition agreement as fraudulent, and without having first restored or offered to restore the amount received under the composition. Smith v. Salomon, 7 Daly (N. Y.) 216.

The creditor may declare on the original notes delivered up under the composition, although they are no longer in his possession. Blodgett v. Webster, 24 N. H. 91. See infra, XI, B, 3, note 46.

86. Whiteside v. Hyman, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 218; Grabenheimer v. Blum, 63 Tex. 369; 4 So. L. Rev. 835. The damages depend on the debtor's ability to pay. Whiteside v. Hyman, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 218. They cannot be reduced by deducting losses which the perpetrator of the fraud may have suffered incidentally as the result of an arrangement procured by his fraud. Grabenheimer v. Blum, 63 Tex. 369.

90. The witnesses for the defense may be asked whether the debtor had property or assets sufficient to pay more than the amount of the composition. Whiteside v. Hyman, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 218.

To show that the defendant had other property than that applied to the claims of his creditors, the plaintiff may show, in connection with other evidence, that sixteen months after the composition the debtor bought a farm for three thousand one hundred dollars. Blodgett v. Webster, 24 N. H. 91.

92. Jackson v. Hodges, 24 Md. 468. See, generally, LIMITATIONS OF ACTIONS.

93. A creditor who states his claim as less than it really is or compounds for a part only, without informing the other creditors that he has withheld part, cannot recover the balance after the composition is effected.

Illinois.— Meyer v. McKee, 19 Ill. App. 109.

when a creditor represents to the debtor that he owns a certain debt[94] or that a debt apparently due to him is in reality due to a third party,[95] he must make good these representations. A composition deed will not prevent the debtor, in equity at least, from recovering the amount paid because of overcharges by a creditor in settling an account under the composition.[96]

B. Preferences — 1. Invalidity of Secret Preference — a. Good Faith and Equality Required. The policy of the law demands of those who enter into a composition that they shall exercise the utmost good faith toward each other;[97] and in the absence of an express stipulation to the contrary there is in every composition an implied agreement that the creditors who enter into it shall share alike, or on the terms and in the exact proportions stated in the composition itself, and that no one shall receive more than the others, without the assent of the others, or more than the latter have expressly assented to.[98]

b. Secret Preference Void and Unenforceable. Consequently a secret payment to one creditor of more than his due share under the composition, if a part of the composition with him, will not only render the composition void as to an innocent creditor,[99] but may be recovered back by the debtor or his assignees or trustees in bankruptcy or insolvency;[1] and any agreement with or promise to a creditor, made as a part of the composition transaction, and not disclosed to the other creditors, by which the former receives or expects to receive any advantage or benefit not conferred upon the others, is against public policy and void both at law and in equity, as a fraud upon them, and if executory cannot be enforced;[2]

When a creditor induces others to agree to a composition on the faith of false representations that he owns no other bills or that the bills for which he accepts the composition are the only bills of the debtor that he has, he cannot sue the debtor on others afterward, if this defense is properly pleaded and proved. Blackstone v. Wilson, 26 L. J. Exch. 229.

It is not necessary that all the creditors should have joined in the composition; it is sufficient if any one is defrauded. Beach v. Ollendorf, 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 41.

What will constitute a secret preference.— Any secret consideration or prospect of advantage moving one creditor which is purposely concealed from the others is a fraud upon them. Bastian v. Dreyer, 7 Mo. App. 332. An assignment of an insurance policy to a creditor in addition to his composition is fraudulent and void. Alsager v. Spaulding, 1 Arn. 181, 4 Bing. N. Cas. 407, 7 L. J. C. P. 225, 6 Scott 204, 33 E. C. L. 777.

forbids a party to allege his own fraud as a ground of relief, since the agreement itself is against public policy, and the parties are not regarded as in pari delicto.[3] A secret preference or advantage is void a fortiori, when it is made an express condition of the composition that no creditor shall receive more than the specified rate or amount.[4]

c. Source of Preference Immaterial. It makes no difference in what the advantage consists,[5] whence it comes, or who gives it; and the result will be the same, although it be given by a third party with no direct interest in the debtor's business,[6] and a fortiori if given by the debtor's agent.[7]

d. Invalidity Not Affected by Circumstances. The fraud of the creditor is the vital point,[8] and consequently the operation of the above rules will not be affected by the fact that the secret preference does not affect the debtor's assets,[9]

If on a composition one creditor who signs the deed stipulates that the debtor shall keep up a policy on his life for the ultimate payment of the balance such agreement is void unless the other creditors assent. Pfleger v. Browne, 28 Beav. 391. The payment of fifty per cent in cash at once instead of seventy per cent on time is a fraudulent preference if done secretly, and the payment so embarrasses the debtor that he cannot meet the payments to other creditors as they mature. Bean v. Amsinck, 10 Blatchf. (U. S.) 361, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 1,167, 12 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 379, 8 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 228. 19. Bills and notes.— A promissory note for twice the amount actually due, to enable the creditor to get a larger composition, is void as between the parties. Sternburg v. Bowman, 103 Mass. 325. A note given by an insolvent to one of his creditors, who was also one of the inspectors of his estate, as a condition of his assent to a composition, is void, and no action can be maintained thereon. Cartier v. Genser, 21 Quebec Super. Ct. 139. A promise made by the debtor's father to pay the debt in full if the creditor will sign is not binding, and a note given for the balance of the debt in pursuance of such a promise is void. Clement's Appeal, 49 Conn. 519, 52 Conn. 464. A note given for a secret preference is void, although given to a third party who pays the amount to the creditor, if the third party knew of the circumstances under which the note was given. Winn v. Thomas, 55 N. H. 294. A promise to pay the agent of a creditor an additional amount is invalid, and a note given for such an amount under a threat to defeat the composition is void in the hands of the payee and cannot be recovered on. Bullene v. Blain, 6 Biss. (U. S.) 22, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 2,124. The fact that all have not signed the composition agreement as required by its terms or that the debtor has defaulted in performance, will not validate a note given for a secret preference, if the default is waived and the composition actually carried out. Harvey v. Hunt, 119 Mass. 279. When the debtor gives notes to one creditor for the balance of his debt, to become due before any of the composition notes, the former will be void as between the parties, whether given before or after the composition is performed. Way v. Langley, 15 Ohio St. 392; Langley v. Van Allen, 3 Ont. L. Rep. 5. In Mare v. Warner, 3 Giff. 100, 7 Jur. N. S. 1228, 4 L. T. Rep. N. S. 351, a bankrupt trader compounded with his creditors for four shillings in the pound, giving to one as security his I O U for the whole debt to induce him to concur in annulling the bankruptcy. Subsequently, as consideration for a loan, he exchanged the bond,[20] guaranty,[21] or any other security or obligation[22] given to a creditor by the debtor or by a third person on his behalf, with the object of securing to the recipient a secret advantage over other creditors, is void, both at law and in equity, in the hands of the payee or of one who is not a bona fide[23] holder for value, and cannot be enforced by either;[24] and a court of equity, in a proper pro-

I O U for bills which he accepted. In an action by the debtor to set aside the bills, the court declared them to be invalid and ordered them to be delivered up but without costs. To the same effect is Mare v. Earle, 3 Giff. 108, 7 Jur. N. S. 1230, 4 L. T. Rep. N. S. 352. In Wells v. Girling, 1 B. & B. 447, 4 Moore C. P. 78, 5 E. C. L. 733, the debtor gave a creditor a promissory note for the amount due, signed by himself and another, in consideration that the creditor would induce the other creditors to assent to the composition. The creditor failed to secure the composition and it was held that the agreement was void and that he could not recover on the note. In Harvey v. Hunt, 119 Mass. 279, in an action upon a promissory note by the payee against the maker, there was evidence that before the making of the note the plaintiff agreed to take thirty-five per cent of his debt and sign a composition deed; that he afterward deposited his claim with an attorney to whom the defendant, induced by fear of an attachment of his property, paid a part of the whole claim in cash, and the rest by the note in suit; and that the plaintiff subsequently signed a composition deed, by which the creditors agreed to take thirty-five per cent of their claims, which was signed by "substantially all" the creditors, and was to be void unless the composition was paid within seven days after the date of the deed. The plaintiff's signature to the deed was affixed after the expiration of the seven days and his signature preceded those of a majority of the creditors who signed. The trial judge instructed the jury that if, after the plaintiff agreed to sign with other creditors of the defendant the deed of composition, the plaintiff's attorney, by threats of an attachment, collected of the defendant in cash a sum equal to or larger than the sum agreed in the deed to be taken in discharge, and obtained the note declared on and delivered it to the plaintiff, who in consideration that he had thus received the full amount of his debt, affixed his signature to the deed, the jury would be warranted in finding that the note was without consideration; but that if there was no relation between the plaintiff's signing the deed and the giving the note, and if this was an independent contract for the payment of the defendant's debt to the plaintiff, irrespective of any promise to sign the same and of the act of signing, the note was for a good consideration. It was held that this instruction was correct; that the evidence justified the jury in finding that the note was signed upon the understanding that the deed should be signed, and that the validity of the consideration was to be tested by the object with which the contract was entered into and not by the number of persons actually deceived by the plaintiff's signature.

20. Bonds.— A bond given without the knowledge of the other creditors to secure the payment to one creditor of more than his share under the composition is void and cannot be enforced. McFarland v. Garber, 10 Ind. 151; Lee v. Sellers, 81 Pa. St. 473; Cecil v. Plaistow, 1 Anstr. 202; Spurret v. Spiller, 1 Atk. 105, 26 Eng. Reprint 69; Eastbrook v. Scott, 3 Ves. Jr. 456. And a judgment entered on a warrant of attorney contained in such a bond is equally void and unenforceable. Loucheim's Appeal, 67 Pa. St. 49.

21. Guarantee and surety.— A guarantee to one creditor only of his share of the composition or of any additional sum will not bind the guarantor. Clement's Appeal, 49 Conn. 519, 52 Conn. 464; Morrison v. Schlesinger, 10 Ind. App. 665, 38 N. E. 493; Bannantine v. Cantwell, 27 Mo. App. 658; Clay v. Ray, 17 C. B. N. S. 188, 112 E. C. E. 493.

22. Other securities.— The same rules apply to a check (Bradshaw v. Bradshaw, 9 M. & W. 29), a mortgage (Feldman v. Gamble, 26 N. J. Eq. 494), and a judgment note (Gibbon v. Bellas, 2 Phila. (Pa.) 390, 14 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 327).

holder (unless a bona fide purchaser for value) from proceeding thereon.[26] A non-negotiable security will be equally void and unenforceable, even in the hands of a bona fide purchaser for value.[27] But a bona fide holder for value may enforce a negotiable security, even though it be given as a secret preference.[28] Parol evidence is admissible to show that a note or other security was given secretly and fraudulently.[29]

2. Recovery of Secret Preference — a. When Recoverable — (i) By Debtor — (a) Amount Paid Creditor. The debtor may recover from the creditor, by bill in equity, or without a formal rescission, by action at law for money paid, any sum that the creditor has received from him by way of secret preference, if the payment was such as the law regards as involuntary,[30] and may also recover the proceeds of such a fraudulent preference, if other than money.[31]

(b) Amount Paid Holder of Negotiable Security. If a note or other negotiable security given as a secret preference is enforced by a bona fide holder, the debtor may recover from the creditor to whom the security was given, in an action for money had and paid out to the use of the latter, the amount which he has been compelled to pay upon it;[32] and when a secret preference is given a creditor by a third party, and the composition bills or notes are negotiated and the debtor is compelled to pay them, he can recover from the creditor the amount received by him in excess of the composition.[33]

be recovered by the debtor's assignees or trustees in bankruptcy or insolvency, either at law or in equity.[34]

(III) BY CREDITORS. It has been said that the other creditors may by bill in equity on the principle of following a trust fund recover from a creditor fraudulently preferred whatever he has received from the debtor by way of secret preference.[35] But this rule can apply only where the fund can be traced, and in those jurisdictions only where the assets of a debtor are regarded as a trust fund for his creditors, unless perhaps also where the debtor has proposed to assign all his property in trust for his creditors.[36]

b. When Not Recoverable — (I) BY DEBTOR OR HIS ASSIGNEES, ETC. Neither the debtor nor his assignees or trustees can recover a secret preference, if it was given voluntarily,[37] if the composition was procured by fraud or by Bankr. Reg. 228, a partner compounded with the firm creditors, calling them "his" creditors, and signed the composition notes with the firm names. The creditors regarded the firm as dissolved, and its assets as placed in the partner's hands for settlement. The partner paid out firm funds in fraud of the firm creditors and was afterward declared a bankrupt. It was held that his assignees in bankruptcy could recover in the interest of the firm creditors the sums so paid in fraud of their rights.

The facts that the composition deed was not to be binding unless all should sign — and all did not sign, and that the creditor's agent was authorized to sign only after all the others had signed, will not prevent a recovery by the debtor's assignees from the creditor of a fraudulent preference. Bean v. Amsinck, 10 Blatchf. (U. S.) 361, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 1,167, 12 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 379, 8 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 228.

36. In Montgomery Bank v. Ohio Buggy Co., 110 Ala. 360, 18 So. 273, upon the invitation of a debtor in embarrassed circumstances, his creditors met and entered into an agreement between themselves and the debtor to extend their demands upon the promise by the latter that they should be paid in four instalments, and upon condition that the debtor should incur no new indebtedness pending the extension, and if such new indebtedness should be incurred, then all the claims so extended should become due and collectable. Upon the happening of the contingency provided for in the agreement, by the contracting of new indebtedness by the debtor, some of the assenting creditors took from the debtor payment of their claims by a conveyance of his property. It was held that the property so conveyed was not, in the hands of the creditors to whom it was conveyed, a trust fund for the equal benefit of all the creditors, and that such creditors did not become by implication trustees in possession of the property so conveyed to them, for the benefit of all the assenting creditors. See also Montgomery Bank v. Ohio Buggy Co., 100 Ala. 626, 13 So. 621.

Rule illustrated.— When a payment over the amount of the composition is made after the composition is paid and a release given it cannot be recovered back or counterclaimed, although made in pursuance of a prior secret promise. Smith v. Zeigler, 17 N. Y. Suppl. 338, 44 N. Y. St. 50. A payment of a bill given for a secret preference after it has been dishonored is voluntary, and cannot be recovered. Rep. 5 [affirming 32 Ont. 216] the defendant, on entering into an extension agreement with other creditors, took from the debtor, without the knowledge of the other creditors, notes at short dates for a large portion of his claim in favor of his nominee. These notes were paid at maturity and shortly after the debtor made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, the general extension payments not having been met. It was held that the payments on the short notes were voluntary, and that the other parties to the extension agreement, suing in their own names and in the name of an assignee under an order, could not recover them from the defendant.

false representations,[38] or if the debtor has not performed the requirements of the composition.[39]

(II) By Third Parties. A third party who gives a note for a secret preference to induce a composition and is compelled to pay its amount to a bona fide holder cannot recover from the creditor, although the transaction is fraudulent, as he is a mere volunteer;[40] and a guarantor of a debt, who has paid a creditor the difference between the composition and the debt to induce the composition, and then has drawn a bill on the debtor to reimburse himself, cannot recover on the bill, although the debtor may have accepted it.[41]

3. Rights of Innocent Creditors — a. Recovery on Original Debt. A fraudulent preference of one creditor renders the composition null and void as to all innocent creditors, and they may sue for and recover their original claims or the balance of those claims over what they may have received under the composition,[42] or file a petition in bankruptcy if circumstances warrant,[43] or, if judgment creditors, issue execution[44] without returning or offering to return what they have received under the composition, since their right of action is not one of rescission for the fraud, but on contract for the original debt, revived by the failure of the composition because of the fraud;[45] and they may declare on their original evidences of indebtedness, although delivered up under the composition, and therefore out of their possession.[46] But a fraudulent preference does not ipso facto deprive an innocent creditor of his rights under the composition; the debtor cannot set up its invalidity as against such a creditor, and an innocent creditor may therefore at his option insist on the performance of the composition according to its terms, in so far as he is concerned.[47]

b. Equitable Remedies. The injured creditors may if they prefer instead of suing at law on their original debts sue in equity to set aside the composition;[48] and in such a suit the court may also order the notes or other evidences of debt originally held by the creditors to be redelivered to them, and decree payment thereof.[49] Execution of a judgment confessed as a secret preference may be enjoined and the payment in full of the debt of the injured creditor be decreed in one proceeding.[50]

306; 8 Centr. L. J. 351. But see Page v. Carter, 16 N. H. 254, 42 Am. Dec. 726, where it was held that the other creditors could not sue if the preferred creditor did not come in until after they had signed.

Illustrations.—"Nothing less than the strictest compliance with the terms of the proposed composition on the part of the debtor, and on the part of the other creditors also, can bind him. The most perfect good faith is required of all. Any preference of one creditor over another, whether that preference relates to the amount to be paid him, to the time when it is to be paid, or to the manner of securing its prompt payment, taints the whole contract and renders it void." Per Burwell, J., in Zell Guano Co. v. Emry, 113 N. C. 85, 89, 18 S. E. 89. St. 432] it was said that innocent creditors would be released only when the agreement for secret preference is executed, and that if it is executory merely they will still be bound; but this dictum stands alone and is not supported by either reason or authority. But when an insolvent firm had gone into the hands of a receiver, and the receiver in submitting to the creditors a proposition for settlement at fifty cents on the dollar stated that the settlement would involve the necessity of dismissing all suits, attachments, etc., it was held that the settlement was not invalidated so as to entitle other creditors to sue for their original debts, by his payment, in addition to the stipulated dividend, of the attorney's fees incurred by certain creditors in attachment suits previously commenced. It has been suggested in some cases that an individual creditor should not be permitted in any case to sue for his debt alone, but that the only proceeding should be by bill in equity to set aside the composition for the benefit of all, as only in this way can the vital element of equality be preserved. Cheveront v. Textor, 53 Md. 295; Evans v. Bell, 15 Lea (Tenn.) 569. But this clearly rests upon a double error: (1) that a rescission is necessary, which is clearly not the law; and (2) that the composition stands, notwithstanding the fraud, whereas the fraud avoids it as to the innocent creditor. See supra, XI, B, 1, b; XI, B, 3, a.

e. Effect of Ignorance of Debtor. Some cases hold that a secret preference will render the composition invalid as to an innocent creditor, even though the debtor was ignorant of the giving of the preference.[51] But others have adopted what would seem to be a more equitable rule, holding that a preference given by a third party, not the agent of the debtor, of which the debtor is ignorant, although void and unenforceable as to the creditor to whom it is given, will not avoid the composition as between the debtor and innocent creditors.[52]

d. What Creditors Are Not Affected. But if the other creditors knew of the secret preference at the time they entered into the composition or if ignorant of it then have accepted payment of the composition, or of an instalment thereof after becoming aware of the fraud practised on them, they cannot repudiate the composition and sue to set it aside or to recover on their original claims.[53] The Reasons for this doctrine.— "Where one of the creditors gets, as a price of signing the agreement a preference over the other creditors, it is immaterial whether he gets it from the debtor or from a third person, or whether he gets it with the knowledge of the debtor, or whether the debtor is wholly innocent of it. By receiving such a preference he commits a fraud on the other creditors; and the case falls within the principle that where a party to a contract conceals or misrepresents a material matter which forms the whole or a part of the inducement upon which the other contracting parties enter into the contract, this avoids the contract. Pulsford v. Richards, 17 Beav. 87, 17 Jur. 865, 22 L. J. Ch. 559, 19 Eng. L. & Eq. 387. It is a misrepresentation or concealment dans locum contractui — as to the thing which gave occasion to the contract; therefore it avoids the contract. The creditors who sign such an agreement act, in a measure, upon the faith of each other's judgment, and they suppose, and rightfully suppose, that the judgment of each of the other creditors is influenced by the same considerations which influence their own judgment; and they are cheated by any creditor who is influenced by the motive of a benefit in which they do not share, and the knowledge of which is concealed from them. . . . It is said that this view of the law works a hardship upon the defendant, who is innocent of any wrong. The answer is, that it is no hardship for a man to be compelled to pay his honest debts in full, though it may be hard for him to do it. He agreed to do it when he contracted the debts, and he stands under a continual moral obligation to do it, until he has done it. It is a greater hardship for his creditors to be compelled to take a part of what is due them in discharge of the whole, and the law ought not to compel them to do this, except upon a mutual agreement, entirely open and fair, in which each one gets what the agreement purports to give him, and no more." Rule applied.—In Carey v. Barrett, 4 C. P. D. 379, at the time of the composition it was known that the debtor was being sued for a small sum; and it was held that the subsequent payment of this claim in full before the cause was ripe for trial was not a fraud upon the other creditors, since it was made under pressure and not in pursuance of a prior arrangement for a preference. And in Continental Nat. Bank v. McGeoch, 92 Wis. 296, 66 N. W. 606, where the question was whether the plaintiff bank, when it accepted the composition and executed a release in full, knew that the claim of another creditor, who was a party to said agreement, had been paid in full, a copy of a Sunday issue of a newspaper giving an account of the securing in full of such claim was held to be admissible in evidence, where both the president and cashier of the plaintiff were accustomed to take and read that paper, al-

general rule also applies only in favor of those who enter into the composition; and a secret preference will not be held fraudulent (except where all preferences are fraudulent) as to those who do not join.[54]

4. Rights of Creditor Secretly Preferred — a. Repudiation of Composition. A creditor who has received a secret preference cannot repudiate the composition on the ground of the fraud in which he has participated[55] nor on the ground of a like preference given to another creditor without his knowledge or assent;[56] but if the composition is void or voidable for other reasons not connected with his preference, operating on the inception of the composition, he can recover the balance of his original debt over the preference, or over the preference and what he has received under the composition, as the case may be, notwithstanding his own fraud,[57] although a breach of performance of the composition will not vitiate a release given by a secretly preferred creditor,[58] especially if he has received the full amount of the composition as a secret preference.[59]

b. Enforcement of Composition. There is an irreconcilable conflict of authority on the question whether a composition is so far invalidated by a fraudulent preference that the creditor so preferred cannot recover the amount due him under the composition. The weight of authority favors the rule that he cannot recover;[60] and this rule would seem to be supported also by reason and justice.

though there was no evidence that either of them read or received that particular issue; and evidence was also held admissible that a majority of the plaintiff's directors were members of the board of trade of which the debtor was a member, that its cashier was frequently there, and that the securing of the other creditors in full became publicly and generally known on said board of trade and in the city; and it was further held that the jury was properly allowed to take into consideration the matters above mentioned, with other circumstances tending to prove knowledge on the part of the plaintiff, where they were also instructed that plaintiff was not chargeable with the knowledge of its directors acting as individuals, or with the knowledge of its officers having nothing to do with the composition.

Applications, and reason for rule.— A creditor fraudulently preferred cannot sue out a petition in bankruptcy against the debtor, since the original debt is released by the composition, and his claim under the composition is invalidated by the fraud. Matter of Cross, 4 De G. & Sm. 364; Ex p. Phillips, 36 Wkly. Rep. 567. Nor can he prove in bankruptcy. Leicester v. Rose, 4 East 372, 1 Smith K. B. 41; Ex p. Sadler, 15 Ves. Jr. 52, 10 Rev. Rep. 18. "It is quite immaterial that the funds to be distributed among other creditors are not diminished or rendered less available in consequence of the secret agreement. The fraud consists not in causing any injury to the assets of the debtor, or in reducing the share or interest to which the creditors are entitled under the composition, but in the attempt to induce them to enter into an agreement for an equal dividend on their debts in ignorance of a private bargain, whereby a creditor is to receive an additional sum to that to which he may be entitled in common with all the creditors. Such an agreement vitiates the whole transaction, so that the party can claim no benefit under a composition into which he entered in consequence of such corrupt or fraudulent contract." Per Bigelow, C. J., in Frost v. Gage, 3 Allen (Mass.) 560, 562. In Bannantine v. Cantwell, 27 Mo. App. 658, it was held that in an action on a composition agreement, which was in fact invalid owing to a secret preference given to the plaintiff, the answer need not set up the fraud in the composition, since it is incumbent on the plaintiff to show that the condition upon which the defendant's promise to pay was dependent had been fulfilled.

But the trend of modern decisions is toward the more lenient rule that the composition stands as between the preferred creditor and the debtor, and that the former can recover the balance of the composition over the secret preference.[61] The preferred creditor cannot prove in bankruptcy for an independent debt, however, without surrendering the preference;[62] and if he has received the full amount due under the composition, by way of secret preference, either wholly or partially, he cannot recover anything under the composition.[63] It seems that a creditor who gives a fraudulent preference to another forfeits his rights under the composition.[64]

5. Rights of Third Parties. A fraudulent preference will release a third party who has made himself responsible in any way for the performance of the conditions of the composition agreement by the debtor, either as guarantor,[65]

App. 600, and distinguishing Hefter v. Cahn, 73 Ill. 296], it was held that a creditor who refuses to enter into an arrangement, previously agreed to by all the other creditors, to accept certain real estate of the debtor as full payment of all their demands, until he has obtained a bond from the debtor, with outside security, for any deficiency on his claim, is not guilty of such fraud as will deter him from enforcing the trust in equity, although the other creditors were ignorant of the bond. In In re Chaplin, 115 Fed. 162, a debtor in compounding with his creditors transferred to one, as a secret preference, a note of a third person, which the creditor applied, at its face value, on his debt, receiving payment on the balance due him at the composition rate. The debtor was afterward adjudged a bankrupt, and the creditor sought to prove other debts against his estate. It was held that in determining the amount of the fraudulent preference received by him in the composition, he must be charged with the note at its face value, regardless of the amount which he actually realized from it.

62. Under the federal bankruptcy act of 1898, when a creditor of a bankrupt has received a fraudulent preference, recoverable by the trustee, such preference will not be treated as a set-off, either to reduce the amount of his claim, or against the dividend to be received thereon, but the amount must be surrendered to the trustee before the creditor will be permitted to prove an independent debt. In re Chaplin, 115 Fed. 162.

63. Ex p. Oliver, 4 De G. & Sm. 354. In Knight v. Hunt, 5 Bing. 432, 7 L. J. C. P. O. S. 165, 3 M. & P. 18, 30 Rev. Rep. 692, 15 E. C. L. 656, the plaintiff, who had refused to sign an agreement to receive a composition from the debtor of ten shillings in the pound, signed the agreement upon the debtor's brother offering to supply him with coal to the amount of the other ten shillings. The other creditors knew nothing of the coal transaction. It was held that after receiving the coal, the plaintiff could not recover on a promissory note given for the ten shillings composition.

64. Where a voluntary assignment for the benefit of creditors has been executed by a debtor, upon the delivery to him of a release from his debts, a creditor who, by a secret agreement not to claim any portion of the proceeds of the estate, induced the assignee, who was also a creditor, to sign the release and to procure the signatures of other creditors thereto, cannot maintain an action against the assignee to recover the dividend upon his debt. surety,[66] or indorser of the composition notes,[67] from the obligation thus assumed; especially when that obligation was undertaken at the inducement of the creditor who receives the fraudulent preference.[68]

6. What Preferences Are Not Fraudulent — a. In General. A preferential payment not connected with the composition will not affect it;[69] and consequently a payment of more than the composition rate to one who is not a party thereto will not invalidate the composition agreement.[70] Vice versa, one who is not a party to the composition cannot complain of a preference as a fraud upon him, except where all preferences are fraudulent.[71] A recovery by a creditor of his full debt, on the ground of fraud practised upon him, is not such a preference as will avoid a composition as to others,[72] although a collusive recovery in an action to which a good defense might be made by the debtor would doubtless be fraudulent; and the receipt of less than the composition is not a fraud upon other creditors.[73] The debtor may pledge a part of his assets to a creditor to secure the payment of a new loan made to assist him in paying the composition.[74]

b. Where There Is No Composition. Where there is no general agreement or understanding, but a series of separate compromises, a secret preference given to one creditor will not operate as a fraud upon the others,[75] and consequently, when the transaction is a mere sale of claims, a secret preference will not vitiate

The other creditors were not informed of this arrangement. It was held that the security given was not fraudulent, in the absence of proof that other creditors were induced to believe that the individual claim would be included in the composition. So where the debtor pleads a composition, and that the security sued on was given as a secret preference, but does not aver that the plaintiffs agreed to take it or acted thereunder, the security will be held valid, and the debtor will not be allowed to set up any other fraud than that alleged. 7. Validity of Preference After Composition — a. Prior Agreement For Preference. An agreement, promise, or security for the payment of all or a part of the balance of the debt compounded, given to a creditor after the composition is effected, will be void and unenforceable as a fraud upon the others if given in pursuance of a secret agreement or understanding existing at the time of the composition;[80] and even if there be no such agreement or understanding it will nevertheless be equally unenforceable — as a fraud, if the composition is executory and not yet performed, and as without consideration if the composition is executed or performed, unless there is a new consideration, or the promise is under

It did not appear that the trustees had closed their trust or that they held any dividend to which the plaintiffs were entitled; but it did appear that they were personally able to make good the requirements of the agreement. It was held that the agreement and conveyance amounted in substance to a composition, that it was intended that the trustees should convert the property into money and pay creditors pro rata, and that all debts should participate; and that although the debtor itself might not apply the funds to overpayment of any creditor, yet that the purchase of claims by trustees, if purchased in good faith and held for an equal percentage only, would not vitiate the arrangement.

(Pa.) 86, a creditor, who had accepted the composition notes, subsequently surrendered them, and took other and better security from the debtor instead. It was held that this was not a fraud upon the other creditors, unless it was done pursuant to an agreement with the debtor made prior to or contemporaneous with the execution of the deed.

XII. COMPOSITION THROUGH TRUSTEES.[84]

A. In General. When a composition is effected by an assignment to trustees all the debtor's property should be assigned unless otherwise agreed.[85] The deed will not be invalidated by the fact that some of the trustees have not executed it[86] or that the amount of a debt is not set opposite the creditor's name in the schedule;[87] but a covenant not to sue, if the trustees shall fairly account for the effects assigned, will not operate as a release if the trustees refuse to account.[88]

B. Powers and Duties of Trustees. The trustees are not the agents of either the debtor or the creditors;[89] and they cannot complete a contract by the debtor, in which his assigns are not named.[90] It is their duty to inform the creditors of the state of the trust fund and of the proceedings under the deed; and if they fail or refuse to do so, they must pay the costs of legal proceedings by the creditors to obtain such information.[91] When a trustee who is also a creditor executes a composition deed containing a general release, his debt will be extinguished and he cannot claim that he executed the deed only as trustee.[92] A trustee may buy in the trust property from a purchaser to whom he has bona fide sold it, especially if the creditors agree.[93] The trustees are of course responsible to the creditors for their management of the trust property;[94] and

89. The trustees are mere stock-holders and not the servants of either party; and consequently, when the maker of composition notes delivers them to the trustees, notifying the latter not to give them to a particular creditor, that creditor cannot maintain an action of detinue against the maker, since the notes are not in his possession, either actually or constructively. Rep. 219, a trading firm assigned their estate, stock, debts due to the firm, etc., to trustees, upon trust for sale and distribution, with power to carry on the business; but the trustees did not thereby undertake to discharge the liabilities of the firm. The deed of assignment contained a proviso, making it void if the firm became bankrupt before a certain day. The plaintiffs, who at the date of the assignment were creditors of the firm, afterward became indebted to the trustees, who continued to carry on the business. The firm became bankrupt before the day named. It was held that the plaintiffs had no right to a set-off, but that the result would have been different if the plaintiffs had been debtors instead of creditors at the date of the assignment, and had afterward become creditors of the trustees.

The trustee of a composition deed without a cessio bonorum is a mere trustee of the covenant to pay the composition and should not be made a party to a suit to ascertain the liability of the debtor on a note. Moye v. Sparrow, 22 L. T. Rep. N. S. 154, 18 Wkly. Rep. 400.

93. In Dover v. Buck, 5 Giff. 57, a trustee for creditors under a deed of composition bona fide sold the property to a stranger, from whom he subsequently repurchased it at the same price. The sale was confirmed by all the creditors who executed the deed, and by two out of three of the assignors. A bill by the third assignor to set aside the sale was dismissed without costs.

94. In Albany Nat. Bank v. Moore, 21 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 269, a trader in insolvent circumstances made an assignment of his property to several of his principal creditors, in trust for the benefit of his creditors generally. Afterward it was agreed that the creditors should accept twenty per cent of their demands and discharge the debtor, whereupon the plaintiffs and other creditors executed a deed to carry out this agreement. Before payment of the composition, however, the trustees reassigned the property to the debtor on his undertaking to pay the several credwill not be released until after they have accounted.[95] The attorney of the trustees may be allowed a reasonable fee out of the fund.[96]

C. Rights of Creditors. Private instructions given by the debtor to the trustees cannot render the terms of the deed ineffective.[97] But a creditor cannot enforce directly any right dependent upon the action of the trustees, but must take proper proceedings to compel them to act;[98] and one who is not a creditor at the date of the deed cannot enforce its trusts, unless by its terms it applies to creditors who may come in subsequently.[99]

XIII. COMPOSITION BY THIRD PARTY ON BEHALF OF DEBTOR.

A composition may be validly effected by a third party on behalf of the debtor, whether or not that third party has any interest in the debtor's estate or business and whether or not the debtor participates in the composition;[1] although of course the debtor will not be bound by a composition made without his assent, and may repudiate it if he chooses. A composition by a third party often takes the form of a purchase and sale of the claims of creditors; and it is sometimes difficult to decide whether such a transaction is a true composition or merely a sale of the claims to the third party, without the incidents of a composition. It would seem to be well settled, however, that the criterion by which to decide this question is, Was the third party really acting on behalf of the debtor? If so, the transaction is a composition;[2] otherwise a mere itors the amount of their claims, which he did pay to the trustees, but failed to pay to the plaintiffs. It was held that the trustees were liable to make good to the plaintiffs the sum coming to them, if the property which had been assigned to them by the debtor was sufficient to pay the amount of the composition agreed on; and that an inquiry as to this should be directed to a master if desired by the trustees.

It was held that until trustees had given notice, a creditor under the deed was not entitled to serve a bankruptcy notice and present a petition on account of the debt due him. In re Clement, 3 Morr. Illustration of such a composition.— In Cobb v. Fogg, 166 Mass. 466, 44 N. E. 534, it appeared that a firm which had failed attempted to effect a compromise with its creditors and for that purpose, in pursuance of recommendations adopted at a creditors' meeting, an agreement was prepared, by the terms of which the creditors were to accept thirty-five per cent in full satisfaction of their claims, to be paid by notes satisfactorily indorsed, and all creditors were to become parties thereto. This agreement was signed by many of the creditors, including the firm of Cobb & Co., the plaintiffs in the suit; but as several of the larger creditors refused to sign the composition fell through and was abandoned. This fact, however, was not made known to the plaintiffs. After the abandonment of the composition the debtor firm executed an agreement with the defendant, John S. Fogg, a creditor, by the terms of which the latter was to settle the liabilities of the firm and its members "under a composition with their creditors," by selling the partnership property and reimbursing himself from the proceeds for all payments made by him for which he should become liable "under the terms of the composition." After this agreement was executed Fogg negotiated an agreement with the creditors, which was accepted and signed by a number of them, including the plaintiffs, and which recited that the sale.[3] When a third party compounds, time is of the essence, and those who do not come in within the time limited cannot share in the benefits of the composition;[4] the creditor must rescind and restore before he can repudiate the composition because of the fraud of the debtor or others than the third party himself;[5] and the agreement between the debtor and the third party is evidence against the latter.[6]

XIV. COMPOSITION BY AND WITH PARTNERS.[7]

A. Composition of Debts Due Firm. A partner may compound a debt due to the firm so as to bind his fellow-partners, even by an agreement under seal;[8] creditors signing it, "in consideration of thirty-five cents on the dollar of the said indebtedness of said firm to us respectively paid by John S. Fogg, . . . hereby sell and assign to the said John S. Fogg all claims, demands, and causes of action which we respectively have against said firm, or against any or either of the members thereof." The signature of the plaintiffs to this agreement was obtained by representations made by Fogg's agent that it was made in pursuance of the composition first attempted, that it was necessary to carry out the composition, and that it was one of the instruments which by the terms of that composition the plaintiffs were bound to sign. The defendant Fogg took an assignment of all the claims against the firm, paying for some of them more than thirty-five per cent, indorsed and delivered to some of the creditors, including the plaintiffs, the same notes which had been prepared to be indorsed under the composition agreement, managed and disposed of the property, reimbursed himself, transferred the balance in accordance with the agreement, and delivered up to the firm all the claims which had been assigned to him, except the promissory note which constituted the claim of the plaintiffs. On a bill in equity by the plaintiffs against Fogg and the members of the debtor firm to compel Fogg to deliver up the note and to obtain a decree against the firm for payment of the balance due on it, it was held that the facts warranted a finding that the transaction by which the plaintiffs surrendered their note was not a sale by them to Fogg but was part of a composition settlement.

In Henry v. Murphy, 54 Ala. 246, J. R. Abrams, the surviving partner of an insolvent firm, offered to surrender the assets of the firm and his individual assets to the firm creditors, in order to obtain a discharge. Subsequently one S. J. Murphy, who was one of the largest creditors, and other creditors of the firm, met together and agreed in writing among themselves to accept from Murphy fifty cents on the dollar and release Abrams. This agreement was submitted by Murphy to all other creditors, and all joined in it except J. C. Caldwell, the plaintiffs' testator, who was a judgment creditor. Abrams then made a conveyance of his entire estate to Murphy upon the conditions set forth in the creditors' agreement, which were recited and assented to by him in the conveyance. It was held that the agreement and conveyance, strictly speaking, did not constitute a composition, but a sale and transfer by the debtor of his property in consideration that the creditor, to whom the conveyance was made, would release him from all his debts and pay a certain percentage of his liabilities.

and a surviving partner may a fortiori compound the claims of the firm.[9] But the intent to compound the claims of the firm must be clear, and a release by a partner of all actions, claims, and demands will not release a debt due the firm, if the partner had an individual debt.[10]

B. Composition of Claims Against Firm — 1. In General. One partner may compound with the firm creditors; and at common law, in the absence of an express reservation, such a composition will release all the members of the firm,[11] although the compounding creditor alone will be liable on the covenants in the deed.[12] But the creditors may reserve their remedies against the other partners,[13] and in several of the United States it is expressly provided by statute that a composition with one or more partners shall not release the rest.[14]

2. What Debts Not Discharged. A composition by or on behalf of a firm will not release the partners from their individual debts either to third parties [15] or to the firm,[16] or discharge a partner able to pay who conceals that fact.[17]

3. Effect of Fraud. The fraudulent representations or acts of one partner will invalidate a composition by the firm,[18] and the concealment of the existence of a partnership will vitiate a composition by one partner, and enable the creditor to sue the firm.[19]

XV. RESCISSION OF COMPOSITION.

Land Co. v. Peck, 112 Ill. 408, a judgment creditor, in a general composition between the debtor and creditors, accepted bonds secured by deed of trust in lieu of his judgment and gave an order to his attorney to satisfy the same, upon the faith of which other creditors surrendered their securities and also accepted bonds so secured, and the judgment creditor acquiesced in such exchange for about three years. In subsequent litigation where it was material to the interests of the other creditors that the transaction should stand, it was held that he was estopped from repudiating his action, and could not have it canceled merely on the ground that he did not understand the terms of the trust deed securing the bonds, and his judgment was set aside.

24. Jones v. Wright, 71 Ill. 61.

No creditor can, upon the ground of mistake as to the amount of his claim or the condition of the security therefor, avoid an agreement of composition, made upon consideration of the like agreement of the other creditors, although there has been no meeting of the creditors nor a formal promise to abide by the agreement. Johnson v. Parker, 34 Wis. 596, 665, where Dixon, C. J., said: "This court is of opinion that agreements of the kind cannot be impeached on such ground. We think that the principles of public policy forbid it; for it is manifest that all confidence in such arrangements, and all the benefits to be derived from them, would be destroyed if it were otherwise. No creditor could enter into them or into subsequent business transactions with the debtor, with any assurance of safety, if such grounds of impeachment were held to exist. The relations of confidence between the different compounding creditors are such, and their rights and interests have become so interwoven and bound together by the act of compromise, that each one should be and is estopped from denying the validity of the agreement for causes like this. For the peace and safety of all concerned, each one must be held concluded by his own mistakes so committed. It is a species of negligence on his part, more or less gross according to circumstances, and savoring somewhat of bad faith or a vicious indifference to the rights of others, for one creditor, not knowing the facts with regard to his own claim nor taking the trouble to ascertain them, to draw the other creditors into the composition in the belief that his claim is fully and truly represented and released; and such negligence ought to preclude him from afterwards showing his claims to have been different, or throwing doubt and suspicion upon the settlement on such grounds. It is indispensable to such settlements, and that any good may come from them, that this rule should be held and adhered to, with regard to the representations, express or implied, of the individual creditors, respecting the amounts of their several claims and the fact that such claims were extinguished by the compromise. One creditor has no right to cast the burden of his own mistakes upon the others, or to insist that they shall suffer loss, or their pecuniary rights or interests be put in jeopardy in consequence of such mistakes. And so strong and well-sustained, in our judgment, is this principle of public policy that we do not think the mistaken creditor should be permitted to come in at all with evidence to show his own mere mistake. We do not think the way should be open at all for him to enter and speculate as to whether other creditors may sustain loss or be injured by reason of his being allowed to correct or to take advantage of his own mistakes. The presumption, conclusive in its nature under the circumstances, is, that the other creditors will be so injured. To open the door for particular inquiry into the facts regarding the situation and rights of the other ors;[25] and a rescission or repudiation will not be justified by the assent of some only of the others concerned.[26] But in case of fraud or misrepresentation,[27] or secret preference of another creditor,[28] the injured party may rescind; and when no time is fixed for performance by the debtor the creditor may rescind if the debtor delays performance for an unreasonable time.[29]

XVI. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE OF COMPOSITION.[30]

A composition agreement, like a compromise, may be specifically enforced, if valid and subsisting,[31] at the suit of any one of the parties thereto[32] or of his personal representatives,[33] either by bill in equity, asking for affirmative creditors, and to make the right of the mistaking creditor dependent on those facts, would lead to most tedious, complicated and expensive investigations and controversies; and sound public policy is clearly against it."

Y.) 462, it was held that where some of the creditors had agreed to accept a composition, but the debtors subsequently assigned for the benefit of their creditors, that they thereby waived their right to the composition, and remitted themselves to their original indebtedness.

26. The debtor's assent to a rescission by one creditor and the grant of better terms to him would be a fraud upon the other creditors and as such inoperative and of no effect. Howland v. Grant, 26 Can. Supreme Ct. 372.

The business was carried on for a time by the assignee, and a dividend was paid by him to the creditors out of the proceeds. Subsequently an arrangement was entered into between the committee, on behalf of the creditors represented by them, and the assignor, for a composition, upon the payment by the assignor to those creditors of a specified percentage of the portion of their claims remaining unpaid. The agreement also contained provision for the transfer by the assignee of the assigned estate, upon certain conditions, to the assignor, and for the continuance by the latter, under certain restrictions, of his former business, for the purpose of obtaining thereby the means of paying the amount of the composition. The estate was not, however, so transferred to the assignor, and the business was continued by the assignee, with the assistance of the assignor, and dividends were paid to the creditors out of the proceeds; but before the dividends so paid had reached the amount relief,[34] or by a bill for an injunction to prevent an attempted violation of the agreement for which there is no adequate remedy at law.[35] But a composition will not be enforced when made by an agent without authority[36] when the agreement does not comply with the requirements of the statute of frauds,[37] when all conditions are not complied with,[38] or when the debtor who seeks to enforce it has given a fraudulent preference to another creditor.[39] A separate agreement securing a secret advantage to some of the creditors will not be enforced.[40] A composition may be enforced after the death of the debtor by his personal representatives[41] but not by creditors who were not parties nor intended to be benefited by it.[42]

Construing the word "compounded" in the phrase "medical article compounded," etc., as used in section 20, of the war revenue act of 1898, the court said: "I cannot agree that it was employed in this act in a peculiar or technical sense. It does not appear to have, in the trade, any meaning other than 'mixed,' which is its common and ordinary one. It certainly has no special meaning with pharmacists which is generally understood and established, for those of them who have testified in this case have not agreed as to its proper application. ## I. DEFINITION.

Compounding a felony is defined to be the offense of taking a reward for forbearing to prosecute a felony; as where the party robbed takes his goods again, or other amends upon an agreement not to prosecute.[1]

"In criminal law, to compound a felony is to enter into an agreement, for a valuable consideration, not to prosecute a person for felony, or to show him favor in a prosecution, as where a person takes back goods which have been stolen from him, upon agreement not to prosecute." ## II. NATURE AND ELEMENTS OF THE OFFENSE.

A. Perversion of Public Justice. The gravamen of this offense consists in the stifling of a public prosecution or in some way perverting public justice;[2] hence the bare retaking of one's own goods which have been stolen would not constitute the offense unless some favor be shown the offender, or the retaking be done with an intent to in some way aid him.[3]

B. Agreement to Compound — 1. In General. The agreement not to prosecute and the acceptance of a reward therefor complete the offense, notwithstanding the party entering into the agreement afterward either voluntarily or through coercion by process of court does prosecute.[4] It is also amends upon an agreement not to prosecute, constitutes the compounding of the felony." Forshner v. Whitcomb, 44 N. H. 14, 16.

"To constitute that offence [compounding of felony] a man for a price or reward, paid or promised to him, must agree to stifle a public prosecution, or at least must agree not to be a complainant or prosecutor." Brittin v. Chegary, 20 N. J. L. 625, 630.

Distinguished from misprision of felony.— Misprision of felony consists in a mere concealment of the offense or a procuring of the concealment thereof, while in compounding of felony (or theft-bote) one takes his goods again or other amends not to prosecute. 1 Hawkins P. C. c. 59, § 5.

Synonymous with theft-bote.— At common law this offense was usually known as theft-bote. Com. v. Pease, 16 Mass. 96; Forshner v. Whitcomb, 44 N. H. 14; 1 Hawkins P. C. c. 59, § 5. "Theft bote, which is, where the party robbed not only knows the fellow, but also takes his goods again, or other amends upon agreement not to prosecute. This is frequently called compounding of felony; and formerly was held to make a man an accessary; but it is now punished only with fine and imprisonment." 4 Bl. Comm. 133 [quoted in Watson v. State, 29 Ark. 299, 301].

Rep. 431, holding that the offense therein shown did not stifle a public prosecution or elude the public's interests in bringing such an offender to justice by way of example to others, and therefore did not constitute this offense.

The underlying principle that the protection of public justice is the purpose of the law in punishing this offense is succinctly and tersely stated in Shaw v. Reed, 30 Me. 105, 109, where the court say: "If it be the duty of every man, it is more especially the duty of persons injured, who have caused criminal prosecutions to be commenced, to appear against offenders, and not to make bargains to allow them to escape conviction, if they or their friends will pay a sum of money to repair the injury. To decide that such bargains might be lawfully made, would be to lend a helping hand to make public justice venal. To procure a compensation to be made to the person injured, is a subordinate object to the State, in causing crimes to be punished. It causes crimes to be punished, that they may not be committed with impunity, and therefore, become more frequent; that the rights of property and the inviolability of the person may not become less secure; that persons may depend upon the execution of the laws, rather than resort to physical force for the preservation and protection of their rights."

Discharge of liability on bond.— The paying of money by a party to relieve himself from his liability on a bond for the appearance of a criminal would be unlawful as within the principle of the composition of a felony. Corley v. Williams, 1 Bailey (S. C.) 588.

The practice of advertising for returning goods stolen "no questions asked," was declared to be highly criminal as being a sort of compounding of felony, inasmuch as the goods by that means were returned to the right owner and a stop was put to the inquiry and prosecution of the felony, and thereby great encouragement was given to the commission of such offenses. 1 Hale P. C. 546 note. And by 25 Geo. II, c. 36, the making of an advertisement with these words or with words of the same purport subjected both the advertiser and the printer to a forfeiture of £50. "A man might conceivably make an illegal agreement not to prosecute and abstain from prosecuting for six years and then might immaterial to a prosecution for the offense that the compounding be done in good faith by the parties concerned.[5]

2. Consideration — a. Sufficiency. While the consideration for the compounding should be more than mere weak or compassionate motives it is not necessary that an actual pecuniary consideration should be exacted;[6] thus the acceptance of a promissory note from the guilty party would be a sufficient consideration.[7]

b. Necessity of Accrual to Defendant. It is not necessary that the consideration for the compounding should accrue to defendant. It may be taken for the benefit of another[8] or for the benefit of the public.[9]

C. Gravity of Offense Compounded. It is not necessary, to constitute this offense, that the offense compounded be a felony,[10] and although certain misdemeanors, chiefly affecting the individuals aggrieved and not the interest of the public, may be settled by private agreement,[11] the rule may be said to be now well settled[12] that the true test as to whether or not an offense may be com-turn round and prosecute after all in breach of the agreement. According to the contention he could not be guilty of the offence because he did ultimately prosecute, and if so it is difficult to see when such an offence can be said to be complete"). Compare Rex v. Stone, 4 C. & P. 379, 19 E. C. L. 563, which seems to be decided on the theory that the offense against the public is not the taking of money from the offender, but the allowing of such offender to escape without punishment; and that, if it appears that after the alleged compounding the party charged did prosecute the offender to the conviction, the offense was not complete.

pounded depends not upon the technical or legal name by which it is known, either specifically or as a class, but upon the publicity of the same — upon the fact that the compounding would affect the public's interests.

D. Necessity of Actual Commission of Preceding Offense. The actual commission of a preceding crime would seem to be essential to the offense of compounding the same, and in the majority of jurisdictions this is the view taken,[13] although in some the rule is otherwise.[14] Again in some jurisdictions the alleged perpetrator of the original offense need not be first tried and convicted,[15] nor need the proof of his guilt be conclusive enough to warrant a conviction,[16] but in other jurisdictions his previous conviction is necessary.[17]

E. As Affected by Statute. In many jurisdictions the parties may, by virtue of statute, compromise or compound certain offenses by the consent of the court or public officials.[18] Such provisions are, however, permissive rather than imperative; the propriety of permitting the compounding resting within the discretion of the court.[19]

III. BY WHOM COMMITTED.

It has been argued, from the definition of this offense usually given by the 58 E. C. L. 371 (where it is said: "Indeed it is very remarkable what very little authority there is to be found, rather consisting of dicta than decisions for the principle, that any compromise of a misdemeanour, or indeed of any public offence, can be otherwise than illegal. . . . common-law writers,[20] that it could be committed only by an owner of goods who had received them from the felon. This view, however, was never adopted by the courts[21] or by the legislative bodies in defining the offense.[22]

IV. INDICTMENT OR INFORMATION.[23]

A. In General. The necessity of alleging in the indictment the actual commission of a preceding offense or a failure to prosecute depends of course upon whether or not these elements are considered as requisite parts of the offense.[24] If they are so considered it is necessary that they be distinctly alleged;[25] if not the rule is otherwise.[26]

B. Sufficiency.[27] Where a knowledge of the actual commission of a crime is made necessary by statute, an information stating the circumstances of its commission and defendant's knowledge thereof is sufficient, although the word "actual" be omitted.[28] An information alleging a certain offense to be a compounding of a felony, but which is in fact bribery, will not sustain a verdict for the former offense.[29]

V. DEFENSES.[30]

A. In General. The subsequent arrest and prosecution for the offense compounded will not as a rule constitute a defense.[31] So a party indicted for compounding a larceny and agreeing to withhold evidence cannot plead acquittal of the person charged with the larceny in bar of his own conviction.[32] Again the fact that defendant, being an officer, was amenable under a specific section of the statute is not a defense to his indictment and punishment for this offense under another section which provides generally for this offense.[33]

B. Direction or Consent of Superior. It is not a defense for an officer of the law, who for a reward agrees not to prosecute a guilty party, to show that he acted under the direction of a superior officer and that he gave him the entire

But it must be observed that the writers of the passages to which I refer do not use any negative expression to the effect that the offence can only be committed by the owner of the goods."

consideration.[34] Nor will it avail that the compromise of the prosecution was entered into with the unauthorized consent of the magistrate before whom the indictment was laid.[35]

VI. EVIDENCE.

A. Admissibility. On the trial of an indictment for compounding a crime and agreeing to withhold evidence the acquittal of the principal offender is not admissible evidence in favor of the defense.[36] But the record of the conviction of the person compounded with is admissible, and is prima facie although not conclusive evidence that a felony has been committed by him.[37]

B. Sufficiency. It is not sufficient to show a state of facts from which defendant's guilt may be presumed; there must be proof that defendant did in fact obstruct or delay the prosecution;[38] but it is not necessary to prove that the party in so many words promised that he would stifle the prosecution.[39]

VII. PUNISHMENT.

A statutory punishment is usually provided where the offense has been defined or modified by statute; at common law the punishment was by fine and imprisonment.[40]

The written agreement, however, stated that defendant was satisfied, and suggested that such satisfaction be considered by the public officers. It was also shown that at the next term of court after the assault defendant was absent. It was held that the evidence was not sufficient to justify a verdict of guilty, as there was no proof that the prosecution was in fact discontinued, that defendant acted upon the proposals of M, or that the absence of defendant from court was in pursuance of any agreement that he should be absent.

I. DEFINITION.

A compromise is an agreement made between two or more parties as a settlement of matters in dispute.[1]

II. WHO MAY MAKE

A. In General. A valid compromise may be made by any parties between whom a controversy as to their respective rights exists,[2] and who are not under any disability to contract.[3] No degree of mental or physical weakness which leaves a party legal competency to act is of itself sufficient to avoid a settlement made with him.[4]

B. Persons Duly Authorized or Whose Acts Are Ratified. A compromise may be effected by persons representing and acting under the authority of the parties to a controversy, express or implied from their relations;[5] but no such sons, who for preventing or putting an end to a lawsuit, adjust their differences by mutual consent, in the manner which they agree on, and which every one of them prefers to the hope of gaining, balanced by the danger of losing." La. Rev. Civ. Code (1900), § 3071. See also Lampkins v. Vicksburg, etc., R. Co., 42 La. Ann. 997, 8 So. 530; Antoine v. Smith, 40 La. Ann. 560, 4 So. 321; Calhoun v. Lane, 39 La. Distinguished from composition with creditors see COMPOSITIONS WITH CREDITORS, ante, p. 409.

Distinguished from tender.— A tender admits absolutely the amount tendered as due; while an offer to compromise admits nothing, except that there is a dispute, and the party offering money by way of compromise may claim that nothing is due. Latham v. Hartford, 27 Kan. 249.

2. A county possesses the power by its proper officers to compromise pending litigation involving the title to its swamp-lands. Mills County v. Burlington, etc., R. Co., 47 Iowa 66.

Parties having claims against the United States for labor or service, or for personal property or materials furnished, which are disputed by the officers authorized to adjust the accounts, may compromise such claims and may accept a smaller sum than the contract price; and where the claimant voluntarily enters into a compromise and accepts a smaller sum and executes a discharge in full for the whole claim he cannot subsequently recover in the court of claims for any part of the claim voluntarily relinquished in the compromise. Mason v. U. S., 17 Wall. (U. S.) 67, 21 L. ed. 564.

Effect of subsequent bankruptcy.— Parties entered into an agreement for compromising a suit, and, pending a reference to chambers, one of the parties became bankrupt, and afterward the court approved of the compromise. It was held that the compromise was binding on the bankrupt from the date thereof, subject to confirmation by the court. Bousfield v. Bousfield, 31 Beav. 591.

3. As to capacity to contract generally see CONTRACTS.

Compromises invalid for want of mental capacity to contract.— Miller v. Best, 36 Ill. App. 74; Underwood v. Brockman, 4 Dana (Ky.) 309, 29 Am. Dec. 407; Stone v. Chicago, etc., R. Phelan v. Gardner, 43 Cal. 306; Murray v. Carlin, 67 Ill. 286; Lang v. Ingalls Zinc Co., (Tenn. Ch. 1898) 49 S. W. 288.

Impaired health and depression of spirits of a party to a compromise, no unsoundness of mind being proved, is not ground for opening a settlement, in making which the parties dealt with each other at arm's length. Billingslea v. Ware, 32 Ala. 415.

As to compromise by person acting in a fiduciary relation generally see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS; GUARDIAN AND WARD; PRINCIPAL AND AGENT; TRUSTS.

Compromise by majority of members of church.— Where a church and society are an existing organized association acting in a collective quasi-corporate character, an agreement of compromise of a suit by a majority of the members is binding upon the minority. Horton v. Chester Baptist Church, 34 Vt. 309.

Delegation of power by directors to one of their number.— The articles of association of a company empowered the directors to delegate powers "to committees consisting of members of their body," and provided that in the construction of the articles words im-compromise by a third person is binding in the absence of such authority,[6] or unless it be subsequently ratified either expressly or by such acts of the interested parties as clearly evidence their intention to accept such settlement,[7] as for instance by accepting the fruits of such compromise[8] or by abiding by and acting upon such compromise for a long period of time.[9]

III. REQUISITES.

An infant may affirm a contract of settlement made for her benefit and may sue upon it as if originally a party thereto. Glover v. Patten, 165 U. S. 394, 17 S. Ct. 411, 41 L. ed. 760; and, generally, INFANTS.

Formal ratification unnecessary.— Pending a suit for divorce brought by a wife against her husband, the wife agreed that she would take certain lands of the husband in satisfaction of such judgment as might be rendered in her favor for alimony; and a deed was made and delivered to her agent accordingly. It was held that a formal ratification of the agreement, after judgment for alimony, was not necessary to render the compromise binding. Dutton v. Dutton, 30 Ind. 452.

Insufficient evidence of ratification.— A ratification of an unauthorized agreement of compromise of a claim in suit is not proved by the entry of such agreement on the minutes of the court in the cause to which it relates, in the presence of the party's attorney. Revis v. Wallace, 2 Heisk. (Tenn.) 658.

8. Strasser v. Conklin, 54 Wis. 102, 11 N. W. 254.

Ratification of settlement voidable for physical disability.— Where plaintiff agreed to a settlement of a claim for injuries while in a condition of physical pain which rendered the agreement voidable, and there was no evidence that the agreement was procured by fraud, an acceptance of the amount of such settlement by her attorney with her consent, at a time when she fully understood what she was doing, is a ratification of the settlement. — a meeting and concurrence of minds.[10] The parties should deal with each other on an equal footing,[11] and the agreement must have been fairly and reasonably made.[12] A compromise agreement, in order to take away the right of action on the original contract, must be an agreement, which is substituted for the pre-existing obligation and must bind both parties, so that suit may be maintained by either to enforce the same.[13]

B. Consideration — 1. Necessity. A compromise and settlement must, like all other contracts, be supported by a sufficient consideration or it cannot be enforced.[14]

2. Sufficiency — a. In General. The consideration will be sufficient if there is something of detriment to one party or benefit to the other, however slight.[15]

b. Family Settlements. Compromises for the settlement of family difficulties or family controversies if at all reasonable are especially favored both in

Does not estop from any defense or the assertion of any right.—An offer of compromise does not estop the party making it from setting up any legal defense or from asserting any right to which such offer relates. Will not preclude equitable relief.—An offer of compromise unaccepted will not preclude relief in equity, although payment may subsequently be made by an agreement between the parties by giving notes due from others. Calloway v. McElroy, 3 Ala. 406.

Will not prevent plaintiff from recovering a larger sum.— The fact that a plaintiff offered to accept a certain amount before the commencement of suit will not preclude him from recovering a larger sum than that contemplated by his offer. Brush v. S., etc., R. Co., 43 Iowa 554; Perkins v. Hasbrouck, 155 Pa. St. 494, 26 Atl. 695.

45. Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 997, after providing for an offer of compromise, proceeds as follows: "If the plaintiff accepts the offer, and give notice thereof, within five days, he may file the offer, with proof of notice of acceptance, and the clerk must thereupon enter judgment accordingly. If the notice of acceptance be not given, the offer is to be deemed withdrawn, and cannot be given in evidence upon the trial; and if the plaintiff fail to obtain a more favorable judgment, he cannot recover costs, but must pay the defendant's costs from the time of the offer." This section requires no affirmative action on the part of a plaintiff, unless he elects to accept the offer; and then he must give and file a notice of acceptance. There is no provision for an affirmative refusal to accept, and he may give and file the notice at any time within five days. The offer therefore has no effect whatever until after the expiration of five days, unless before that plaintiff accepts in the mode provided. Scammon v. Denio, 72 Cal. 393, 14 Pac. 98.

46. Letters evidencing acceptance.— Plaintiffs having a disputed claim against defendant for services rendered as his attorneys, finally made by letter an offer of compromise to the effect that defendant should pay them five hundred dollars in cash, should give them two notes for one thousand two hundred and fifty dollars each, and a further sum of one thousand dollars on the successful termination of the appeal in a suit then pending. Defendant, replying by letter, expressed satisfaction with the proposition, and said: "I will endeavor to send $500 this month and my notes for the balance." At different times thereafter, in response to communications from plaintiffs, defendant stated he would settle up the matter as soon as he could and asked further indulgence. It was held that the facts showed a binding acceptance by defendant of plaintiff's offer of compromise. Cunningham v. Patrick, 136 Mo. 621, 37 S. W. 817. A was the administrator of an estate, to one third of which each of his brothers, C and D, was entitled. A wrote to B and C, offering to pay each one thousand pounds as the offer was made, as where he receives and retains the amount which to his knowledge was offered on condition of its being accepted as a compromise.[47] Where one in good faith objects to a bill presented for payment and makes out a new bill for a reduced amount, which amount is received, and such new bill receipted, this sufficiently shows a settlement of a disputed claim binding on the parties.[48]

b. Acceptance Under Protest. Where a tender is made on condition that it be received in settlement of a disputed claim, it is the duty of the party to whom it is made either to refuse it or to accept it on the terms as made. He has no right to accept the tender and prescribe the terms of his acceptance.[49] Where a tender thus made is accepted it is binding, although the acceptance is under protest[50] or with the express declaration that it is received in part satisfaction only.[51] The mere fact, however, that one accepts less than the amount of his claim, although knowing that the one offering it claims it to be the whole of his indebtedness, will not necessarily operate as an agreement of compromise and settlement barring the original right of action in the absence of an express condition in the tender that it be accepted if at all in full settlement of the claim.[52]

his share. B accepted the offer and C wrote that whatever B determined "would meet with his approbation." A and B acted on the contract as complete, and C never repudiated it for seventeen years. It was held that C had acquiesced and was bound by the contract. Cood v. Cood, 33 Beav. 314, 9 Jur. N. S. 1335, 33 L. J. Ch. 273, 2 New Rep. 275.

47. Presumption of acceptance from retention of check or draft.— Where check or draft is sent upon the condition that it is in full satisfaction of a claim or indebtedness, and the creditor retains the same and converts it into money, he is presumed to have assented to the condition and to have accepted the compromise offer.

IV. CONSTRUCTION OF AGREEMENT.

In construing a compromise agreement the ultimate object is to arrive at the intention of the parties, which intention is to be determined from the contract itself, and not from previous statements, understandings, or agreements.[53] The compromise agreement is to be considered as ascertaining their respective rights and will in equity as between the parties furnish the basis for settling their rights.[54]

V. EFFECT OF AGREEMENT.[55]

A. As Merger and Bar of Original Causes of Action and Defenses —

1. As Merger and Bar of Causes of Action. A compromise and settlement when full and complete and fairly made operates as a merger of, and bars all right to, recovery on all claims and causes of action included therein.[56] count, defendant allowed plaintiff such items and sums as he supposed to be right, wholly ignoring plaintiff's other claims, and paid plaintiff on defendant's own views of what was just and proper, which was received under protestation that it was not enough, without giving any release or discharge, it was held that this was not a final settlement and that the acceptance of the money offered could not operate as an estoppel upon plaintiff and thus preclude him from suing for and recovering any balance that might be shown to be due him. Western Union R. Co. v. Smith, 75 Ill. 496.

Retention of money paid under mistake.— If a debtor pays money to a creditor under the belief that it is in compromise of a debt and the creditor retains the money after notice of the erroneous belief under which the payment was made and an offer of rescission by the party paying he does not thereby affirm the correctness of the party's belief and is not precluded from the collection of his debt. Bar to action against joint tort feasor.— A settlement in full satisfaction of a personal injury, received through the negligence or misconduct of one, is a bar to an action against another who would otherwise have been liable for the same injury. Goss v. Ellison, 136 Mass. 503; Curley v. Harris, 11 Allen (Mass.) 112; Stone v. Dickinson, 5 Allen (Mass.) 29, 81 Am. Dec. 727, 7 Allen (Mass.) 26; Brown v. Cambridge, 3 Allen (Mass.) 474.

Effect on right of claimant of interest to intervene.— A voluntary agreement between the parties to an action, by which their respective claims are adjusted and the controversy settled, has the effect of a verdict and nothing remains but final judgment to determine the action, and when such an agreement has been made a third party, claiming an interest in the subject of the litigation, cannot intervene. Henry v. Cass County Mill, etc., Co., 42 Iowa 33.

Right to set up new grounds of recovery.— Plaintiff agreed to dismiss his action for damages for flowage of his land caused by defendant's bridge, if defendant would build a proper bridge, which he did. It was held that plaintiff could not thereafter maintain the action by amending and setting up new grounds of recovery for the same injury and growing out of the original wrongful act complained of. Peoria, etc., R. Co. v. Barton, 38 Ill. App. 469. So where a party compromised on the basis that the property in question belonged to the succession of his grandmother, and recovered an interest therein, he cannot recover a second time part of the same property as coming to him from his grandfather's estate. not in fact intended to be settled the settlement will be no bar to a recovery thereon.[59]

B. As Warranty of Ownership. Where property wholly outside of the differences between the parties is given in payment on a settlement, there is an implied warranty that the person giving the property in payment is the owner thercof.[60]

C. Conclusiveness of Agreement — 1. In General. Numerous authorities support the doctrine that a compromise and settlement of a controversy based on a sufficient consideration[61] is, as between the parties thereto[62] and as to the matters embraced therein,[63] binding and conclusive where fairly made.[64]

Conclusiveness as to items not excepted.— A settlement evidenced by the execution of mutual receipts of "one dollar, in full for all debts, dues, and demands to this date," except as to certain specified items, is conclusive, in the absence of fraud or mistake, thereof,[69] and do not extend to matters which the parties never intended to include therein,[70] although existing at the time.[71] The renunciation which is made in such agreements to all rights, claims, and pretensions extends only to what relates to the differences on which the compromise arises;[72] and causes of action or claims arising subsequent to the settlement, except such as were in a legal sense in the contemplation of the party assenting to the settlement,[73] are not settled or barred thereby.[74]

Husband approving of settlement by wife. — A compromise and settlement by a married woman whereby she agreed with a bank which had suspended business to accept a specified sum in cash and notes in full settlement of all indebtedness by reason of a deposit of money which was her separate property is binding on both the husband and wife, where he advised and approved of the settlement, although he did not sign it. Robbins v. Island City Sav. Bank, 3 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 247.

Wife bound by husband's settlement.— Defendant was employed as agent to carry on a drug store. Afterward, on settlement, an allowance for clerk hire claimed by defendant was disputed by his principal, and defendant finally consented to a reduction of his claim, in order that he might continue the business. It was held that the wife of defendant, who had given a mortgage on her separate property to secure the performance of a contract by the husband, was bound by such settlement, although there was no express provision for the hiring of a clerk at the expense of the petitioners. ## VI. IMPEACHMENT.

A. Opening and Correcting — 1. IN GENERAL. Equity has jurisdiction to open, reform, and correct a compromise and settlement upon the showing of proper grounds for such relief.[79]

2. PLEADING AND PROOF. The party to a settlement who seeks to reopen the same must distinctly allege his grounds therefor,[80] and must prove the existence of the same by clear and convincing evidence.[81]

B. Vacating or Setting Aside[82] — 1. GROUNDS — a. In General. Agreements of compromise may be impeached for any cause sufficient in equity to invalidate a contract.[83]

b. Duress. Duress if proved is sufficient to relieve a party from the effect of a compromise which is procured by such means.[84] To establish duress, however, in the pleadings, is not affected by a compromise and settlement of the controversy. Oldhams v. Jones, 5 B. Mon. (Ky.) 458.

Corrected as against sureties after death of principal.— Where a bill in equity was brought to impeach a settlement of accounts for fraud or mistake, it was held that a mistake in such settlement might be corrected as against the sureties of one of the parties, notwithstanding the death and insolvency of their principal. Lee v. Reed, 4 Dana (Ky.) 109.

A mistake in a settlement of a suit pending in court, before it is entered of record and made the judgment of the court, is always open to investigation and correction, and if it vitiates, the settlement as a whole should not be made the judgment of the court at all. Reformation must be asked for in complaint.— Where plaintiff executed an agreement "in settlement of all matters of difference" between herself and defendant, a naked averment of mistake, without seeking a reformation of the contract, cannot avoid the defense created by the agreement, and such reformation should be asked for in the complaint, and not by reply to an answer setting up the settlement. the evidence must show facts reasonably adequate to overcome the will of the party making the compromise.[85]

c. Error or Mistake — (I) Of Fact — (A) In General. A mistake or ignorance of facts is a proper subject of relief only where it constitutes a material ingredient in the contract of the parties and disappoints their intentions by a mutual error,[86] or where it is inconsistent with good faith and proceeds from a violation of the obligations which are imposed by law upon the conscience of either party.[87] But when such party is equally innocent, and there is no concealment of facts which the other party has a right to know, and no surprise or imposition, the mistake or ignorance, whether mutual or unilateral, is treated as laying no foundation for interference.[88]

The fact must be material to the contract, essential to its character, and an efficient cause of its making, and if the compromise is not materially affected thereby it will not constitute ground for relief. Wilson v. Frisbie, 57 Ga. 269; Thompson v. Currier, 70 N. H. 259, 47 Atl. 76; Currie v. Steele, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 542; Trigg v. Read, 5 Humphr. (Tenn.) 529, 42 Am. Dec. 447. The courts will not correct upon a mistake alone unless such as will form a basis of equitable relief (Smith v. Paris, 53 Mo. 274), and the party seeking relief must show that, with the mistake corrected, he is entitled to a more favorable result than that fixed by the settlement (Hughes v. Smith, 7 Ky. L. Rep. 40). A settlement will not be opened for clerical errors which had no influence on the result. Wilson v. Frisbie, 57 Ga. 269.

Error in calculation.— If two parties having, or supposing that they have, claims upon each other, agree to compromise those claims,

(B) Concealment of Facts. Although fraudulent and unfair concealment of facts may constitute a ground for relief against a compromise,[89] yet every omission to communicate facts although material is not necessarily fraudulent;[90] and the mere failure of a party, voluntarily and unasked, to put the other in possession of all the facts within his own knowledge bearing upon the transaction is not such concealment where he does nothing to mislead.[91] To constitute a non-disclosure a fraudulent concealment the party must have known or have had cause to presume that his adversary was ignorant of the facts, and the suppression must as a rule have been intentional.[92] and thereupon make a settlement of their matters in dispute, and they act at the time in good faith, stand on an equal footing, and have equal means of knowledge as to the facts, the settlement is binding; and it is not enough to invalidate it that one of the parties made an error in the calculation of the items of his claim. Brooks v. Hall, 36 Kan. 697, 14 Pac. 236. See, however, Adle v. Prudhomme, 16 La. Ann. 343, holding that a mistake in calculation is ground for setting aside a compromise.

Mistake as to extent of injuries.— Where one whose horse has been injured by a train of cars compromises with the railroad company and accepts a certain sum in settlement of his claim the mere fact that he underestimated the extent of the horse's injuries cannot annul the settlement so as to entitle him to recover an additional sum. Where there is no such relation of trust or confidence between the parties as imposes upon one an obligation to give full information to the other the latter cannot proceed blindly, omitting all inquiry and examination, and then complain that the other did not volunteer to give the information he had. Cleaveland v. Richardson, 132 U. S. 318, 10 S. Ct. 100, 33 L. ed. 384.

(c) Effect of Opportunity For Information. A fair compromise will be sustained by the courts, notwithstanding errors of law or mistake of facts of which the party complaining could by reasonable diligence have informed himself.[93] Equal opportunities for information, although not availed of, make such a compromise as conclusive as actual information.[94] This has been held to be the rule even in the case of false statements by one party as to matters equally open to the knowledge or inquiry of the other, where the parties sustain no fiduciary relation to each other.[95]

(II) Of Law. A voluntary compromise and settlement of doubtful claims will not be disturbed or set aside merely because of a mistake as to the law,[96] unless it appears that the opposite party was in some way instrumental in producing the result.[97] It has been held, however, that relief will be granted against a com-

Principal affected by knowledge of agent. — Widow and other kin of an intestate agreed, by advice of their law agent, to compromise their respective claims by taking equal shares. The widow, after receiving her share, brought an action to rescind the agreement on the ground of ignorance of her legal rights and the erroneous advice of her law agent. It was held that, although the fair inference was that she was ignorant of her legal rights, yet as there was no proof of fraud on the part of the agent she was bound by his acts and affected by the knowledge which he was presumed to have of her rights. promise not made merely under the impression that the law is doubtful and uncertain with a view of bringing peace, but made under an entire and thorough mistake of law,[98] as for instance where the agreement is made in ignorance of the existence of a right or title.[99]

(III) MISTAKE AS TO EFFECT OF COMPROMISE. A party to a contract of compromise cannot avoid it on the ground that he had a mistaken conception of its effect.[1] It has been held, however, that it is in the discretion of the court to relieve parties from agreements relating to the prosecution or discontinuance of a pending action, if not too late to place them in statu quo, where it appears that either has inadvertently, unadvisedly, or improvidently entered into an agreement which will take the case out of the due and ordinary course of proceeding in the action, and in so doing work to his prejudice.[2]

Fraudulent misrepresentation as to rights. — "It is true that the ignorance relied upon is an ignorance of law rather than of facts, and that this is not always, or perhaps generally, and when standing alone, available as a ground of relief against an executed contract, no matter how inequitable it may be. On this point the decisions of the courts of this country, as well as the English courts, are by no means uniform, but, in our opinion, the weight of authority and the decisions of this court would now forbid that a party, who, with full knowledge of the ignorance of the other contracting party, has not only encouraged that ignorance, and made it the more dense by his own false and fraudulent misrepresentations, but has willfully deceived and led that other into a mistaken conception of his legal rights, should shield himself behind the general doctrine that a mere mistake of law affords no ground for relief. This view seems to be upheld by many, if not all, of the modern text writers, who are recognized as authority on the question." Titus v. Rochester German Ins. Co., 97 Ky. 567, 570, 17 Ky. L. Principal's knowledge of falsity of representation.— Where an insolvent husband, knowing his wife to be dead, and that he had thereby become entitled to a beneficial interest in her estate, which considerably changes his financial standing, permitted an attorney whom he and his wife had employed, but who purported to act for the wife, to compromise and purchase a judgment against him, on representations as to the wife's good health, etc.— the agent not knowing her to be dead at the time — such husband is chargeable with the fraud, and hence the judgment continued a lien against his property. the truth.[12] In the absence of such a showing on the part of complainant the agreement is binding.

e. Illegality. A contract of compromise may be set aside where it is against public policy,[13] is of an immoral character,[14] or is in settlement of an illegal transaction.[15]

f. Necessitous Circumstances. A compromise agreement will not as a rule be set aside merely on the ground that a party was induced to enter into it on account of his necessitous circumstances and the pressure of pecuniary difficulty.[16]

g. Undue Influence. Where it appears that a party to a compromise was ignorant and liable to imposition, acted without legal advice, and was unduly influenced to make such compromise to his disadvantage, this may constitute ground for setting aside the contract.[17]

h. Usurious Claims. Where a usurious debt or claim has been settled after although made in the form of a positive representation, is after all but the mere expression of opinion and is not a representation upon which the party has a right to rely. American Ins. Knowledge of falsity.— A party cannot avoid a contract of settlement on the ground of fraudulent representations if he did not believe them or knew that they were false when they were made. Webb v. Harris, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 1289. So where fraud has been committed by misrepresentation and false statements, and the aggrieved party, with knowledge of the facts constituting the fraud, makes a compromise of the matter, the compromise should be held valid in law, although the party committing the fraud may reiterate such misrepresentations and false statements, and affirm and reaffirm his integrity in the matter, in order to effect the compromise, and the aggrieved party may thereby be induced to make the compromise. In determining whether unconscionable advantage was taken of one party by the other, in the negotiation of a compromise between them the question must be considered not in the light of subsequent events, but upon the circumstances existing at the time of the negotiation and execution of the contract, and if it appears in view of these circumstances that no advantage was taken the contract will not be set aside (Colton v. Stanford, 82 Cal. 351, 23 Pac. 16, 16 Am. Influence of scriptural injunction.— A compromise whereby one parts with land claimed in good faith by another may be valid, although the party relinquishing the land did so solely because guided by the scriptural injunction to give up property rather than to go to law, no fraud, deceit, or concealment being practised. 2. Return of Benefit or Consideration — a. representations of the other party,[23] or was made under a mistake of fact[24] or as to the law;[25] and until this is done the settlement will constitute a good defense.[26] By electing to retain the property, a party must be held to be bound by the settlement.[27]

b. When Unnecessary. A return or tender of the amount received under a settlement is not necessary, where plaintiff is entitled to retain the benefits received thereunder either by virtue of such settlement,[28] or of defendant's original liability,[29] or where the payment was a gratuity or related to a part only of the cause of action.[30] An offer to return is also unnecessary if the judgment asked for will accomplish that result.[31]

c. Retaining Benefit and Suing For Damages. One injured by a fraudulent compromise may, instead of restoring the benefit received and suing at law or in equity to rescind and for equitable relief, retain what he has received and sue whoever may be liable for the consequences of the deceit, by which the compromise was obtained, and recover whatever damages resulted therefrom.[32]

Dismissal of suit sufficient, although stipulation to dismiss not filed as agreed.— One agreeing with another to sign a compromise agreement on the latter's agreement to dismiss a pending suit is not prejudiced by the latter's failure to file a stipulation to dismiss that both had executed, where the suit is dismissed according to agreement. Refunding part payment.— Unless there is some express stipulation to the contrary money paid on a compromise is held to be a payment pro tanto upon the debt, and a failure to carry out the compromise by the party making such payment does not give him any claim or right to have the money so paid refunded. Abercrombie v. Skinner, 42 Ala. 633; McClung v. Lyster, 3 Greene (Iowa) 182.

Stipulation as to deficiency.— A controversy between plaintiff, defendant, and others was compromised; the agreement stipulating that if the money thereby agreed to be paid by others than defendant to plaintiff was not fully paid the status of the parties was to remain unchanged as to the deficiency. It was held that plaintiff could not maintain an action against defendants for such deficiency on the contract of compromise, but must rely on his rights as they existed prior to the attempted compromise. Louisville Bank v. Wheat, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 443.

Substantial performance.— Although there has only been a partial performance of the compromise agreement, yet if the creditor has obtained the substance of everything stipulated for therein, he cannot abandon the compromise agreement and sue to recover the original debt, but his proper action is for breach of the agreement. A. 538, wherein it appeared that an indorsee of a note agreed to receive, in compromise of an indorser's liability thereon, secured notes for a less amount, the indorsee to have the right if the compromise notes were not paid when due to sue the indorser for the balance remaining due on the original notes after applying thereon the partial payments made on the compromise notes and the proceeds of the security given therefor. It was held that the indorsee did not, by receiving part payments on the compromise notes after their maturity, waive the right to sue the indorser on the original note.

tract of compromise and settlement may in a proper case be enforced.[45] The courts will generally enforce the agreement as made where the party seeking performance has acted fairly, and especially where there has been a part performance.[46] Specific performances will not be decreed, however, where the contract is founded in a mistake[47] of one of the parties as to the existence of the material facts, of which the party seeking performance is informed and did not disclose; nor where the contract is not strictly equitable or fair and just in all its parts; nor where it unjustly or materially affects the rights of the other party and is not founded on an adequate consideration.[48]

2. Manner of Enforcement. Where a compromise can be enforced in the original action and the agreement is filed with the papers in the cause no further pleading would seem to be necessary than a petition or motion merely stating and praying that the stipulation may be enforced,[49] unless perhaps some fact affecting the decree to be rendered may have occurred after the agreement was executed.[50]

Conditions precedent.— To justify the specific performance of a compromise agreement the fact of the existence of such agreement must appear, and where part performance of an oral agreement is relied upon such part performance must be clearly attributable to the contract sought to be enforced. Senior v. Anderson, 115 Cal. 496, 41 Pac. 454.

Restraining enforcement against partner of judgment against firm.— Where a compromise has been made between a debtor and creditor of claims against the debtor, both as an individual and as a member of a partnership, and the debtor has paid the consideration, a court of equity will give effect to the compromise by restraining the enforcement against the debtor of a judgment upon the partnership claim. Compromise of debt by creditor in ignorance of a judgment, execution, and levy.— Where creditors were ignorant that when they made the compromise of a debt land had been levied on of sufficient value to pay the debt, a court of equity will not decree satisfaction of the judgment and set aside the sale of the land, which would be equivalent to specific performance of the compromise; but it will first require the debtor to pay the debt, interest, and costs, the amount paid on the compromise being allowed as part payment. Cowan v. Sapp, 81 Ala. 525, 8 So. 212.

49. Ward v. Wilson, 92 Tex. 22, 45 S. W. 8.

In England it was formerly held that an agreement to compromise a suit containing a stipulation that it might be made a rule of court might be enforced in equity on petition supported by affidavit, where the whole matter was before the court (Dawson v. Newsome, 2 Giff. 272), but that the court had no jurisdiction to enforce an agreement which had been privately come to by parties out of court and had not been made rule of court (Forsyth v. Manton, 5 Madd. 78, 21 Rev. Rep. 283). Under the judicature act of 1873, § 24, an agreement between the parties to an action to stay proceedings upon terms can be enforced in the action. Eden v. Naish, 7 Ch. D. 781, 47 L. J. Amendment of record and enforcement by attachment.— A court cannot strike out an entry of compromise in a suit and order it for trial because it was imperfectly entered or because it has not been performed. The record should be amended nunc pro tunc and then the performance of the compromise should be enforced by rules upon the respective parties or by attachment if need be. Cox v. Cox, 53 N. C. 487.

Where, however, the performance of an agreement for compromise is beyond the scope of the suit and involves details which cannot be the subject of an order in the suit the proper proceeding is to file a fresh bill for specific performance.[51]

3. PARTIES. It lies upon the party seeking performance to take the steps necessary to enforce it.[52]

IX. PLEADING.[53]

A. Plea of Compromise — 1. NECESSITY. A compromise made pendente lite must be specially pleaded to be available as a defense.[54]

2. SUFFICIENCY. A plea of compromise and settlement should show the terms of the settlement relied on,[55] and that it is in fact a defense to plaintiff's suit.[56] his title, but by mistake alleged that he was tenant in tail. After an interim order was obtained, the suit which was to restrain an adjoining mine lessee from trespassing and for an account was compromised under an agreement. It was held that the erroneous allegation of title in the bill could not be regarded as having led to such a misapprehension of it as would prevent a court of equity from enforcing the agreement for compromise. Necessary parties.— Where a compromise contract is so drawn that what is to be done by one party is the consideration for that which is to be done by the other, specific performance of any portion of it cannot be had without bringing all the parties in interest before the court so as to give opportunity for disposing of the whole controversy. Baldwin v. Fletcher, 48 Mich. 604, 12 N. W. 872. But where several persons have made a compromise as to their disputed rights and one of them has refused to carry out the contract it is not necessary that those against whom no relief is sought should be made parties to a bill to enforce the agreement. Under general issue.— In Schwartz v. Southerland, 51 Ill. App. 175, it was held that the existence of a compromise agreement is a defense which may be raised under the general issue. See also Ellis v. Mills, 28 Tex. 584, holding that under the general issue in an action of trespass to try title, evidence of a compromise of a like suit between the same parties on the same subject-matter is admissible, and the judgment on such compromise constitutes a good defense.

Waiver of objection.— Although a settlement of a pending suit should usually be brought before the court by a cross-bill or supplemental answer, yet a decree establishing such a settlement may be rendered upon petition only, where no objection was raised to this course until after the decree was rendered, and where both parties appeared in the matter of the petition and contested as to the extent of the settlement. 56. Parkison v. Boddiker, 10 Colo. 503, 15 Pac. 806, holding that an allegation in an answer to an action on a note that there had been a settlement of all matters between the maker and the payee is not good where it does not appear from such allegation, but that upon such settlement it was found that defendant was indebted to the payee of the note in a sum equal to the amount of the note in question, and that such indebtedness

3. Court in Which Agreement May Be Pleaded. An appellate court has no authority to institute an original inquiry as to the existence or validity of an alleged contract of compromise of the subject-matter of litigation.[57]

B. Replication or Reply to Plea. Where a compromise and settlement is pleaded as a defense plaintiff may reply thereto by a general denial,[58] under which he may introduce facts showing that he never made any compromise or settlement,[59] or he may set up matter in avoidance.[60]

X. EVIDENCE.

A. Presumptions and Burden of Proof — 1. As to Existence of Agreement. Where a party alleges the existence of an agreement of compromise of the matter in controversy, the burden of proof devolves upon him to establish the same.[61]

2. As to Matters Included — a. In General. It will be presumed that a general settlement includes all matters in controversy and all demands existing at the time between the parties;[62] and while this presumption is not conclusive in was due and owing at the time the note was given.

Upon demurrer to such plea the only question raised is whether the plea discloses a defense to the case made by plaintiff, and if it does it must be held sufficient, although it may appear defective as to the manner in which the defense is stated. Presumption of inclusion of agent's expenses and commissions in settlement of suits against him by principal.— The payment of money by an agent, in settlement of a suit brought against him by his principal to re-

its character[63] it imposes upon the party claiming that certain items were not included in the settlement the burden of establishing such fact by a fair preponderance of the evidence.[64]

b. Delivery of Bill, Note, Bond, Due-Bill, Etc. The execution and delivery of a bill or note is prima facie evidence of the settlement of all existing demands between the parties up to date.[65] A receipt in full is likewise prima facie evidence of a settlement,[66] as is the giving of a due-bill,[67] the execution of a bond and mortgage,[68] or a bond for the payment of money, stating that it is the amount of the promisor's indebtedness on a final settlement.[69] This presumption is not conclusive, however, but may be rebutted by evidence clearly showing the contrary,[70] cover the value of property intrusted to him to be sold or exchanged, does not create a legal presumption that the agent's expenses and commissions for services were included in such settlement, although the principal received the money with that belief and understanding; but that is a defense the burden of which is on the principal. as that the claim in question was not included in the settlement, or that the note was given upon another and different consideration.[71]

3. As to Validity of Agreement. A settlement being once shown every presumption is indulged in favor of its fairness and correctness.[72]

B. But see Berks, etc., Turnpike Co. v. Hendel, 11 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 123, holding that where a dispute has been settled by agreement of the parties it is not competent for one of them, in an action upon the agreement, to give evidence which relates exclusively to the subject-matter of the original dispute.

Where a settlement is relied upon, a paper executed by one of the parties making certain acknowledgments as to a settlement of controversies between the parties, and bearing date at a period which, with other evidence, may serve to connect the same with the matter on which suit is brought as and the arrangement in fact made by the parties[77] may also be introduced in evidence.

XI. TRIAL.

A. Province of Court and Jury — 1. PROVINCE OF COURT. Where there is no dispute as to the facts relating to a mutual compromise of an action, the effect of the arrangement is a question of law for the court.[80]

2. PROVINCE OF JURY. Where a compromise is alleged, the consideration of all questions of fact connected therewith is for the determination of the jury under proper instructions by the court. Thus questions as to the existence of such an agreement,[81] whether the parties intended it to be final,[82] its extent,[83] whether or not certain matters are included therein,[84] the existence of a proof of a settlement thereof, is proper evidence for the consideration of the jury. Smith v. Atwood, 14 Ga. 402. consideration,[85] the mental capacity of a party when signing,[86] and whether a party knowingly settled his claim[87]—should all be submitted to the jury. The good faith of a party in asserting his claim as well as the inquiry whether there was any reasonable ground for such claim should also be left to the jury,[88] as should the question whether the agreement has been carried out or whether there has been a breach thereof, and if the latter be true the damage suffered thereby if any.[89]

COMPTROLLER IN BANKRUPTCY. An officer in England, whose duty it is to receive from the trustee in each bankruptcy his accounts and periodical statements showing the proceedings in the bankruptcy, and also to call the trustee to account for any misfeasance, neglect, or omission in the discharge of his duties.[4]

COMPULSION. COERCION, q. v.; constraint;[5] objective necessity; forcible inducement to the commission of an act.[6] (See COERCION.)

COMPULSORY. Obligatory; enjoined by authority; necessary; due to COMPULSION,[7] q. v. In ecclesiastical procedure, a kind of writ to compel the attendance of a witness, to undergo examination.[8] (Compulsory: Partition, see PARTITION. Payment, see PAYMENT. Process, see PROCESS; WITNESSES. Reference, see REFERENCES.)

COMPULSORY PURCHASE. A term used to define the exercise of the right of eminent domain.[9] (See, generally, EMINENT DOMAIN.)

I. Origin of Offense.

The original statute creating this offense was that of 21 Jac. I, c. 27.[1] This statute was subsequently superseded by other statutes in England.[2] And while our statutes upon the subject are in many respects analogous to those of England, it would perhaps be incorrect to designate any particular statute as a foundation for our enactments.[3]

II. Nature and Elements.

A. Birth Alive. The real offense being an attempt to conceal the birth or death so that it cannot be known whether or not the child[4] was murdered,[5] it

2. It was because of the uncertainty of the true sense and meaning of 21 Jac. I, c. 27, and the Irish act of 6 Anne that they were repealed, and 43 Geo. III, c. 58, § 3, was enacted. Rex v. Cornwall, R. & R. 250 note. This latter statute was repealed by 9 Geo. IV, c. 31, § 14. See Rex v. Higley, 4 C. & P. 366, 19 E. C. L. 556, where the statute is set out in full. This was in turn repealed by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, which enacts that "if any woman shall be delivered of a child, any person who shall by any secret disposition of the dead body of the said child . . . endeavour to conceal the birth thereof, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour." Reg. v. Brown, L. R. 1 C. C. 244, 245, 11 Cox C. C. 517, 39 L. J. M. C. 94, 22 L. T. Rep. N. S. 484, 18 Wkly. Rep. 792.

4. What constitutes a "child" within the statute.— A fœtus not bigger than a man's finger, but having the shape of a child, has been held to be a "child" within the statute. Reg. v. Colmer, 9 Cox C. C. 506. But see Reg. v. Hewitt, 4 F. & F. 1101, wherein it was left to the jury to say whether an offspring six or seven months after conception had so far matured as to become a child or was still only a fœtus. See also Reg. v. Berriman, 6 Cox C. C. 388.

5. The different statutes creating this offense do not preclude an indictment for murder if the evidence is sufficient. Sullivan v. State, 36 Ark. 64 [cited in State v. Kirby, 57 Me. 30]. And see Wade v. Com., 1 Ky. L. Rep. 408, where it is said that although an action of murder would lie for the death of the child, yet when the death was probably caused without guilty intent, the action should be brought under the statute.

Where the punishment is the same as for manslaughter it is error for the court to treat the indictment as charging the latter offense and for the jury to return their ver-would seem to be an immaterial matter whether the child be born dead or alive.[6]

B. Illegitimacy of Child. Inasmuch as concealment was usually attempted only by a mother desiring to conceal or destroy evidence of her shame or to escape punishment,[7] it was, by the earlier statutes of England,[8] and is in the majority[9] of the jurisdictions in this country necessary that the child be, or if born alive would have been, a bastard.[10]

C. Concealment — 1. Intent to Conceal. The authorities are all agreed that there must be an actual intent to conceal the child.[11] Hence where the child slips from the mother into a privy vault, the mother being there for another purpose,[12] or where, although the child was found among the feathers in a bed at the house of the mother's father, it was proved that the mother had prepared clothes for the child and sent for a surgeon at the time of her confinement,[13] she would not be guilty of the offense. On the other hand it is not necessary in proving this intent to show that the body had been put in a place of final deposit.[14]

Contra.— State v. Kirby, 57 Me. 30 (where the court, after review of the different statutes, concluded that the phrase "so that it is not known" means not known at any time past or present whether the child was born dead; and that if on the trial it can be shown that the child was still-born the mother should be acquitted); State v. Joiner, 11 N. Motive for concealment.— The endeavor to conceal must not proceed alone from a desire to escape individual observation or anger. Where therefore it appeared that the body of the child would have been buried by the prisoner in the churchyard, but for her fear to provoke her father, and because of such fear she conveyed it to a pond, the case was held not to fall within the statute. Reg. v. Morris, 2 Cox C. C. 489.

12. State v. Conover, 4 Crim. L. Mag. 233; Reg. v. Coxhead, 1 C. & K. 623, 47 E. C. L. 623. And this is true notwithstanding her denial of the birth of the child. Reg. v. Turner, 8 C. & P. 755, 34 E. C. L. 1003.

13. Rex v. Higley, 4 C. & P. 366, 19 E. C. L. 556. Compare Rex v. Poulton, 5 C. & P. 329, 24 E. C. L. 590, where it was held that slight evidence of the mother having previously spoken to others concerning diapers for the child was insufficient, in connection with the manner of concealment, to show a lack of intent to conceal.

2. What Constitutes Concealment. To constitute a concealment, it is necessary that the child be placed where it is not likely to be found.[15] For that reason if the mother be found with the child in her possession, although about to conceal it, she cannot be convicted.[16] On the other hand as what constitutes a concealment would depend upon the circumstances of each case,[17] a most complete exposure of the body might be a concealment.[18]

III. Accomplices.

It seems that some of the statutory provisions contemplate no crime unless the mother be a participator therein;[19] but if the mother be indicted therefor others may be held as aiders or abettors.[20] Under the present English statute any one may alone be guilty of the offense.[21]

IV. Indictment.[22]

The indictment must set out the acts constituting the offense.[23] While the

Time of concealment.— It is not the concealment of death of a bastard child by its mother years after its birth, which the statutes contemplate. It is a concealment which is intended to prevent it coming to light whether or not the child was born dead or alive or whether it was murdered. Per King, J., in Com. v. Clark, 2 Ashm. (Pa.) 105.

17. Question for jury.— The question of the intent of the party in disposing of the body is for the jury. Reg. v. Clarke, 4 F. & F. 1040, in which case it is also held that the question of whether or not the disposition was in such a place that the offense could have been committed (and a dust-bin was held to be such a place) was for the court.

18. As for instance if the body were placed in the middle of a moor in the winter, on the top of a mountain, or in any other secluded spot. Reg. v. Brown, L. R. 1 C. C. 244, 11 Cox C. C. 517, 39 L. J. M. C. 94, 22 L. T. Rep. N. S. 484, 18 Wkly. Rep. 792.

Child dead at time of concealment.— Under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, § 60, it was necessary that the child be dead at the time it is sought to conceal it. Thus if the woman leave the child while alive in the corner of a field and it subsequently dies from exposure she cannot be convicted under the statute. Reg. v. May, 10 Cox C. C. 448, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 362, 15 Wkly. Rep. 751.

Under Geo. IV, c. 31, § 14, if the mother, concurring with her paramour, endeavored to conceal the birth, and he, in consequence of her persuasion, took the child and buried it, she could be convicted of endeavoring to conceal the birth and he as an accomplice. Reg. v. Bird, 2 C. & K. 817, 61 E. C. L. 817. And see Rex v. Douglas, 7 C. & P. 644, 1 Moody C. C. 480, 32 E. C. L. 801. But it should be clear, not only that she wished to conceal the birth, but that there was a common design — an agency — between her and the man. Reg. v. Skelton, 3 C. & K. 119.

21. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, reads that "every person who shall, by any secret disposition, etc." See Reg. v. Brown, L. R. 1 C. C. 244, 11 Cox C. C. 517, 39 L. J. M. C. 94, 22 L. T. Rep. N. S. 484, 18 Wkly. Rep. 792.

If the indictment be for child murder it has been held that no one but the mother could be convicted of concealment should it appear that the child was born dead. Reg. v. Wright, 9 C. & P. 754, 38 E. C. L. 437.

22. See, generally, Indictments and Informations.

23. Reg. v. Hounsell, 2 M. & Rob. 292. Thus an allegation that the accused "did feloniously conceal the birth of a bastard child, the issue of her body, by secreting the said child, so that it might not be known whether or not it had been born alive, said child being dead when found," is but the statement of a conclusion of law and is insufficient. Foster v. Com., 12 Bush (Ky.) 373, 374. Compare State v. Ellis, 43 Ark. 93; Boyles v. Com., 2 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 40.

Allegation that child is a bastard.— In those jurisdictions where the offense can be committed only if the child be a bastard an allegation of bastardy is essential. Sullivan v. State, 36 Ark. 64. But if not so restricted the allegation is of course unnecessary. Rex v. Douglas, 7 C. & P. 644, 1 Moody C. C. 480, 32 E. C. L. 801.

death of the child must of course be alleged[24] the intent or motive in the concealing need not, by perhaps the better authority, be stated.[25]

V. EVIDENCE.

The evidence in order to authorize a conviction must be sufficient to show the existence of every essential element of the offense.[26] And in order to avoid variance the evidence must correspond with the allegations in the indictment.[27]

Allegation that child was born alive.— In those jurisdictions where it is immaterial whether or not the child be born alive the indictment need not allege that it was alive when born. Reg. v. Coxhead, 1 C. & K. 623, 47 E. C. L. 623. And see State v. White, 76 Mo. 96.

England.— Reg. v. Coxhead, 1 C. & K. 623, 47 E. C. L. 623, 624, where it is held that an indictment which charges that the defendant did cast and throw the dead body of the child into the soil in a certain privy, "and did thereby then and there unlawfully dispose of the dead body of the said child, and endeavour to conceal the birth thereof" sufficiently charges the endeavor to conceal the birth, as the word "thereby" applies to the endeavor as well as to the disposing of the dead body.

Sufficient allegation of death.— An allegation in an indictment that Sarah "the said infant having, on the day and year, &c., died, did endeavor, privately, to conceal the death of the said infant" is a sufficient allegation of its death. Boyles v. Com., 2 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 40, 43.

The child was born alive.— See Com. v. McKee, Add. (Pa.) 1; Com. v. Clark, 2 Ashm. (Pa.) 105; Rex v. Poulton, 5 C. & P. 329, 24 E. C. L. 590. See supra, II, A.

Legitimacy of child.— Com. v. Clark, 2 Ashm. (Pa.) 105. See supra, II, B.

Intention to conceal.— Com. v. Clark, 2 Ashm. (Pa.) 105. Where the death of the child is undisputed the evidence must show an intent to conceal, the sufficiency of which will depend upon the circumstances attending each particular case. Thus where the body of the child was found a few hours after its birth on the floor of an attic in the house where the mother lived as a domestic servant, the head severed from the body and both lying on sheets which had been removed from the bedroom below, in which there was evidence that the birth had taken place, but it was doubtful whether the severance of the head from the body was effected there or in the attic, it was held that there was no evidence to warrant the jury in finding a verdict for the statutory misdemeanor of endeavoring to conceal the birth. Reg. v. Goode, 6 Cox C. C. 318. But the act of throwing a bastard child down the privy was evidence of an endeavor to conceal the birth within 43 Geo. III, c. 58, § 3. Rex v. Cornwall, R. & R. 250. See supra, II, C, 1.

Concealment.— Mere proof that a woman was delivered of a child and allowed two others to take its body away was held to be sufficient to sustain an indictment against her for concealment of its birth. Reg. v. Bate, 11 Cox C. C. 686. And under the Pennsylvania statute of 1718, concealment of the death was evidence that the child was born alive and killed by the mother; but under the statutes of 1786, 1790, concealment alone was not sufficient to convict the mother; presumptive proof that the child was born alive being required. While by the statute of 1794 attendant circumstances in conjunction with concealment was necessary. Com. v. McKee, Add. (Pa.) 1. See supra, II, C.

That child was dead when concealed.—Evidence failing to prove the death of the child would be insufficient. Reg. v. Bell, Ir. R. 8 C. L. 541, 542. And it has been held necessary in order to convict one of this offense that the dead body of the child be found and identified. Reg. v. Williams, 11 Cox C. C. 684. And see Com. v. Clark, 2 Ashm. (Pa.) 105.

27. Thus where the indictment alleged the concealment to have been in and among a certain heap of carrots, and the evidence was that the body was laid upon the heap but behind it so that it was hidden from the passer-by by the upper part of the heap, it was held that the evidence did not support the indictment. Reg. v. ——, 6 Cox C. C. 391.

Proof of name of child.— Where one count of an indictment described the child as "Harriet Stroud," and the second count as "a female of tender age, whose name is to the jurors aforesaid unknown," and the only evidence was that the child was baptized "Harriet," and was so called, but there was no evidence that it had been called "Harriet Stroud," it was held that a conviction could not be sustained on either of these counts, as the variance in the first was fatal, and to sustain the second there must have been evidence showing that the name could not reasonably have been supposed to be known to the grand jury. Reg. v. Stroud, 1 C. & K. 187, 2 Moody C. C. 270, 47 E. C. L. 187. But if the only count in the indictment is an allegation that the "name is unknown" to the jurors, evidence that the mother had said she wished the child to be given a certain name, and on two occasions had called it such name, is not a sufficient variance to avoid the conviction. Rex v. Smith, 6 C. & P. 151, 1 Moody C. C. 402, 25 E. C. L. 368. And see Reg. v. Evans, 8 C. & P. 765, 34 E. C. L. 1009, holding that evidence that a child six weeks old was baptized on a Sunday, and from that day to the following Tuesday was called by its name of baptism and its mother's surname, was sufficient to warrant the jury in finding that it was properly described by those names in the indictment. To a similar effect see Rex v. Sheen, 2 C. & P. 634, 12 E. C. L. 776.

The evidence must also sustain the conjunctive requirements of the statute, if such a provision be made. Thus where the offense consisted in the mother's concealment of her pregnancy "and" the birth of her bastard child, the defendant must be acquitted where it appears that, prior to her confinement, she had informed her mother and her paramour of her pregnancy. the term means to join with other claimants in presenting a demand against an insolvent estate.[56]

CONCURATOR. In the civil law, a joint or co-curator, or guardian.[57]

CONCURRENCE. Joint approval or action.[58] In French law, the possession, by two or more persons, of equal rights or privileges over the same subject-matter.[59] (See CONSENT.)

CONCURRENCE DISLOYALE. A word used among French speaking nations to designate the offense of infringement of trade-marks. This term may be fairly anglicized as a dishonest, treacherous, perfidious rivalry in trade.[60] (See, generally, TRADE-MARKS AND TRADE-NAMES.)

CONCURRENT. Having the same authority; acting in conjunction; agreeing in the same act; contributing to the same event; contemporaneous;[61] running together;[62] co-operating; contributing to the same effect;[63] acting in conjunction; agreeing in the same act; contributing to the same event or effect; co-operating; accompanying; conjoined; associate; concomitant; joint and equal; existing together, and operating on the same objects.[64] (Concurrent: Conditions, see SALES. Covenants, see CONTRACTS; COVENANTS. Insurance, see FIRE INSURANCE. Jurisdiction, see COURTS. Negligence, see NEGLIGENCE. Remedies, see ADMIRALTY; ELECTION OF REMEDIES.)

CONCURRENT LEASE. One granted for a term which is to commence before the expiration or other determination of a previous lease of the same premises, made to another person, or, in other words, an assignment of a part of the reversion, entitling the lessee to all the rents accruing upon the previous lease after the date of his lease, and all the remedies against the tenant under the prior lease, which his lessor would have had, except for the assignment.[65]

CONCURRENT WRITS. Duplicate originals, or several writs running at the same time or for the same purpose, for service on or arrest of a person, when it is not known where he is to be found; or for service on several persons, as when there are several defendants to an action.[66]

CONCURSO. A remedy provided by state laws, to enable creditors to enforce their claims against a debtor.[67]

CONCURSUS. In the civil law, (1) a running together; a collision, as concursus creditorum, a conflict among creditors; (2) a concurrence, or meeting, as concursus actionum, concurrence of actions.[68] (See, generally, INTERPLEADER.)

CONDEDIT. In ecclesiastical law, the name of a plea entered by a party to a libel filed in the ecclesiastical court, in which it is pleaded that the deceased made the will which is the subject of the suit, and that he was of sound mind.[72]

CONDEMN. To find or adjudge guilty; to adjudge or sentence;[73] to deem, think or judge any one, to be guilty, to be criminal — to give judgment, or sentence, or doom of guilt; to adjudge or declare the penalty or punishment;[74] to adjudge (as an admiralty court) that a vessel is a prize, or that she is unfit for service;[75] to set apart or expropriate property for public use, in the exercise of the power of eminent domain.[76] (See, generally, CONDEMNATION; CRIMINAL LAW; EMINENT DOMAIN.)

CONDEMNATION. The act of condemning.[77] In the civil law, a sentence or judgment which condemns some one to do, to give, or to pay something, or which declares that his claim or pretensions are unfounded.[78] (Condemnation: Of Prize, see ADMIRALTY; WAR. Of Property, see CUSTOMS DUTIES; EMINENT DOMAIN; FORFEITURES; INTERNAL REVENUE; NEUTRALITY LAWS; SHIPPING; WAR.)

CONDEMNATION MONEY. The damages which the party failing in an action is adjudged or condemned to pay; sometimes simply called the "condemnation";[79] the damages that should be awarded against the appellant, by the judgment of the court.[80]

CONDESCENDENCE. In Scotch law, a part of the proceedings in a cause, setting forth the facts of the case on the part of the pursuer or plaintiff.[81]

CONDICTIO. In Roman law, a general term for actions of a personal nature, founded upon an obligation to give or do a certain and defined thing or service.[82]

CONDICTIO REI FURTIVÆ, QUIA REI HABET PERSECUTIONEM, HÆREDEM QUOQUE FURIS OBLIGAT. A maxim meaning "The appointment of an action on a certain day relating to stolen goods, since it implies the production of the goods, binds the heir of the thief also."[83]

96. Black L. Dict.

Conditions known to the common law are defined under their appropriate names in the following titles: Conditions are either express or implied. They are express when they appear in the contract; they are implied whenever they result from the operation of law, from the nature of the contract, or from the presumed intent of the parties. They are possible or impossible; the former when they admit of performance in the ordinary course of events; the latter when it is contrary to the course of nature or human limitations that they should ever be performed. They are lawful or unlawful; the former when their character is not in violation of any rule, principle, or policy of law; the latter when they are such as the law will not allow to be made. They are consistent or repugnant; the former when they are in harmony and concord with the other parts of the transaction; the latter when they contradict, annul, or neutralize the main purpose of the contract. Repugnant conditions are also called "insensible." They are independent, dependent, or mutual; the first when each of the two conditions must be performed without any reference to the other; the second when the performance of one is not obligatory until for its object to suspend, to rescind, or to modify the principal obligation; or, in a will, to suspend, revoke, or modify the devise or bequest;[97] a modus or quality annexed by him that hath an estate, or interest or right to the same, whereby an estate, etc., may either be defeated, enlarged, or created upon an uncertain event;[98] a qualification or restriction annexed to conveyance of lands, whereby it is provided that in case a particular event does or does not happen, or in case the grantor or grantees do, or omit to do, a particular act, an estate shall commence, be enlarged or be defeated.[99] Also at common law as well as in the civil law, the rank, situation, or degree of a particular person in some one of the different orders of society.[1] (Condition: Acceptance of, see APPEAL AND ERROR. the actual performance of the other; the third when neither party need perform his condition unless the other is ready and willing to perform his. Black L. Dict.

In civil law, conditions are of the following several kinds: The "casual condition" is that which depends on chance, and is in no way in the power either of the creditor or of the debtor. A "mixed condition" is one that depends at the same time on the will of one of the parties and on the will of a third person, or on the will of one of the parties and also on a casual event. The "potestative condition" is that which makes the execution of the agreement depend on an event which it is in the power of the one or the other of the contracting parties to bring about or to hinder. A "resolutory condition" is one which destroys or releases an obligation already vested, as soon as the condition is fulfilled. A "suspensive condition" is one which postpones the obligation until the happening of a future and uncertain event, or a present but unknown event. Black L. Dict. [citing La. Civ. Code (1900), arts. 2023 et seq.].

In French law, the following peculiar distinctions are made: (1) A condition is casualle when it depends on a chance or hazard; (2) a condition is potestative when it depends on the accomplishment of something which is in the power of the party to accomplish; (3) a condition is mixte when it depends partly on the will of the party and partly on the will of others; (4) a condition is suspensive when it is a future and uncertain event, or present but unknown event, upon which an obligation takes or fails to take effect; (5) a condition is resolutoire when it is the event which undoes an obligation, which has already had effect as such. Black L. Dict. [citing Brown L. Dict.].

Qualities annexed to personal contracts and agreements are frequently called conditions, and these must be interpreted according to the real intention of the parties. Selden v. Pringle, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 458, 466 [citing Bacon Abr. tit. Conditions].

A condition is created by inserting the very words "condition" or "on condition" in the agreement. Warner v. Bennett, 31 Conn. 468, 475 [citing 1 Bouvier Inst. 285].

Distinguished from other terms.— A "condition" is to be distinguished from a "limitation," in that the latter may be to or for the benefit of a stranger, who may then take advantage of its determination, while only the grantor, or those who stand in his place, can take advantage of a condition; and in that a limitation ends the estate without entry or claim, which is not true of a condition. It also differs from a "conditional limitation"; for in the latter the estate is limited over to a third person, while in case of a simple condition it reverts to the grantor, or his heirs or devisees. It differs also from a "covenant," which can be made either by a grantor or grantee, while only the grantor can make a condition. A charge is a devise of land with a bequest out of the subject-matter, and a charge upon the devisee personally, in respect of the estate devised, gives him an estate on condition. A condition also differs from a "remainder"; for, while the former may operate to defeat the estate before its natural termination, the latter cannot take effect until the completion of the preceding estate. Black L. Dict. [citing Stearns v. Godfrey, 16 Me. 158; 1 Cok Litt. 70].

The words usually employed to create a condition are, "on condition." But the phrases, "so that," "provided," "if it shall happen," are of the same import. "Provided, always," may constitute a condition, limitation or covenant, according to circumstances. Heaston v. Randolph County, 20 Ind. 398, 403.

3. Black L. Dict.

Conditional acceptance is a new offer, which requires acceptance in its turn to close the bargain. Stotesburg v. Massengale, 13 Mo. App. 221, 226.

Conditional contract is an executory contract, the performance of which depends upon a condition. It is not simply an executory contract, since the latter may be an absolute agreement to do, or not to do, something; but it is a contract whose very existence and performance depends upon a contingency and condition. Story Contr. [quoted in Nashville, etc., R. Co. v. Jones, 2 Coldw. (Tenn.) 574, 584]. See, generally, CONTRACTS.

Conditional conveyance is one which is restricted and limited by some condition, the non-performance of which will hinder it from operation and effect, if it be a condition precedent. Falconer v. Buffalo, etc., R. Co., 69 N. Y. 491, 498.

Conditional creditor, in the civil law, is a creditor having a future right of action, or having a right of action in expectancy. Black L. Dict.

A conditional disposition is one which depends upon the occurrence of some uncertain event, by which it is either to take effect or be defeated. Black L. Dict. See, generally, WILLS.

Conditional fee is a fee restrained to some particular heirs, exclusive of others; "as, to the heirs of a man's body," by which only his lineal descendants are admitted, in exclusion of collateral heirs. Simmons v. Augustin, 3 Port. (Ala.) 69, 96; Kirk v. Furgerson, 6 Coldw. (Tenn.) 479, 483.

It was called a "conditional fee," by reason of the condition expressed or implied in the donation of it that, if the donee died without such particular heirs, the land should revert to the donor. Black L. Dict. See, generally, ESTATES.

Conditional legacy is one which is liable to take effect or to be defeated according to the occurrence or non-occurrence of some uncertain event. Black L. Dict. See, generally, WILLS.

Conditional limitation is a condition followed by a limitation over to a third person in case the condition be not fulfilled or there be a breach of it. Black L. Dict. See, generally, ESTATES. A conditional limitation is where an estate is so expressly defined and limited by the words of its creation that it cannot endure for any longer time than till the contingency happens upon which the estate is to fail. Between conditional limitations and estates depending on conditions subsequent there is this difference: that in the former the estate determines as soon as the contingency happens; but in the latter it endures until the grantor or his heirs take advantage of the breach. 1 Stephen Comm. 309, 310 [quoted in Black L. Dict.].

Conditional obligation, in the civil law, is one which is made to depend upon an uncertain event. If the obligation is not to take effect until the event happens, it is a suspensive condition; if the obligation takes effect immediately, but is liable to be defeated when the event happens, it is then a resolutory condition. Moss v. Smoker, 2 La. Ann. 909, 991, where it is said: "It is certainly usual in agreements, as Domat has well said, for the parties to foresee accidents that may produce some change which they are willing to guard against; they therefore, said he, regulate what shall be done if those cases do happen." The Lousiana code defines conditional obligations as those which result from the operation of law, from the nature of the contract, or from the presumed intent of the parties. Moss v. Smoker, 2 La. Ann. 989, 991.

Conditional stipulation, in the civil law, is a stipulation to do a thing upon condition, as the happening of any event. Black L. Dict.

CONDITION DISJUNCTIVE. A CONDITION (q. v.) requiring one of several things to be done.[8]

CONDITIONEM TESTIUM TUNC INSPICERE DEBEMUS CUM SIGNAREM, NON MORTIS TEMPORE. A mamim meaning "The condition of witnesses when they sign, and not when they die, is to be considered."[9]

CONDITIO NENINEM JUVABIT NISI QUI PARS FUERIT AUT PRIVUS. A maxim meaning "An agreement shall avail no one unless he shall have been a party or privy to it."[10]

CONDITIONES PRÆCEDENTAS AD NORMAM LEGIS SEVERE EXIGENDÆ; ALITER DE SUBSEQUENTIBUS UBI ÆQUITATI LICET DAMNUM REI INFECTÆ PENSARE. A maxim meaning "Preceding agreements must be rigorously exacted according to the rules of law; but it is otherwise concerning subsequent agreements, where equity is allowed to make up for the loss incurred by the failure."[11]

CONDITIONES QUÆLIBET ODIOSÆ; MAXIME AUTEM CONTRA MATRIMONIUM ET COMMERCIUM. A maxim meaning "Any conditions are odious, but especially those which are against [in restraint of] marriage and commerce."[12]

CONDITION EXPRESSED. A CONDITION (q. v.) annexed, by express words, to any feoffment, lease, or grant.[13] (See, generally, CONTRACTS; DEEDS; LANDLORD AND TENANT.)

CONDITION IMPLIED. A CONDITION (q. v.) which the law infers or presumes, from the nature of the transaction or the conduct of the parties, to have been tacitly understood between them as a part of the agreement, although not expressly mentioned.[14] (See, generally, CONTRACTS; DEEDS.)

CONDITION IN DEED. A CONDITION (q. v.) expressed in a deed, (as a feoffment, lease, or grant,) in plain words, or legal terms of law.[15] (See, generally, DEEDS; LANDLORD AND TENANT.)

CONDITION INHERENT. A CONDITION (q. v.) annexed to the rent reserved out of the land whereof the estate is made; or rather to the estate in the land, in respect of rent, etc.[16]

CONDITION IN LAW. A CONDITION (q. v.) tacitly created or annexed to a grant, by law, without any words used by the party.[17]

CONDITION NEGATIVE. A CONDITION (q. v.) which consists in not doing a thing; as provided that the lessee shall not alien, etc.[18]

CONDITION POSITIVE. A CONDITION (q. v.) which requires that an event shall happen or an act be done.[19]

CONDITION PRECEDENT. A CONDITION (q. v.) which calls for the performance of some act or the happening of some event after the terms of the contract have been agreed upon, before the contract shall take effect.[20] (See CONDITION

A condition precedent doth get and gain the thing or estate made upon condition, by the performance of it; as a condition subsequent keeps and continues the estate by the performance of the condition. Jacob L. Dict. [quoted in Redman v. Ætna Ins. Co., 49 Wis. 431, 439, 4 N. W. 591].

Conditions may be precedent or subsequent. — In the former, the condition must be performed before the contract becomes absolute and obligatory upon the other party. In the latter, the breach of the conditions may destroy the party's rights under the contract, or may give a right to damages to the other party according to a true construction of the intention of the parties. Black L. Dict. [citing Ga. Code, § 2722].

Conditions have no idiom. — Whether they be precedent or subsequent is a question purely of intent; and the intention must be determined by considering not only the words

SUBSEQUENT. Condition Precedent: In General, see CONTRACTS; DEEDS; and the like. To Action or Proceeding, see ACTIONS; CONTRACTS; COUNTIES; COVENANTS; CUSTOMS DUTIES; EJECTMENT; EMINENT DOMAIN; EQUITY; EXECUTIONS; FALSE IMPRISONMENT; FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER; FRAUD; FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES; GARNISHMENT; INJUNCTIONS; INTOXICATING LIQUORS; LANDLORD AND TENANT; LIBEL AND SLANDER; MALICIOUS PROSECUTION; MANDAMUS; MASTER AND SERVANT; MORTGAGES; PARTITION; PATENTS; PAYMENT; PENALTIES; QUIETING TITLE; QUO WARRANTO; RAILROADS; RECEIVERS; REPLEVIN; SALES; SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE; TAXATION; TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES; TRADE-MARKS AND TRADE-NAMES; TRESPASS; TOWNS; TROVER AND CONVERSION; USURY; VENDOR AND PURCHASER; and like special titles.)

CONDITION RESTRICTIVE. A CONDITION (q. v.) for not doing a thing; as that the lessee shall not alien or do waste, or the like.[21]

CONDITIONS CONCURRENT. Conditions concurrent are those which are mutually dependent, and are to be performed at the same time.[22]

CONDITION SINGLE. A CONDITION (q. v.) to do one thing only.[23]

CONDITIONS OF SALE. The terms upon which sales are made at auction; usually written or printed and exposed in the auction room at the time of sale.[24] (See, generally, AUCTIONS AND AUCTIONEERS.)

CONDITION SUBSEQUENT. A CONDITION (q. v.) which follows the performance of the contract, and operates to defeat and annul it upon the subsequent failure of either party to comply with the conditions.[25] (See CONDITION PRECEDENT; CONTRACTS.)

CONDITIO PRÆCEDENS ADIMPLERI DEBET PRIUS QUAM SEQUATUR EFFECTUS. A maxim meaning "A condition precedent must be fulfilled before the effect can follow."[26]

CONDOMINIA. In the civil law, co-ownerships or limited ownerships, such as emphyteusis, superficies, pignus, hypotheca, ususfructus, usus, and habitatio. These were more than mere jura in re aliená, being portion of the dominium itself, although they are commonly distinguished from the dominium strictly so called.[27]

CONDONACION. In Spanish law, the remission of a debt, either expressly or tacitly.[28]

CONDONARE. In old English law, to forgive; to remit.[29]

CONDONATION.[30] A pardon or forgiveness of a past wrong, fault, or deficiency which has occasioned a breach of some duty or obligation;[31] the forgiveness, either express or implied, by a husband of his wife, or by a wife of her husband, for a breach of marital duty, as adultery;[32] a remission or pardon of of the particular clause, but also the language of the whole contract as well as the nature of the act required, and the subject-matter to which it relates. Bucksport, etc., R. Co. v. Brewer, 67 Me. 295, 299.

30. A strictly technical word.—Dent v. Dent, 34 L. J. M. C. 118, 13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 252, 4 Sw. & Tr. 105, 107.

Essentially different from "connivance."—Turton v. Turton, 3 Hagg. Eccl. 338, 350.

"Condoned" is defined as follows: "Forgiveness by the husband of his wife, or by the wife of the husband, of acts committed, with the implied condition that the injury should not be repeated, and that the other party should be treated with conjugal kindness." Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in Callen v. Callen, 44 Kan. 370, 373, 24 Pac. 360].

It may be express, or implied, as by the husband cohabiting with a delinquent wife, for it is to be presumed he would not take her to his bed again unless he had forgiven her. Beeby v. Beeby, 1 Hagg. Eccl. 789, 793.

"Condonation" is not an absolute term, which can be applied alike to all circumstances. Its application will vary as the offense said to have been condoned may vary. If the offense be adultery, then knowledge of the fact of the defendant, followed by co-

the offense;[33] forgiveness legally releasing the injury;[34] connubial intercourse with full knowledge of all the facts;[35] a blotting out of an offense imputed so as to restore the offending party to the same position he or she occupied before the offense was committed;[36] a conditional forgiveness,[37] founded on a full knowledge of all antecedent guilt,[38] with an implied condition that the offense shall not be repeated,[39] and that the other party shall thereafter be treated with conjugal kindness.[40] The term necessarily includes that operation of the mind, evinced by words or acts, known as forgiveness; the free, voluntary and full forgiveness and remission of a matrimonial offense.[41] (See, generally, ADULTERY; DIVORCE; HUSBAND AND WIFE.)

habitation, is ipso facto condonation. McClanahan v. McClanahan, 104 Tenn. 217, 228, 56 S. W. 858.

All condonations by operation of law are expressly or impliedly conditional; for the effect is taken off by repetition of misconduct. Condonation is not an absolute and unconditional forgiveness. CONDUCT MONEY. In English practice, money paid to a witness who has been subpœnaed on a trial, sufficient to defray the reasonable expenses of going to, staying at, and returning from the place of trial.[49]

CONDUCTOR. A director or manager in general.[50] In the civil law, a hirer.[51] (See, generally, CARRIERS; MASTER AND SERVANT.)

CONDUCTOR OPERARUM. In the civil law, a person who engages to perform a piece of work for another, at a stated price.[52]

CONDUCTUS. A thing hired.[53]

CONDUIT. A general word which applies to any channel or structure by which flowing water can be conducted from one point to another. It includes a ditch, flume, pipe, or any kind of aqueduct;[54] either a channel or a pipe.[55] (See, generally, DRAINS; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS; WATERS.)

CONFECTIO. The making and completion of a written instrument.[56]

CONFECTIONERY. A generic word, which includes a great variety of kinds of articles usually sold in a confectioner's shop;[57] a place where sweetmeats and similar things are made and sold.[58]

CONFEDERACY. In criminal law, where two or more combine together to do any damage or injury to another, or to do any unlawful act.[59] In equity pleading, an improper combination alleged to have been entered into between the defendants to a bill in equity.[60] In international law, a league or agreement between two or more independent states whereby they unite for their mutual welfare and the furtherance of their common aim.[61]

61. The term may apply to a union so formed for a temporary or limited purpose, as in the case of an offensive and defensive alliance; but it is more commonly used to denote that species of political connection between two or more independent states by which a central government is created, invested with certain powers of sovereignty, (mostly external,) and acting upon the several component states as its units, which, however, retain their sovereign powers for domestic purposes and some others. Black L. Dict.

CONFEDERATE MONEY. An obligation or promise of the Confederate states to pay a certain number of dollars, therein mentioned, to bearer in a specified time after a treaty of peace between the Confederate states and the United States. It did not purport to be of any value unless the rebellion should prove to be a success.[62]

CONFEDERATION. A league or compact for mutual support, particularly of princes, nations, or states.[63]

CONFERENCE. A meeting of several persons for deliberation, for the interchange of opinion, or for the removal of differences or disputes. Thus, a meeting between a counsel and solicitor to advise on the cause of their client. In the practice of legislative bodies, when the two houses cannot agree upon a pending measure, each appoints a committee of "conference," and the committees meet and consult together for the purpose of removing differences, harmonizing conflicting views, and arranging a compromise which will be accepted by both houses.[64]

CONFESS. To admit the truth of a charge or accusation; usually spoken of charges of tortious or criminal conduct.[65] The word is ordinarily used to characterize the admission of personal sin or wrongdoing.[66]

CONFESSING ERROR. A plea to an assignment of error, admitting the same.[67]

CONFESSIO. A CONFESSION,[68] q. v.

CONFESSIO FACTA IN JUDICIO OMNI PROBATIONE MAJOR EST. A maxim meaning "A confession made in court is of greater effect than any proof."[69]

CONFESSIO FACTI. Admission of a fact.[70]

CONFESSIO JURIS. Admission of law — of the effect of a thing in law.[71]

CONFESSION.[72] The acknowledgment of some fact,[73] of a fault or wrong, or of an act or obligation adverse to one's reputation or interest;[74] an admission of something done antecedently.[75] At common law an admission of a cause of action.[76] In criminal law,[77] a voluntary statement made by a person charged with the commission of a crime or misdemeanor, communicated to another person, wherein he acknowledges himself to be guilty of the offense charged, and discloses the circumstances of the act, or the share and participation which he had in it;[78] the voluntary declaration made by a person who has committed a

W. 465. "In our law the term admission is usually applied to civil transactions, and to those matters of fact in criminal cases which do not involve criminal intent; the term confession being generally restricted to acknowledgments of guilt." Greenleaf Ev. § 170 [quoted in People v. Velarde, 59 Cal. 457, 462].

78. Black L. Dict. [quoted in Spicer v. Com., 21 Ky. L. Rep. 528, 529, 51 S. W. 802]. See also State v. Heidenreich, 29 Oreg. 381, 383, 45 Pac. 755, where it is said: "If a person charged with or suspected of the commission of a crime voluntarily admits to another his agency or participation therein with a criminal intent, such admission is denominated a 'confession.'"

Express confession is made where a person charged directly confesses the crime with crime or misdemeanor, to another, of the agency or participation he had in the same;[79] a person's declaration of his agency or participation in a crime;[80] an acknowledgment of guilt;[81] the acknowledgment of a crime or fraud.[82] (Confession: As Evidence, see CRIMINAL LAW. Of Action, see JUDGMENTS. Of Judgment, see CONFESSION OF JUDGMENT.)

CONFESSION AND AVOIDANCE. A plea in confession and avoidance is one which avows and confesses the truth of the averments of fact in the declaration, either expressly or by implication, but then proceeds to allege new matter which tends to deprive the facts admitted of their ordinary legal effect, or to obviate, neutralize, or avoid them.[83] (See, generally, PLEADING.)

CONFESSION BY CULPRIT. The acknowledgment by a criminal of the offense charged against him when called upon to plead to the indictment. The criminal may confess the offense openly in court, and submit himself to the judgment of the law, so that the confession be of his own accord, without any threats or extremity used; and sometimes he confesses the indictment to be true, and then becomes an approver or accuser of others, who are guilty of the same offense for which he is indicted or of other offenses with him. There was a third sort of a confession, formerly made by an offender in felony, not in court before the judge, but before the coroner in a church or other privileged place, upon which the offender, by the ancient law of the land, was to abjure the land.[84] (See CONFESSION; CRIMINAL LAW.)

CONFESSION OF DEFENSE. In English practice, where defendant alleges a ground of defense arising since the commencement of the action, the plaintiff may deliver confession of such defense and sign judgment for his costs up to the time of such pleading, unless it be otherwise ordered.[85]

CONFESSION OF JUDGMENT.[86] A voluntary submission to the jurisdiction of the court, giving by consent and without the service of process, what could other-which he is charged. State v. Oxendine, 19 N. C. 435, 437.

Judicial or extrajudicial.— Judicial confessions are those made in conformity to law before the committing magistrate, or in court in due course of legal proceedings. Extrajudicial confessions are those which are made by a party elsewhere than before a magistrate or in court. State v. Lamb, 28 Mo. 218, 230; Speer v. State, 4 Tex. CONFESSO, BILL TAKEN PRO. In equity practice, an order which the court of chancery makes when the defendant does not file an answer, that the plaintiff may take such a decree as the case made by his bill warrants.[90] (See, generally, EQUITY.)

CONFESSOR. An ecclesiastic who receives auricular confessions of sins from persons under his spiritual charge, and pronounces absolution upon them.[91]

CONFESSORIA ACTIO. In the civil law, an action for enforcing a servitude.[92] (See, generally, EASEMENTS.)

CONFESSUS. One who has confessed.[93]

CONFESSUS IN JUDICIO PRO JUDICATO HABETUR, ET QUO DAMMODO SUA SENTENTIÆ DAMNATUR. A maxim meaning "A person confessing his guilt when arraigned is deemed to have been found guilty, and is, as it were, condemned by his own sentence."[94]

CONFIDENCE. Trust; reliance; ground of trust.[95] (See, generally, CONFIDENTIAL; TRUSTS; WILLS.)

CONFIDENCE GAME. Any swindling operation in which advantage is taken of the confidence reposed by the victim in the swindler.[96] (See, generally, FALSE PERSONATION; FALSE PRETENSES; GAMING.)

CONFIDENTIAL. Having or enjoying another's confidence; having private or secret relations with another; trusted; intimate; as a confidential clerk. Given or imparted as a secret or in confidence.[97] It has two elements, that of secrecy and that of trust and confidence.[98] (Confidential: Communication, see CONFIDENTIAL COMMUNICATIONS. Relation, see CONFIDENTIAL RELATION.)

CONFIDENTIAL COMMUNICATIONS. Certain classes of communications, passing between persons who stand in a confidential or fiduciary relation to each other, (or who, on account of their relative situation, are under a special duty of secrecy and fidelity,) which the law will not permit to be divulged, or allow them to be inquired into in a court of justice, for the sake of public policy and the good order of society.[99] (See, generally, DISCOVERY; LIBEL AND SLANDER; WITNESSES.)

Examples of such privileged relations are those of husband and wife and attorney and client. Black L. Dict.

1. "Strictly confidential relation" means much more than the imposition of important duties, requiring the exercise of intelligence bound to act for the benefit of the other and can take no advantage to himself from his acts relating to the interest of the other. Such a relation arises whenever a continuous trust is reposed by one person in the skill or integrity of another;[2] a peculiar relation which exists between client and attorney, principal and agent, principal and surety, landlord and tenant, parent and child, guardian and ward, ancestor and heir, husband and wife, trustee and cestui que trust, executors or administrators and creditors, legatees or distributees, appointer and appointee under powers, and partners and part owners.[3] (See, generally, ABSTRACTS OF TITLE; ATTORNEY AND CLIENT; CORPORATIONS; DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION; EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS; FACTORS AND BROKERS; GUARDIAN AND WARD; LANDLORD AND TENANT; PARENT AND CHILD; PARTNERSHIP; PRINCIPAL AND AGENT; PRINCIPAL AND SURETY; TRUSTS; WILLS.)

CONFINED. Restrained within limits; imprisoned; secluded; close; narrow; mean; as, a confined mind.[4]

CONFINEMENT. The state of being confined; restraint within limits; any restraint of liberty by force or other obstacle or necessity. Hence, imprisonment.[5] (See, generally, PRISONS.)

CONFIRM.[6] To make firm or certain; to give new assurance of truth or certainty; to put past doubt.[7] The word sometimes means merely "verify"; it is commonly used in that sense at the meetings of public bodies, who confirm the minutes of their last meeting, not meaning thereby that they give them force, but merely that they declare them accurate.[8] (See CONFIRMATION.)

CONFIRMARE. In old English law and conveyancing, to CONFIRM, q. v.; to make firm, or strong; to give additional strength or validity.[9]

CONFIRMARE EST ID FIRMUM FACERE QUOD PRIUS INFIRMUM FUIT. A maxim meaning "To confirm is to make firm that which was before infirm."[10]

CONFIRMARE NEMO POTEST PRIUSQUAM JUS EI ACCIDERIT. A maxim meaning "No person can confirm before the right shall fall to him."[11]

CONFIRMATIO. The conveyance of an estate, or the communication of a right that one hath in or unto lands or tenements, to another that hath the possession thereof, or some other estate therein, whereby a voidable estate is made sure and unavoidable, or whereby a particular estate is increased or enlarged.[12]

CONFIRMATIO CHARTARUM. Confirmation of charters.[13]

CONFISCATE.[29] To transfer property from private to public use; or to forfeit property to the prince, or state;[30] either an act of penal justice for the punishment of great crimes against the state, or the exercise of a belligerent right against the property of public enemies;[31] the act of the sovereign against a rebellious subject.[32] (See CONFISCATION.)

CONFISCATION. The act of confiscating; or of condemning and adjudging to the public treasury.[33] In international law, where a state seizes property belonging to another state, or to its subjects, and appropriates it. Confiscation is the punishment for carrying contraband of war; or for attempting to carry supplies to a place besieged or blockaded. Forfeiture as a punishment for smuggling, etc., is sometimes called confiscation.[34]

Formerly used as synonymous with "forfeit," but at present the distinction between the two terms is well marked. Confiscation supervenes upon forfeiture. The person, by his act, forfeits his property; the state thereupon appropriates it, that is, confiscates it. Hence, to confiscate property implies that it has first been forfeited; but to forfeit property does not necessarily imply that it will be confiscated. Black L. Dict.

Bona confiscata (confiscated goods), as they are called by the civilians, because they belong to the fiscus or imperial treasury; or, as our lawyers interpret them, forisfacta; that is, such whereof the property is gone away or departed from the owner. The true reason and only substantial ground of any forfeiture for crimes consist in this: that all property is derived from society, being one of those civil rights which are conferred upon individuals, in exchange for that degree of natural freedom which every man must sacrifice when he enters into social communities. If therefore a member of any national community violates the fundamental contract of his association, by transgressing the municipal law, he forfeits his right to such privileges as he claims by that contract; and the state may very justly resume that portion of property, or any part of it, which the laws have before assigned him. 1 Bl. Comm. 299.

"Confiscation" is also to be distinguished from "condemnation" as prize. The former is the act of the sovereign against a rebellious subject; the latter is the act of a belligerent against another belligerent. Confiscation may be effected by such means, summary or arbitrary, as the sovereign, expressing its will through lawful channels, may please to adopt. Condemnation as prize can only be made in accordance with principles of law recognized in the common jurisprudence of the world. Both are proceedings in rem, but confiscation recognizes the title of the original owner to the property, while in prize the tenure of the property is qualified, provisional and destitute of absolute ownership. CONFRONTATION. In criminal law, the act of setting a witness face to face with the prisoner, in order that the latter may make any objection he has to the witness, or that the witness may identify the accused.[51]

CONFUSIO. In the civil law, the inseparable intermixture of property belonging to different owners; it is properly confined to the pouring together of fluids, but is sometimes also used of a melting together of metals or any compound formed by the irrevocable commixture of different substances.[52] (See, generally, CONFUSION OF GOODS.)

CONFUSION. In Roman and French law, a mode of extinguishing a debt, by the concurrence in the same person of two qualities which mutually destroy one another; this may occur in several ways, as where the creditor becomes the heir of the debtor, or the debtor the heir of the creditor, or either accedes to the title of the other by any other mode of transfer.[53] As used in the civil law, it is synonymous with "merger" as used in the common law; it arises where two titles to the same property unite in the same person.[54] (Confusion: Of Boundaries, see CONFUSION OF BOUNDARIES. Of Debts, see CONFUSION OF DEBTS. Of Goods, see CONFUSION OF GOODS.)

Hence, if the creditor is only one of several heirs to the debtor of the whole, the confusion and extinction only take place in respect of the part, for which he is heir, and the demand continues to subsist against the others, as to the parts, for which they are respectively liable to the debts of the deceased"].

I. DEFINITION.

The intermixture of goods owned by different persons so that the property of each can no longer be distinguished is denominated a confusion of goods.[1]

1. Hesseltine v. Stockwell, 30 Me. 237, 50 Am. Dec. 627; Brakeley v. Tuttle, 3 W. Va. 86; 2 Bl. Comm. 405; Black L. Dict.

As for instance, a mixture of liquids, as wine and wine, or wine and honey, or melted silver and gold. Woods Inst. 158 [cited in Treat v. Barber, 7 Conn. 274, 280].

The doctrine is derived from the civil law. — Treat v. Barber, 7 Conn. 274.

What is not confusion. — It is not a mingling of goods to put potatoes into one end of a trench where potatoes belonging to another person are stored, separated therefrom by a partition of hay. Scott v. Schofield, 101 Iowa 15, 69 N. W. 1127. Nor is a confusion shown in a suit for the infringement of a patent, the only confusion being in the bookkeeping of the concern, and not a confusion of the articles themselves. In fact in such an instance it is perhaps impossible that the goods could be intermixed, as the identity of each could always be determined upon inspection. National Carbrake Shoe Co. v. Terre Haute Car, etc., Co., 19 Fed. 514. So too if one upon the accession of property in good faith adds property thereto and sells the same from time to time, but keeps the proceeds of each separate and distinctly ascertainable, there is no such confusion of goods as would make him chargeable with the value

II. DETERMINATION OF RIGHTS INVOLVED.

A. In General. In determining the relative rights of the parties after such an intermixture the courts have met with no little difficulty.[2] The civil law, although it gave the whole of the property to him who had not interfered in the mixture, allowed satisfaction to the other for what he had so improvidently lost.[3] On the other hand the common law, to guard against fraud, gave the entire property to him whose dominion was invaded without his consent.[4]

B. When Forfeiture May Be Claimed — 1. Commingling Must Be Fraudulent or Negligent. To invoke a forfeiture it is necessary to show that the mixing or confusing was done either through one's own negligence[5] or with a fraudulent or improper motive.[6]

2. Goods Must Be Incapable of Identification. Forfeitures not being favored of the property at the time he obtained it. Armstrong v. McAlpin, 18 Ohio St. 184. And see Leonard v. Belknap, 47 Vt. 602.

2. The court of Massachusetts, in the well-considered case of Ryder v. Hathaway, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 298, 304, say: "Few subjects in the law are less familiar, or more obscure, than that which relates to the confusion of property. If different parcels of chattels, not capable of being identified, owned by different persons, get mixed, how are they to be severed? What are the relative rights of the different owners. Take, for example, grain or liquor. Can each one of the former owners take from the common mass his proportion, or do they become tenants in common of the whole? If one takes the whole, what shall be the remedy of the other? Will trespass lie?"

3. Bryant v. Ware, 30 Me. 295 [citing Ward v. Ayre, Cro. Jac. 366; Browne Civ. L. 243; 2 Kent Comm. 363, 364]; 2 Inst. c. 1, § 28 [cited in 2 Bl. Comm. 406]. But see Ryder v. Hathaway, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 298, 305, where the rule is evidently misstated by Morton, J.

4. Fellowes v. Mitchell, 2 Vern. 515 [citing Bullock v. Dibler, Popham 38; Hungerford v. Haviland, 2 Bulstr. 323]; Lupton v. White, 15 Ves. Jr. 432, 440, 10 Rev. Rep. 94 [citing Panton v. Panton]; 2 Bl. Comm. 406; 1 Hale P. C. 513.

5. In Wells v. Batts, 112 N. C. 283, 291, 17 S. E. 417, 34 Am. St. Rep. 506, a woman allowed her husband before his death, and after his death an administrator, to confuse crops so that it was impossible to tell which crop was grown upon her land and which upon that of her husband. In discussing this case the court say: "It is true that this was done by her 'tacit' consent only, but it was the result at least of her neglect to see that the crops were not intermixed. She had the control of her lands and the crops thereon, and it was her duty to have kept the crops distinct from the husband's if she intended to insist upon her legal right to the same. . . . We must infer that by permitting she at least knew of the intermixing and did not object, and this would be 'neglect' within the principle of the authority cited." See also Robinson v. Holt, 39 N. H. 557, 75 Am. Dec. 233.

Massachusetts.— Ryder v. Hathaway, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 298, 305, where it was said: "There may be an intentional intermingling, and yet no wrong intended; as where a man mixes two parcels together, supposing both to be his own, or that he was about to mingle his with his neighbour's, by agreement, and mistakes the parcel. In such cases, which may be deemed accidental intermixtures, it would be unreasonable and unjust, that he should lose his own, or be obliged to take his neighbour's."

Rep. 1010, the court saying: "It has been long settled in our law, that, where goods are mixed so as to become undistinguishable, by the wrongful act or default of one owner, he cannot recover, and will not be entitled to his proportion, or any part of the property, from the other owner: but no authority has been cited to show that any such principle has ever been applied, nor indeed could it be applied, to the case of an accidental mixing of the goods of two owners."

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Confusion of Goods," § 4.

Fraud where goods are of equal value see infra, note 16.

by the law, this common-law doctrine will not be carried further than the necessities of the case require.[7] Hence while the law casts upon the wrong-doer the burden of protecting his own rights it will not invoke a forfeiture if the identity of the goods is not destroyed and they can be distinguished by the owners.[8] Where, however, the party who does the commingling cannot distinguish and separate his own goods from the others,[9] as where one indiscriminately intermixes lumber sawed from another's logs with his own,[10] mixes his own grain with that of another,[11] places old iron fraudulently acquired on other heaps of old iron belonging to him,[12] purposely intermixes his own with another's bales of cotton,[13] wilfully places his brand on another's cattle, intermingling them with his own,[14] or in any other way wrongfully changes or destroys the identity of the goods[15] he will be held to forfeit his own.

3. Goods Must Be of Unequal Value. Applying the principles of the common law which are adopted and applied in this country it would seem just and equitable that a forfeiture should not be declared unless the goods are of unequal

Further illustrations.— Where a mining corporation works a claim in which it has a minority interest against the will of the majority interest and mingles with the gold extracted therefrom a portion of gold from its own claim without the consent of the other party, and the quantity and value of such portion is unknown (Hawkins v. Spokane Hydraulic Min. Co., (Ida. 1893) 33 Pac. 40), or where the secretary of a corporation buys a set of books with his own money and enters in them the records of the company (State v. Goll, 32 N. J. L. 285), value, but that justice would be done by allowing each party to take his proportion or share; and this is the view usually taken by the courts.[16] The wronged party would, however, have a right to the possession of the entire aggregate, leaving the wrong-doer to identify his own, if he can, or to demand his proportional part.[17]

4. Application to Third Parties — a. In General. The rule of forfeiture is of strict application between the parties to the transaction, and if the interest of third parties intervene will not apply if protection can be otherwise given to the innocent owner.[18] Thus where the owner of goods fraudulently intermixes them the whole in each case will go to the innocent party.

Fraudulent or negligent confusion.— This rule applies even, it is held, although the confusing was in fact fraudulently or negligently done. Hesseltine v. Stockwell, 30 Me. 237, 50 Am. 18. National Park Bank v. Goddard, 9 Misc. (N. Y.) 626, 30 N. Y. Suppl. 417, 62 N. Y. St. 207. See Foster v. Warner, 49 Mich. 641, 14 N. W. 673, where the owner of logs in contracting to sell them to a shingle manufacturer retained the title thereto until they should be fully paid for and also reserved the right to seize the shingles manufactured from them, if the manufacturer failed to perform the conditions of his contract. The manufacturer mingled these shingles with others, treated them all as his own property, and sold them to bona fide purchasers. It was held that a bona fide purchaser could recover against the owner of the logs if he seized any shingles sold to them which had not been manufactured from his own timber. But see Bryant v. Ware, 30 Me. 295 (where it is said that if the property could not be distinguished, the original owner had clearly a right to take possession of the whole, even if he may be held to account to the bona fide purchaser for a portion of it); Hesseltine v. Stockwell, 30 Me. 237, 50 Am. Dec. 627; Blodgett v. Seals, 78 Miss. 522, 29 So. 852 (where there are dicta to the effect that the admixture might have been of such a character that the whole lot of logs, including those in the possession of the innocent purchaser, might have become the property of the original owner).

But one having constructive notice of a bill of sale is not in law an innocent purchaser and the doctrine of confusion if applicable with those of a debtor in such manner that they cannot be distinguished,[19] buys goods, knowing that the sale is in fraud of creditors, and mingles them with his own,[20] or after setting apart certain property for his creditor mixes other property with it,[21] the creditor will have recourse against the whole mass for the amount of his claim. A confusion alone would, however, give a mere stranger no interest in the mass.[22]

b. Mortgagees.[23] The lien of a chattel mortgage is not impaired by a commingling of the goods mortgaged with other goods without the knowledge of the mortgagee,[24] or by the sale of such commingled property to a third party with notice.[25] It is incumbent upon the wrong-doer or his assignee to separate such goods from the unencumbered.[26]

C. Where Intermixture Was Unintentional or by Consent. A forfeiture of one's property not being enforced against him unless the commingling was fraudulent,[27] where the goods are intermingled with the consent of the owners or by inevitable accident they have an interest in common in proportion to their respective shares.[28] Where the confusion occurs, either partly, or perhaps wholly, will operate in favor of the real owner. Kreuzer v. Cooney, 45 Md. 582.

Where a creditor commingles goods which a debtor has turned over to him, under an agreement that when a sufficient amount thereof has been sold to pay the debts due him, the balance would be returned, with his own goods so as to destroy their identity, he will be held to have elected to pay the debtor the invoice price of the goods less the amount of the debt. Limitation.— It seems, however, that the mere intermingling by a purchaser, with his other goods, of those sold to him in fraud of the seller's creditors, does not entitle the creditors of the seller to take the purchaser's whole stock of goods as the seller's property, without requesting the purchaser to point out the portion of the goods held under such sale. This is the rule of the Roman law as stated in Mackeldey's Modern Civil Law, under the title Commixtio et Confusio. . . . In the English edition of 1845, at p. 285, the passage is as follows: — 'The mixing together of things solid or dry (commixtio) or of things liquid (confusio) which belong to different owners, has no effect upon their rights in the things, if the latter can be separated. If, on the other hand, such separation is not practicable, then the former proprietors of the things now connected will be joint owners of the whole, whenever the mixture has been made with the consent of both parties, or by accident.'" Illustrations.— Thus where a seller delivered corn to a buyer to be paid for on delivery and it was thrown into a heap with corn belonging to the buyer but was not paid for the intermixture will not preclude the seller from being paid for the corn which he delivered. Henderson v. Lauck, 21 Pa. St. 359. So where plaintiff delivered more ties to defendant than his contract called for, but so intermixed the excess with those accepted that they could not be distinguished defendant is entitled to use from the mass his proportionate share. Chandler v. De Graff, 25 Minn. 88. And where fowls mingle with those of a neighbor, the owner has a right to his own, and the offer by the neighbor to deliver those he may select up to a certain number, but which is less than the number he claims and is, from the evidence offered by him, probably entitled to, will not satisfy that right. Leonard v. Belknap, 47 Vt. 602.

Every reasonable doubt will, however, be resolved in favor of the party who was in no way concerned in the intermingling. The party at whose instance the commingling was done will in no sense be given the benefit of the doubt, even though the commingling was not done in bad faith. Osborne v. Cargill Elevator Co., 62 Minn. 400, 64 N. W. 1135.

The rule applies to public corporations as well as private individuals. Hence where a deficit occurred during the term of office of the treasurer of a county, who was also treasurer of the township and the school district, and who had intermingled the various funds, such funds so mingled belong to the various corporations pro rata, and the county is liable in equity to account to the other corporations for their proportionate share, if it appropriates the whole amount remaining after the deficit. Clark County v. Springfield, 36 Ohio St. 643.

wherever they can find them,[30] if they can do so peaceably; or they may bring actions for the value of their proportional shares against the person in possession.[31]

B. Identification and Demand. In an action to recover the value of one's proportionate share of goods confused by another it is not necessary to identify the precise article or the exact property formerly owned;[32] but if the action is in behalf of the one at whose instance or through whose negligence the confusion occurred, or if such party objects to the amount taken or claimed by the innocent party, it is incumbent upon him to distinguish or identify his own property.[33] So too it is held that if a party in reclaiming his property in good faith actually takes more than his share the other party can maintain no action against him until after a demand for the excess has been made;[34] although it seems that if the confusion occurred without the fault of either party and one in the division of the mass take an undue amount, it is unnecessary on the part of the other to maintain an action therefor to make a special demand.[35]

30. See Sims v. Glazener, 14 Ala. 695, 48 Am. Dec. 120.

Charge for storage.— If one of the owners seizes the whole mass, claiming entire ownership, and refuses to deliver any portion to the other party he will not be allowed to charge storage on such goods not owned by him, it being subsequently shown that the other claimant was in fact entitled to a portion of the mass and that the confusing was not done fraudulently. And see Pratt v. Bryant, 20 Vt. 333, where a party believing that there was a contract between himself and defendant for the delivery of a quantity of wood placed such wood upon the premises of defendant, where it was so intermingled with other wood belonging to the latter that it could not be distinguished. It subsequently developed that no contract in fact existed, and defendant warned plaintiff that in taking such wood away he must be careful not to take any which did not belong to him. The wood being intermingled, plaintiff was unable to select his wood from the mass, and did not take any away. It was held that defendant would be liable in trover if he used the wood by mistake or refused to allow plaintiff to take it away, or in assumpsit if he sold the p operty, but that book-account could not be sustained.

Merely a rule of evidence.— The rule as to the confusion of goods is merely a rule of evidence. The burden is thrown upon the wrong-doer of pointing out his own goods, and if this cannot be done, of bearing the loss which results from it. It is but an application of the principle that all things are presumed against the spoliator, that is to say against one who wrongfully destroys or suppresses evidence. CONGREGATION.[7] The act of congregating; the act of bringing together or assembling; aggregation.[8] In ecclesiastical affairs, an assemblage or union of persons in society for some religious purpose, to unite in the public worship of parties, being of the same mark and quality, became intermixed before their arrival at defendant's mill without the fault of either party. It was held that each party was entitled to his logs, or in the absence of any distinguishing mark to his proportional part of the whole lumber, and if one used or converted to his own use more than his proportional part he would be liable without special demand having been made for the excess.

It was held that the court should have submitted the question of whether the goods were mixed wilfully, fraudulently, or wrongfully, for if they were mixed innocently or by mistake the relative rights of the interested parties would be different. their God, in such manner as they deem most acceptable to him;[9] an assembly met, or a body of persons who usually meet in some stated place for the worship of God and religious instruction; and may or may not include a church or spiritual body;[10] a voluntary association of individuals or families, united for the purpose of having a common place to worship, and to provide a proper teacher to instruct them in religious doctrines and duties, and to administer the ordinances of baptism, etc.[11] The term is also used to designate certain bureaus at Rome, where ecclesiastical matters are attended to.[12] (Congregation: In General, see RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES. CONGREGATIONAL. Of, or pertaining to, a congregation.[13]

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH. A body of persons, members of a congregational or other religious society, established for the promotion and support of public worship, which body was set apart from the rest of the society, for peculiar religious observances, for the celebration of the Lord's supper, and for mutual edification.[14]

Ch. 114, where it is said: "In one sense 'congregation' might be construed as composed of all who met together at the chapel; in a more limited sense, it might mean the members only"). But see Robertson v. Bullions, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 64, 141, where it is said: "The 'congregation,' mentioned in the deed, was understood to be composed wholly of persons in full communion; and it did not then, as the term is now generally understood, include all those who attended divine service." Again in State v. Crowell, 9 N. J. L. 390, 423, it is said: "A congretion evidently consists of two kinds of members; one possessing the right to vote and the others not." Compare People v. Watseka Camp Meeting Assoc., 160 Ill. 576, 579, 43 N. When it terminates. — In State v. Jones, 53 Mo. 486, 489, it is said: "After the minister in charge dismisses his congregation, it then ceases to be a congregation met for religious worship." See also Com. v. Jennings, 3 Gratt. (Va.) 595, 597.

The Bible is the only standard by which to test heresy; the churches are not bound by any one creed, but each church makes its own, and alters it at pleasure. CONNOISSEMENT. In French law, an instrument similar to the English bill of lading.[48]

CONQUEROR. In old English and Scotch law, the first purchaser of an estate; he who brought it into the family owning it.[49]

CONQUEST.[50] In feudal law, acquisition by purchase; any method of acquiring the ownership of an estate other than by descent. Also an estate acquired otherwise than by inheritance.[51] In international law,[52] the acquisition of the sovereignty of a country by force of arms, exercised by an independent power

Connivance differs from condonation, though the same legal consequences may attend it. Connivance necessarily involves criminality on the part of the individual who connives; condonation may take place without imputing the slightest blame to the party who forgives the injury. Connivance must be the act of the mind before the offense has been committed; condonation is the result of a determination to forgive an injury which was not known until after it was inflicted. Blackstone's definition.—"What we call purchase, perquisitio, the feudists called conquest, conquæstus, or conquisitio: both denoting any means of acquiring an estate out of the common course of inheritance. And this is still the proper phrase in the law of Scotland: as it was among the Norman jurists, who styled the first purchaser (that is, he who brought the estate into the family which at present owns it) the conqueror or conquereur. Which seems to be all that was meant by the appellation which was given to William the Norman, when his manner of ascending the throne of England was, in his own and his successor's charters, and by the historians of the times, entitled conquæstus, and himself conquæstor, or conquisitor; signifying that he was the first of his family who acquired the crown of England, and from whom therefore all future claims by descent must be derived." 2 Bl. Comm. 242, 243. See, generally, ESTATES.

50. "Title by conquest," expresses, therefore, a fact and not a right. Until the fact of conquest occurs, the conqueror can have no rights. To affirm that a title acquired by conquest relates back to a period anterior to the conquest is almost a contradiction in terms. Castillero v. U. S., 2 Black (U. S.) 17, 17 L. ed. 360.

Conquisitor. In feudal law, a purchaser, acquirer, or conqueror.[55]

Consanguineus.[56] A person related by blood; a person descended from the same common stock.[57]

Consanguineus est quasi eodem sanguine natus. A maxim meaning "A person related by consanguinity is, as it were, sprung from the same blood."[58]

Consanguinity.[59] Blood relationship;[60] the having the blood of some common ancestor;[61] the connection or relation of persons descended from the same stock or common ancestor, vinculum personarum ab eodem stipite descendentium;[62] the basis of the laws which regulate the degrees between which marriage is forbidden; the rules of succession and tutorship, the recusation of judges, and the admission or rejection of persons who are offered as witnesses.[63] (Consanguinity: Affecting — Capacity to Marry, see Marriage; Credibility of Witness, see Witnesses; Right to Inherit, see Descent and Distribution. Conscience.[64] Internal or self-knowledge, or judgment of right and wrong, or the faculty, power or principle within us, which decides on the lawfulness or unlawfulness of our own actions and affections, and instantly approves or condemns them;[65] that moral sense, which dictates to a person right and wrong.[66] (Conscience: Freedom of, see Constitutional Law. Scruples of Juror Against Capital Punishment, see Juries.)

A supposition grounded upon a mistaken sense of the word conquest; which, in its feudal acceptation, signifies no more than acquisition; and this has led many hasty writers into a strange historical mistake, and one which, upon the slightest examination, will be found to be most untrue." 2 Bl. How determined.— In determining the degrees of relationship by consanguinity or affinity, like in determining the descent of property, we must proceed from a single, definite propositus. In the descent of property the propositus is the ancestor or person from whom the descent is reckoned. ## I. CONSOLIDATION.

A. Definition. Consolidation of actions may be defined generally as the union of two or more actions in one.[1]

B. Object. The object of consolidating two or more actions is to avoid a multiplicity of suits,[2] to guard against oppression or abuse,[3] to prevent delay,[4] and especially to save unnecessary cost or expense;[5] in short, the attainment of justice with the least expense and vexation to the parties litigant.[6] Consolidation, however, is improper where the conduct of the cause will be embarrassed, or complications or prejudice will result which will injuriously affect the rights of a party.[7]

Embarrassment by recovery.— Consolidation should not be granted where the debts on which the several actions are based have been guaranteed by different persons, so that the question of their liability would be embarabsence of legislative enactment courts of general common-law jurisdiction have inherent power to consolidate two or more actions at the instance of the defendant or with his consent.[8]

2. Courts of Limited Jurisdiction — a. In General. Courts or tribunals of limited or special jurisdiction have no power to order consolidation, unless that power is expressly or impliedly conferred by statute.[9]

b. Ouster of Jurisdiction. Where a plaintiff brings several separate and distinct suits against a defendant, although the causes of action are similar and might properly be joined, an order of consolidation is improper if it will have the effect of ousting the jurisdiction of the court or tribunal by reason that the aggregate amount sued for exceeds the jurisdictional limit fixed by law.[10]

3. Courts of Equity. Although the power of a court of equity to order the consolidation of causes in the absence of legislative enactment has been doubted [11] or denied,[12] the great weight of authority, both in this country and in England, is to the effect that the power is inherent or implied in its general power to make reasonable rules for the transaction and regulation of its business;[13] and it may

b. Identity of Parties. To justify consolidation it is the general rule that there must be an identity of parties, that is the parties to each action must be the same, or be so interested in the controversies that all questions involved can be determined and they be concluded by the determination.[18] And the same rule is applicable to actions brought on demands claimed in different rights or capacities, Different plaintiffs.— The provisions of the Ohio code apply only where the actions are prosecuted in behalf of the same plaintiff. Burckhardt v. Burckhardt, 36 Ohio St. 261. Where there was but one claimant of property taken under executions issued in the suit of different parties the court denied an application to consolidate interpleaders by the sheriff in the several cases. Ubler v. Selfridge, 1 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 61.

Different defendants.— An action against all the underwriters of an insurance policy cannot be joined with an action against a part of them. Isear v. Daynes, 1 N. Y. App. Div. 557, 37 N. Y. Suppl. 474, 73 N. Y. St. 202.

Two actions for the same libel, one against the editor and the other against the publisher, cannot be consolidated, although the declarations and pleas are the same, and substantially the same questions will arise and the same defense be interposed. Cooper v. Weed, 2 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 40. But see Percy v. Seward, 6 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 326; Colledge v. Pike, 56 L. T. Rep. N. S. 124 (actions against the proprietors of seventeen different newspapers, where the publication and attendant circumstances differed in each case and consolidation was refused).

Actions against different sureties.— Separate actions by a municipality against different sureties of its treasurer to recover sums unaccounted for are properly consolidated. Essex County v. Wright, 13 Ont. Pr. 474.

Actions to collect taxes.— It is proper to refuse at the instance of interveners to consolidate a number of suits by the state against "unknown owners" to collect taxes on distinct tracts of land separately assessed. Watkins v. State, (Tex. Civ. App. 1901) 61 S. W. 532.

with the result that such actions cannot be united.[19] Where, however, the defendants are different and but one common defendant is served, the latter may cause the actions to be consolidated in a proper case, where there is no appearance by the other defendants, and no intention to bring them into the case appears.[20] So if one defendant is common to all the actions which have been improperly united at plaintiff's instance he may dismiss as to the others, and if the actions might have been united, the consolidation may be permitted to stand.[21]

c. Identity of Subject-Matter — (i) In General. It is not enough, however, that the actions sought to be consolidated are between the same parties, or parties having an identity of interest, but the causes of action, subject-matter, or questions involved must be identical or substantially so, to the end that all controversies and matters of difference can be litigated and disposed of in one action.[22]

Reason for rule.— In Scott v. Cohen, 1 Nott & M. (S. C.) 413, the reason assigned why actions ex contractu against several defendants cannot be joined is that if they should have been joined and are not they may plead it in abatement.

19. Buie v. Kelly, 52 N. C. 266, actions on notes which originated at different times, were due at different times, two of them due to plaintiff in his own right, two as guardian of one family of children and three as the guardian of another.

An action by a surviving partner being in fact in his own right it may be consolidated with an action brought against the same defendant in the individual right of the plaintiff. McCartney v. Hubbell, 52 Wis. 360, 9 N. W. 61.

Same evidence.— Where two cases, involving different parties and different rights, are tried separately, although the same testimony is used in each, the court cannot order them consolidated, and that but one brief of evidence be used on a motion for new trial in both cases. Consolidation of actions ex delicto.— See infra, I, E, 2.

(II) CAUSES OF ACTION WHICH MAY BE JOINED. Another test of the propriety of consolidation is whether the causes for which the several actions were brought could have been joined in the same declaration or complaint. If there could have been a joinder, a proper case for consolidation is presented.[23] If the actions are brought on separate and distinct causes of action, which might have been joined and the plaintiff is acting strictly within his rights, the court acting within its discretion may refuse to consolidate without plaintiff's consent.[24]

d. Same Defenses or No Defense. Likewise when a consolidation is sought by the defendant in two or more actions it must appear that the defenses to them

Actions for services.— An action for a part of services rendered may be consolidated with another action for the remainder of such services for which a bill had been delivered, but which by custom was not due at the time of the institution of the first action. Beardsall v. Cheetham, E. B. & E. 243, 27 L. J. Q. B. 367, 6 Wkly. Rep. 504, 96 E. C. L. 243.

Actions to enforce municipal claims for the same work against parts of the same lot may be consolidated. Philadelphia v. Tyson, 9 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 367.

Attachments for the same debt may be united. Watson v. Thompson, 2 Montreal Leg. N. 142.

Consolidation of judgments.— An amicable action may be maintained to revive judgments and have them consolidated. Beshler's Estate, 129 Pa. St. 268, 18 Atl. 137.

Extent of liability.— Where the causes of action and defense prima facie appear to be the same, an answer to an application to consolidate that the position of some of the parties may be different and raise different questions is insufficient, although the extent of the consolidation must depend on the circumstances, especially where the questions raised are only as to the amount of the respective liability. Syers v. Pickersgill, 27 L. J. Exch. 5, 6 Wkly. Rep. 16.

U. S. Rev. Stat. (1878), § 921, empowers the federal courts to consolidate pending causes of a like nature, in which substantially the same cases are involved, although the defendants are different, and although they will be brought into antagonism. Keep v. Indianapolis, etc., R. Co., 3 McCrary (U. S.) 302, 10 Fed. 454.

Several actions on a bond for the jail limits may be consolidated. Leonard v. Merritt, Draper (U. C.) 190.

Where the facts are disputed a motion to consolidate, that the rights of the respective parties may be adjusted so as to conform to the facts alleged in the moving affidavits, is properly denied. Gloucester Iron-Works v. Board of Water Com'rs, 10 N. Y. Suppl. 168, 32 N. Y. St. 352.

Illustrations.— Thus, although the parties are different, a court of equity may consolidate where the cause of action is single (Imperial F. Ins. Co. v. Gunning, 81 Ill. 236), joint (Taylor v. Watkins, 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 363), or to avoid decrees which may clash (McConnico v. Moseley, 4 Call (Va.) 360). This principle has been applied to an action on a note and one to foreclose a mortgage securing it (Howlett v. Martin, 3 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 113, 3 Wkly. Gaz. 266); two actions to forcclose a trust deed, although a defendant in one is alone personally liable on the claim in that action (Johnston v. Tuling Mfg. Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 24 S. W. 996); an action to partition land and an action by one party thereto against the others to enforce a trust on the land (Bixby v. Bent, 59 Cal. 522); actions for infringements of different patents used in one machine (Deering v. Winona Harvester Works, 24 Fed. 90); a bill by an executor to have a will construed as to his authority to sell real estate, and a bill by the devisees praying for the appointment of trustees to sell the same property and distribute the proceeds (Hamilton v. Clarke, 3 Mackey (D. C.) 428); bills by executors of two testators who devised to the same persons, whose rights under both wills were the same (Conover v. Conover, 1 N. J. Eq. 403); suits between an executor and different legatees (Johnson v. Beauchamp, 5 Dana (Ky.) 70); and a suit by a beneficiary against a trustee and one by a legatee against the same person as executor for claims demandable out of the same fund and involving the settlement of the same transaction and the distribution of the same estate (Moorman v. Crockett, 90 Va. 185, 17 S. E. 875).

7. Actions Removed to Federal Courts. Where an action removed from a state court to a federal court is between the same parties as those to an action already pending in the latter court it may be consolidated with the latter when the object of both actions is the same.[46]

8. Appealed Cases. Cases on appeal, error, or certiorari may be consolidated at any stage of the proceedings in the appellate court when that course appears to be the most convenient, expeditious, or inexpensive to the parties,[47] unless the actions were brought on distinct causes of action;[48] and it is not a valid objection to such consolidation that the judgments would have to be certified to different and distinct lower courts.[49]

F. Modes of Consolidation — 1. By Order. It may be stated generally that the usual mode of actual consolidation is by an order of the court made on the application of a party or by agreement.[50]

2. By Certiorari. A reviewing court cannot by certiorari consolidate suits so as to bring them within its appellate jurisdiction.[51]

3. By Act of Parties. However, although no order of consolidation is made there may be such action by the parties or the circumstances may be such that a virtual consolidation will be deemed to have taken place, as where one answer is made to both bills,[52] or where the parties consent[53] or agree to try two actions together without an order, in which case the court may regard them as if consolidated regularly by order.[54]

G. Partial Consolidation. There are also decisions to the effect that several pending actions on similar instruments may be consolidated so as to reduce the whole number to be tried.[55]

H. Quasi-Consolidation — 1. In General. The term "consolidation rule"[56] is, although improperly used, applicable to several methods of procedure; one to consolidate actions or demands into one where the same plaintiff has several claims against the same defendant, all complete at the same time, or at least before he has issued any writ;[57] and another is commonly employed to consolidate pending actions on the same instrument against several defendants and is in substance a direction that all the causes abide the event and final determination of the one selected as a test case, and that the judgment therein shall be entered in all the other causes.[58]

Dec. 83, the supreme court by a divided opinion affirmed a decision that separate actions against different insurance companies for proportions of a loss for which they each were liable under the policy, and in which the evidence and defense was the same, might be consolidated, so that all should abide the result in one to be tried. In Cunnack v. Gundry, 1 Chit. 709, 18 E. C. In Anderson v. Towgood, 1 Q. B. 245, 41 E. C. L. 522, actions against two obligors of a joint and several bond, it was ordered on defendants' motion that the plaintiff proceed in whichever of the actions he should select, the proceedings in the other to be stayed until the first was tried and that the defendant should undertake to be bound by the event of the first action tried, but that plaintiff after such trial should be at liberty to proceed in the others. 4. Stay of Proceedings. In this form of procedure all the actions but the one selected to be tried are stayed until the determination of that case.[61]

5. Necessity of Proper Trial and Verdict. The trial of one action as a test case contemplates a trial on the merits and the rendition of a proper verdict.[62]

I. The Application — 1. Necessity For. Generally an application is necessary to authorize the consolidation of actions at law; but in equity, although no motion is made by either party, the court may direct the consolidation of causes, when the substantial identity of the subject-matter thereof comes to its knowledge.[63]

2. Who May Apply. At common law the right to apply or move for a consolidation was limited to the defendant,[64] and the plaintiff could not secure an order without the defendant's consent;[65] but now by statute or rule the right to move has been extended in many jurisdictions to the plaintiff.[66]

3. Where Made. Where the venue of the actions is laid in different counties, the motion is properly made in the county in which all the parties reside and all the actions are triable.[67]

an order of consolidation are by no means in accord. Thus there are authorities holding that the application may be made after the filing or delivery of the declaration and before plea.[68] Likewise it is held that an order of consolidation should not be granted until after issue has been joined in all of the cases, for the reason that until that is done the court cannot know whether the defenses are the same or substantially similar in each action.[69] So it has been required that the actions should be pending[70] and ready.[71] However, the application should be made before the actions are brought on for trial;[72] and while it has been held that several actions may be consolidated, although one of them is in judgment,[73] consolidation has been refused after judgments in the several actions have been taken for the want of a defense, for the reason that the effect would be to consolidate the judgments.[74]

5. Modes of Application — a. In General. Ordinarily an order of consolidation is sought for by a motion therefor or by obtaining and serving a rule or order to show cause why such an order should not be granted.[75] It has been held, however, that a motion to transfer causes may be treated as a motion to consolidate them.[76]

c. The Motion Papers. It must appear by the motion papers that the causes of action are such as may be joined in the same declaration;[79] that the questions which will arise in each action are the same or substantially similar;[80] that the defenses are the same or of the same nature,[81] or that no defense is intended;[82] but identity of interest of the plaintiffs cannot be shown by affidavit, when the facts in that connection are put in issue by the pleas.[83]

6. Terms and Conditions — a. In General. In a proper case the court to which application is made may impose terms as a condition of granting[84] or denying the application.[85]

b. Costs. The court to which the application is addressed may impose costs as the condition of consolidating several causes.[86]

J. Effect of Consolidation — 1. At Law — a. In General. The effect of an order of consolidation made by a court of competent jurisdiction is to bind all the parties to the action until the order is vacated or reversed.[87] The effect of consolidating actions at law is to unite the causes as if the issues had been originally embraced in one action;[88] the separate actions are discontinued and the consolidated action alone left.[89] There can be no procedure in either of the actions consolidated, and the case is to be tried as if there had been an actual consolidation in the declaration with one plea and a single issue.[90] Where the plaintiffs are different their rights remain separate and distinct, and separate and distinct proof is required.[91] When two or more suits at law are consolidated, they must be conducted in every respect as one and the same, and the rights of the parties adjudicated as if the separate suits had been originally combined in one suit.[92]

b. Dismissal of Original Cause. After consolidation of causes commenced by the same plaintiff against the same defendant, the plaintiff may dismiss his action as to some of the causes upon which he originally had commenced independent actions;[93] but a plaintiff in one action which he has caused to be consolidated with another in which he is defendant cannot by discontinuing the former affect the rights of the parties to the latter.[94]

c. Time to Plead. The time to plead in causes in different counties which have been consolidated follows the time of pleading in the county to which they are drawn by the consolidation, which may be extended.[95]

d. Effect as to Pleadings. The pleadings are to be taken and considered together and as asserting one and the same cause of action and constituting one pleading;[96] one will aid the other;[97] defects in the one will be remedied by the other and either pleading will be regarded as amendatory of the other.[98] But actions cannot be consolidated so that the petition in one will stand as an answer and counter-claim in the other;[99] nor where actions brought by different parties are consolidated without change in the pleadings will the complaint of one aid that of another of which it is no part.[1] When necessary it seems that the pleadings may be recast for the purpose of simplifying the issue.[2]

e. Effect as to Evidence. Where two or more actions are consolidated, a deposition taken in one may be introduced on the trial of the issues in the other;[3] and evidence taken under a commission entitled in the consolidated cause may be read in the principal suit.[4]

f. Judgment. At law there should be but one verdict and one judgment;[5] and it has been held that the consolidation of several appeals between the same parties will authorize a judgment for the entire amount against sureties who are upon all the appeal-bonds.[6]

2. In Equity — a. Effect as to Pleadings. After consolidation in equity, each record is that of an independent suit. The rules of equity pleading and the rights of the parties remain unchanged. The parties in one suit do not become parties in the other, and their rights still depend or turn on the pleadings, proof, and proceedings in the respective causes. The issues remain precisely as they were, and are to be determined exactly as if the cases had been heard separately. In short the consolidation merely operates to carry on together two separate suits supposed to involve identical issues and is intended to expedite the hearing and diminish the expense.[7]

b. Effect as to Evidence. Except so far as the evidence in one is by order of the court treated as evidence in both,[8] the evidence in one case is not adopted in the other,[9] but each cause must be tried upon its separate and proper proof.[10] c. Order of Trial. The order in which an action at law and a suit in equity shall be tried is discretionary with the trial judge, and the exercise by him of that discretion will not be revised.[11]

d. Effect on Prior Proceedings. So possible error on the part of the court with reference to the separate actions will be disregarded after consolidation, wherein the party is accorded all the rights to which he is entitled.[12]

e. Decree — (i) In General. The decree should be so framed as to conserve all the rights of the parties in the causes united.[13] Ordinarily the determination should be evidenced by separate and distinct decrees.[14] A decree in one action will not be regarded as a decree in the other unless so directed;[15] and neither party can stipulate or make an agreement in regard to it which will bind the other.[16]

(ii) Entitling. In chancery the decree should bear the title of the consolidated cause and should recite the consolidation and hearing of the causes together. If entitled in but one case an appeal from the decree will only carry that case up.[17]

3. Control and Conduct of Cause. Where substantially the same relief is sought the conduct and control of the causes after consolidation is usually awarded to the party who commenced first.[18] Under some circumstances, however, the conduct of the proceedings may be given to the parties chiefly interested, by whom the costs are to be borne, and to whose advantage it is to keep down the expense.[19]

K. Objections. Alleged error in ordering the consolidation of actions cannot be assigned by a party at whose instance the order was made,[20] who consented to it,[21] or who failed to interpose seasonable objection or exception when opportunity offered.[22] Nor is it material that technically the consolidation of the actions was erroneous, where no prejudice has resulted therefrom and no loss has been sustained thereby.[23]

L. Vacating and Setting Aside — 1. In General. The power to consolidate includes the power to vacate or set the consolidation aside;[24] but the party seeking to have the order of consolidation rescinded must show that it was made in disregard of his protest or present a reasonable excuse for not making seasonable objection.[25] The exercise of this power will not be revised unless prejudice has resulted.[26] So a plaintiff who has been compelled to pay accrued costs as a condition of consolidation may be permitted to withdraw from the consolidation at his election;[27] and an order erroneously consolidating an action of which the court has jurisdiction with one forbidden by statute may be disregarded and the former action proceeded with as if the order had not been made.[28] judgments are entered in each cause, one appeal may be taken from a portion of the causes which are independent of the others.[31] But no appeal will lie in any of the consolidated causes until all are finally disposed of.[32]

2. How Taken. Different defendants may sue out separate writs of error;[33] but the failure or refusal to consolidate two or more actions cannot be revised on an appeal from one of them.[34]

3. The Record. On appeal from the denial of an application to consolidate, the action of the court below will not be reviewed, where the record fails to show the nature of both actions.[35]

4. Review. An appeal in one suit will only bring up that case, leaving the other causes in the court below, and the decree as to them in full force and effect.[36]

5. Failure of One Defendant to Prosecute. If the defendant in an action ordered to be tried as a test case refuses to appeal, the court may substitute the defendant in another case for the purpose of prosecuting an appeal;[37] but if the defendant in the test case fails to prosecute an appeal taken by him and pays damages and costs to the plaintiff, the defendants in the other action will not be permitted to appeal.[38]

II. SEVERANCE.

A. As to Plaintiffs. As a general rule a demand due to several persons jointly cannot be subdivided so as to allow the individual interests to be recovered in separate actions, for the reason that the contract of the debtor is to pay the debt as an entirety to his joint creditors and is therefore indivisible.[39] However, as the debtor may by a new contract bind himself to account to the individual creditors for their respective interests in the demand, such a demand may be divided with the debtor's consent.[40]

E. Discretion to Sever. Unless the conditions are such that severance is a strict matter of right, as where the right to a joint action is conferred by statute,[54] the court is vested with judicial discretion to grant or refuse an application therefor;[55] but the improper refusal of a motion for a severance is not a ground of reversal, where no injury resulted to the moving party.[56]

I. DEFINITION AND NATURE.

A. In General. It has been said that there is perhaps no crime an exact definition of which it is more difficult to give than the offense of conspiracy.[1] The essentials of a conspiracy, whether viewed with regard to its importance in a criminal prosecution or its significance in a civil action for damages, are commonly described in this general language: It is a combination between two or more persons to do a criminal or an unlawful act or a lawful act by criminal or unlawful means.[2] This definition perhaps is not perfectly accurate, but is sufficient as a general description of the offense.[3]

B. Combination — 1. NUMBER OF PERSONS NECESSARY. To constitute a conspiracy there must be a combination of two or more persons; one person cannot conspire with himself.[4]

"A confederacy to do an unlawful act, or a lawful act by unlawful means, whether to the prejudice of an individual, or of the public." State v. Burnham, 15 N. H. 396, 402.

The term "conspiracy" is divisible into three heads:—(1) Where the end to be attained is in itself a crime; (2) where the object is lawful, but the means to be resorted to are unlawful; (3) where the object is to do an injury to a third party or a class, although if the wrong were inflicted by a single individual it would be a wrong and not a crime. Reg. v. Parnell, 14 Cox C. C. 508.

By express statutory provision in Colorado the object of the conspiracy must itself be an unlawful act if committed, and the doing of a lawful act in an unlawful way is not within the provision. 2. The Agreement — a. Necessity For Agreement — (I) In General. To constitute a conspiracy there must be unity of design and purpose, for the common design is of the essence of the conspiracy.[5]

(II) Knowledge Without Participation. The mere knowledge, acquiescence, or approval of the act, without coöperation or agreement to coöperate, is not enough to constitute one a party to a conspiracy.[6] There must be intentional participation in the transaction with a view to the furtherance of the common design and purpose.[7]

b. Character of Agreement. No formal agreement between the parties to do the act charged is necessary. It is sufficient that the minds of the parties meet understandingly so as to bring about an intelligent and deliberate agreement to do the acts and commit the offense charged, although such agreement be not manifested by any formal words.[8] If two persons pursue by their acts the same object often by the same means, one performing one part of the act and the other another part of the act, so as to complete it with a view to the attaining of the object which they were pursuing, this will be sufficient to constitute a conspiracy.[9] Previous acquaintance is unnecessary,[10] and it is not essential that each conspirator should know the exact part to be performed by the other conspirators in execution of the conspiracy.[11]

3. MEANS. If the object of the combination is unlawful, the means contemplated to effect such object are immaterial, either in a criminal prosecution to punish the perpetrators for entering into the combination or to recover of them the damages inflicted by carrying out the object of the conspiracy;[12] and it is not even necessary that the means should have been agreed upon.[13] Where, however, the object of the conspiracy is in itself not unlawful, the object is immaterial and the illegality of the means used or intended to be used constitutes the offense.[14] Where the object in view is lawful and no unlawful means are used there can be no prosecution for conspiracy,[15] nor any civil action.

"It is not necessary to constitute a conspiracy that two or more persons should meet together, and enter into an explicit or formal agreement for an unlawful scheme, or that they should directly, by words or in writing, state what the unlawful scheme was to be, and the details of the plan or means by which the unlawful combination was to be made effective. It is sufficient if two or more persons, in any manner, or through any contrivance, positively or tacitly come to a mutual understanding to accomplish a common and unlawful design. In other words, where an unlawful end is sought to be effected, and two or more persons, actuated by the common purpose of accomplishing that end, work together, in any way, in furtherance of the unlawful scheme, every one of said persons becomes a member of the conspiracy, although the part he was to take therein was a subordinate one, or was to be executed at a remote distance from the other conspirators." An excellent illustration of this principle is given in Spies v. People, 122 Ill. 1, 12 N. E. 865, 17 N. E. 898, 3 Am. St. Rep. 320. It was there held that where a number of persons conspired together to destroy the police force of a city, in a certain event, as in case of a collision between them and working-men by throwing a bomb among the police, if the bomb-maker knew it was to be thrown by one of those having the common purpose, that would be sufficient to affect him with the guilt of devising, encouraging, aiding, or abetting the crime, resulting from the act; that it was altogether immaterial that the maker of the bombs did not know who was to use them.

II. CRIMINAL LIABILITY.

A. Common-Law Offense. The offense of conspiracy, as known to the common law of England, so far as it is adapted to existing conditions, is consistent with established institutions and, unaffected by legislation, is an indictable common-law offense in many of the states.[16]

B. Constituents of Offense — 1. UNLAWFUL END OR MEANS. As already shown, in order that a combination may be punishable it must be formed either to do an unlawful act or a lawful act by criminal or unlawful means.[17] It is not essential, however, to criminal liability that the acts contemplated should constitute a criminal offense, for which without the elements of conspiracy one alone could be indicted.[18] It will be enough if they are corrupt, dishonest, fraudulent, Doctrine illustrated.— It is an indictable conspiracy to induce a young female by false representations to leave the protection of the house of her parent in order to facilitate her prostitution. Rex v. Delaval, 3 Burr. 1434, 1 W. Bl. 410, 439. So a conspiracy to impoverish a tailor and prevent him by indirect means from carrying on his trade. Rex v. Eccles, 3 Dougl. 337, 26 E. C. L. 224. So a conspiracy to marry paupers, with a view to charge one parish and exonerate another (Rex v. Tarrant, 4 Burr. 2106), to charge a man with being the father of a bastard (Rex v. Kimberty, 1 Lev. 62; Timberley v. Childe, Sid. 68; Rex v. Armstrong, 1 Vent. 304), or a combination to impoverish a class of peror immoral, and in that sense illegal.[19] A conspiracy will be indictable if the end proposed or the means to be employed are by reason of the combination particularly dangerous to the public interest, or particularly injurious to some individual, although not criminal.[20]

2. UNLAWFUL COMBINATION. According to all the authorities the conspiring together is the essence of the charge and on proof thereof a conviction is warranted.[21]

3. OVERT ACT — a. General Rule. At common law no overt act is necessary to constitute the offense of conspiracy, and the rule is of universal application, except so far as it may be changed or limited by special statutory enactment.[22]

b. Statutory Changes of Rule. Nevertheless the rule has been either entirely abrogated or much limited in its application by special statutory provisions. In Arizona, California, New Jersey, New York, and Wisconsin it is essential that some act be done in execution of the design agreed upon to complete the offense, except in cases specially excepted by the statute from its operation.[23] Under the federal statutes some overt act in pursuance of the conspiracy is a necessary element of any offense against the United States;[24] but all the overt acts charged in the indictment need not be shown. It will be sufficient to show that one or more of these acts were committed in furtherance of the conspiracy.[25]

4. Accomplishment of Purpose. As is shown in the preceding section, an overt act is not an element of the offense of conspiracy and not necessary to be Sufficient overt act.— People v. Daniels, 105 Cal. 262, 38 Pac. 720, was a trial for conspiring falsely to move and maintain an action for slander, and it was held that the commencement of such action by filing a complaint constituted a sufficient overt act. although defendant was not a party to such suit.

Insufficient proof of overt act.— U. S. v. Newton, 52 Fed. 275, was a case of conspiracy to defraud the United States by mailing old newspapers for the purpose of fraudulently increasing the weight of mail matter on a railway post route at a time when the government was considering the payment of additional compensation for the carriage of the mails. It was held that evidence that the newspapers, the fraudulent mailing of which within the district constituted the overt act charged, were rewrapped and remailed over the post route from a place outside of the district by an alleged co-conspirator, was not proof of such act although it might be considered as showing the nature, extent, plan, and operations of the conspiracy.

proved, unless there is some special statutory requirement to that effect. It necessarily follows then that if an overt act is not a constituent of the offense it is not essential that the object of the conspiracy should have been accomplished.[26] It is also immaterial that the accomplishment of the object of the conspiracy was impossible.[27] So even where an overt act is made necessary by statute it is not essential that the object of the conspiracy be effected.[28]

5. CORRUPT MOTIVE. The formation of a common design by two or more persons is never of itself a criminal conspiracy. This may be, and often is, perfectly innocent. The confederation must be corrupt. If the motives of the confederates are not corrupt no criminality can attach to the confederation.[29] Accordingly persons who agree to do an act innocent in itself in good faith, and without the use of criminal means, are not converted into conspirators because it turns out that the contemplated act was prohibited by statute.[30]

Illustration.— The defendants were commissioners of charities of the county of Kings and were indicted for conspiring together to omit, refuse, and neglect to advertise for supplies as required by statute. Upon the trial, the judge charged that, without regard to the defendants' ignorance of the existence of the statute, the agreement to violate the act, followed by conduct in furtherance of the agreement, constituted a conspiracy. This was held error; the court remarking that it was not enough that the act which was the object of the conspiracy was prohibited. The confederates must be corrupt. The actual criminal intention belongs to the definition of conspiracy and must be shown to justify a conviction. People v. Powell, 63 N. Y. 88.

has been said, will be an indictable conspiracy, whenever the end proposed or the means to be employed are of a highly criminal character; where they are such as indicated great malice in the confederates; where deceit is to be used, the object in view being unlawful; or where the confederacy, having no lawful aim, tends simply to the oppression of individuals.[31] Every conspiracy to injure individuals or to do acts unlawful or prejudicial to a community is indictable at common law.[32]

2. To Commit Crime in General. It is elementary law that a conspiracy to commit a crime, whether the grade be that of a felony or misdemeanor, is an indictable offense.[33] This is true whether the act agreed to be done is an offense at common law or made so by statute.[34] So a combination to procure another to violate the law in order to extort money from him through threats of prosecution is a criminal conspiracy.[35] And it has been held an indictable conspiracy to pro-

A fair summary of indictable combinations is given in a well-considered decision by Judge Buchanan of the Maryland court of appeals: An indictment will lie at common law: (1) For a conspiracy to do an act not illegal nor punishable if done by an individual, but immoral only. (2) For a conspiracy to do an act neither illegal nor immoral in an individual, but to effect a purpose which has a tendency to prejudice the public. (3) For a conspiracy to extort money from another, or to injure his reputation by means not indictable if practised by an individual as by verbal defamation, and that whether it be to charge him with an indictable offense or not. (4) For a conspiracy to cheat and defraud a third person, accomplished by means of an act which would not in law amount to an indictable cheat if effected by an individual. (5) For a malicious conspiracy to impoverish or ruin a third person in his trade or profession. (6) For a conspiracy to defraud a third person by means of an act not per se unlawful, and although no person be thereby injured. (7) For a bare conspiracy to cheat or defraud a third person, although the means of effecting it should not be determined on at the time. cure a violation of the law for the purpose of procuring evidence on which to base a prosecution of the person against whom the conspiracy is directed.[36] It has been held, however, that if the owners of property, for the purpose of entrapping certain persons, coöperate with others to make arrangements with such persons to steal the property of the above owners, none of the participants can be convicted of the conspiracy to rob, since the taking with the owner's consent would not constitute a crime, and the acts leading up thereto were not in themselves unlawful;[37] but the opposite is true if neither the owners of the property nor their coöperators suggest the offense or originate the criminal intent or agreement.[38]

3. To Abduct Child. Under a statute making it an offense for any person by force or fraud to carry away any child under a designated age with intent to deprive its parents or lawful custodian of possession of it, an agreement between a father and other persons peaceably to get possession of his child is not a criminal conspiracy, where unlawful means are not agreed on or used to accomplish their purpose.[39]

4. To Change Government by Force. Any organization for the propagation of theories involving the destruction of the present social system, the common division of the property of individuals, and the capital which has been produced by labor, becomes an unlawful conspiracy (1) if it advocate the attainment of its end by violent means, or (2) if in violation of the militia laws of any state it provides for the formation and drilling of armed bodies of men for the purpose of carrying its plans into effect.[40]

5. To Commit Offense Against United States. By a federal statute[41] it is made a punishable offense for two or more persons to conspire to commit any offense against the United States. Conspiracy as used in this statute means an unlawful agreement to do some act which by some law of the United States has been made a crime,[42] and three elements are necessary to constitute it: (1) For two or more persons to conspire together; (2) to commit any offense against the United States; (3) an overt act of one or more parties to effect the object of the conspiracy.[43] The offense denounced by the statute is not confined to such acts as injure the United States, but applies as well to all conspiracies that affect private rights or interests where they are under the protection of the criminal laws of the United States, as to the rights and interests of the government itself.[44]

6. To Interfere With Exercise of Civil Rights. A federal statute[45] makes it a punishable offense for two or more persons to conspire to injure, oppress, threaten, or intimidate any citizen[46] in the free exercise or enjoyment of any right or privilege secured to him by the constitution or laws of the United States or because of his having so exercised the same. This statute has been held constitutional and valid.[47] To bring a case within its operation, it must appear that the right, the enjoyment of which the conspirators intended to hinder or prevent, was one granted by the constitution or laws of the United States.[48] It has been held a violation of this statute to prevent a citizen from voting by force or intimidation;[49] to prevent a person from exercising the right to make effectual his homestead entry;[50] to threaten or maltreat a citizen in the custody of the officers of the law;[51] to prevent a citizen from informing the United States marshal of a violation of the revenue laws;[52] to hinder, oppress, and injure an officeholder in the discharge of his functions as such;[53] or to intimidate or injure a citizen because of his having exercised his right to sue out an attachment for contempt, for violating an injunction granted him by a federal court.[54] So the killing of revenue officers while engaged in a conspiracy to injure or oppress them in the exercise of their duties is an offense within another federal statute,[55] providing for the punishment of a felony committed while acting in violation of section 5508 of the United States Revised Statutes.[56] Again, conspiring to use intimi-

Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Pennsylvania Co., 54 Fed. 730, 19 L. R. A. 387. So where two or more men wrongfully and corruptly agree among themselves, either for the purpose of creating sympathy in a strike or for any other purpose, to cause trains carrying interstate freight to be stopped, to discharge their employees, or to refuse to employ new men so as to stop such trains, they are guilty of conspiracy. The statute is unconstitutional altogether as applied to conspiracies within a state.[61]

8. To Use Mails For Fraudulent Purpose. Under an indictment under a statute[62] making it an offense for persons to conspire to commit any offense against the United States, and another statute[63] making it an offense to send letters through the mails for fraudulent purposes, the offense of conspiring to defraud by the use of the mails is not made out by proof that defendants severally ordered goods by mail not intending to pay for them without showing that such orders were given in pursuance of a prearranged plan.[64]

9. To Defraud — a. Individuals — (i) *At Common Law. Although there are decisions to the effect that a conspiracy to defraud is indictable only when the object is to cheat or defraud by false tokens, or in some mode denounced by statute as criminal,[65] the weight of authority is to the effect that conspiracies to cheat or defraud individuals without the use of false tokens, and by means which are merely wrongful and not criminal, are indictable at common law.[66] It is the com-the other crime being merely an aggravation thereof, so that if a conspiracy is not proved there can be no conviction for the felony. Davis v. U. S., 107 Fed. 753, 46 C. C. A. 619.

In New York, in the case of Lambert v. People, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 578, the majority of the court held that the offense consisted either in the combination to do a criminal act or to do an act not criminal in itself by criminal means; that in the one case the object and in the other the means determined the criminality of the combination. The minority of the court were of the opinion that the confederacy to injure another in his person, property, or character was a conspiracy at common law, although the act to be done, if done by an individual and without any combination with others, would not be indictable. Soon after the decision of this case the crime of conspiracy was defined by the statute and by that definition a conspiracy to cheat and defraud another of his property is indictable when accompanied by overt acts and when the means to be used are criminal or are such as would, if the fraud was accomplished, constitute the offense of cheating or obtaining money or property by false pretenses. Conspiracy to permit free travel on railroad.— It is a crime under section 394 of the

made distinct offenses by statute a conspiracy to effect such a purpose is held to be punishable.[70]

(III) Participation by Person Defrauded. According to some decisions a conspiracy must be directed against an innocent person.[71] On the other hand it has been held that a conspiracy to cheat is indictable although the person cheated himself intended to cheat one of the defendants.[72]

b. Creditors. A conspiracy to dispose of goods with intent to defraud creditors is an indictable offense at common law;[73] hence a combination with this purpose in view is indictable whether the particular act leading to such object is contrary to the statute or to the common law.[74] To obtain goods on credit with intent to abscond from the state,[75] or under pretense of paying cash for them on delivery, the buyer knowing that he has no funds with which to pay, and appropriating them to his own use,[76] is such a fraud as will sustain an indictment.

c. The Public — (I) In General. Conspiracies have been held to be indictable where their object is to defraud the public or to perpetrate what is termed a "public cheat" by means which common care and prudence are not sufficient to guard against,[77] on the ground that if executed they would affect hurtfully not

Conspiracy to impoverish farmers of excise. — In Rex v. Starling, Sid. 174, upon conviction of the defendants of conspiracy to impoverish the farmers of the excise it was objected that there was no offense. The court sustained the conviction because it appeared that the offense tended to prejudice the revenue of the crown.

Conspiracy to make false statement of the affairs of a bank. — On a prosecution for a conspiracy to make a false statement of the affairs of a bank, the essence of the offense is jointly concerting to make it. There should be a criminal concert between two or more. There must be an intent to defraud. Reg. v. Burch, 4 F. & F. 407.

only individuals but the public at large, even though they might not be indictable if affecting the rights of only one or a few individuals.[78]

(II) Corporations Representing Public Interests. This principle of public injury has also been applied to punish conspiracies to defraud corporations representing the civil interests of numerous persons.[79]

(III) The United States. The federal statute[80] making it an indictable offense to defraud the United States in any manner or for any purpose includes all acts of conspiracy to defraud the United States by depriving or divesting it of any property or money or other things by means of misrepresentation or concealment of material facts.[81] Under this statute it has been held immaterial whether the fraud contemplated has been declared a crime by statute or not.[82] It applies to conspiracy to defraud the United States of taxes on liquors;[83] to a conspiracy to destroy papers relating to dutiable merchandise for the purpose of suppressing evidence of fraud;[84] and to a conspiracy to procure by bribery the making of a false certificate by the board of examining surgeons, whereby the commissioner of pensions may be induced to allow a fraudulent increase of pension.[85] So persons may be guilty of a conspiracy to defraud the United States by obtaining title to public mineral lands by means of homestead entry, since a patent to such lands so obtained would not be void.[86]

Conspiracy to manufacture spurious goods with fraudulent intent to sell is genuine.— In Com. v. Judd, 2 Mass. 329, 2 Am. Dec. 54, it was held that a conspiracy to manufacture base and spurious indigo with the fraudulent intent to sell the same as good and genuine indigo is an indictable offense although no sale be made.

If persons conspire to fabricate shares in addition to the limited number of which a joint-stock company according to its rules consists, in order to sell them as good shares they may be indicted for it, notwithstanding any imperfection in the original formation of the company. Rex v. Mott, 2 C. & P. 521, 12 E. E. 817, 9 Am. St. Rep. 547 [reversing 25 Ill. App. 350]), or a city (State v. Young, 37 N. J. L. 184) is an indictable offense, as being a conspiracy to injure the public. 10. To Injure Trade or Commerce. It is an indictable conspiracy at common law for persons dealing in a commodity which is one of the necessaries of life to bind themselves under a penalty not to sell such commodity at less than a designated price.[87] A combination between independent dealers to prevent competition between themselves in the sale of an article of necessity is, in the contemplation of law, an act inimical to trade or commerce without regard to what may be done in pursuance of it.[88] So it is an act injurious to trade or commerce, within a statute punishing a conspiracy to commit such an act, to conspire to depress the value of the capital stock of a corporation dealt in on the stock exchange.[89] And it has been held to be an indictable offense at common law to conspire to raise the price of public funds on a particular day by false rumors.[90]

11. To Obstruct Justice or Due Administration of Laws. Any confederacy or combination, the purpose of which is to obstruct the due course of justice or the due administration of the laws, is an indictable conspiracy.[91] Thus it is an offense to conspire to fabricate evidence;[92] to induce witnesses to suppress evidence;[93] to give false evidence;[94] not to appear at the trial;[95] to pack a jury;[96] to impede an officer of the law in the discharge and performance of his duty;[97] to liberate

In this case it appeared that five coal corporations of Pennsylvania entered into an agreement in New York to divide two coal regions of which they had the control; to appoint a committee to take charge of their interests, which was to decide all questions and appoint a general agent at Watkins, New York; the coal mined to be delivered through him, each corporation to deliver its proportion at its own cost in the different markets at such time and to such persons as the committee might direct; the committee to adjust the process, rates of freight, etc., and enter into agreements with anthracite companies; the five companies might sell their coal themselves only to the extent of their proportion and at prices adjusted by the committee; the agent to suspend shipments by either beyond their proportion; frequent detailed reports to be made by companies, and settlements monthly by the committee, prices to be averaged and payments made to those in arrear by those in excess, neither to sell coal otherwise than as agreed upon, and the regulations of the committee to be carried out faithfully. A statute of New York makes it a misdemeanor for "persons to conspire to commit any act injurious to trade or commerce." Bribery of officer.— In a prosecution for conspiracy to bribe a person holding an office of trust and profit under the laws of the state, the question whether or not such person was an officer de jure is immaterial, he having qualified and acted as such an officer and being prisoners;[98] to make an unlawful use of legal process;[99] to obstruct the due administration of the election laws;[1] to certify falsely that a highway was in repair;[2] to defraud devisees by destruction of a will;[3] or to obtain a fraudulent divorce.[4]

12. To Obstruct Administration of Election Laws. A conspiracy to tamper with or fraudulently subvert the fair procedure in, or the just returns of, a public election is indictable at common law,[5] under statutes making it an offense to conspire to commit any act for the perversion or obstruction of justice,[6] or under a statute making it an offense to interfere in any manner with an election officer in the discharge of his duties.[7]

13. To Commit Offense Against Chastity. Although seduction and prostitution are not indictable at common law it is an indictable offense to conspire to procure a woman to lead a life of prostitution.[8] It is likewise an offense to conspire to seduce a woman[9] or to procure sexual intercourse with her through a pretended marriage.[10]

14. To Procure or Prevent Marriage. It is an indictable offense at common law to conspire to assist a female infant to escape from her father's control with a view to marry her against his will.[11] It is also an offense to conspire to carry an infant son out of the custody and government of his father to marry him to a prostitute.[12] So a conspiracy to cause it to falsely appear that a person is married in order to prevent him from contracting marriage is an unlawful offense.[13]

15. To Procure Abortion. It is an indictable conspiracy at common law to conspire to procure abortion,[14] but like all other conspiracies does not amount to a felony but only to a misdemeanor.[15]

17. Effect of conviction of person accused.— A conspiracy to procure the conviction of an innocent man is a high crime; and although legally convicted before a competent tribunal by the conspirators a legal conviction is no bar to an indictment against the conspirators, since a judgment obtained by corrupt testimony may be controverted in a proceeding against those who have been guilty of a fraudulent combination to produce it. 19. To Commit Assault and Battery. A conspiracy to commit an assault and battery is an indictable offense at common law[25] and sometimes is made so by statute.[26]

20. To Raise Wages. In the earlier English decisions, it was held that while persons may each singly refuse to work unless they receive an advance of wages, yet if they do so by preconcert or association they may be punished as for a conspiracy.[27] The more recent English decisions, influenced doubtless by legislation on the subject, hold that workmen have a right while perfectly free of engagement to agree among themselves not to go into any employment unless they can get a certain rate of wages.[28] The doctrine of these later English decisions is also recognized in America. Workmen may lawfully combine to obtain such wages as they may after consideration agree to insist upon receiving for their work.[29] It is said, however, that the law is only clear to the extent that the combination is lawful, while its purpose is to obtain a benefit for the parties who combine;[30] and a combination will not be lawful where the means to be employed to effect the object of the combination are interference with the rights of others, by misrepresentation, intimidation, molestation, or coercion.[31]

21. To Injure in Business or Calling — a. In General. A conspiracy to injure a person's trade or business or to defeat or diminish the revenue properly accruing from the possession of certain property may be an indictable offense.[32]

b. By Breach of Contract of Employment. It has been held to be an indictable conspiracy for servants of a company under contract of service to agree to quit and to quit their employment in breach of their contract without notice to their employers.[33]

c. By Persuading Others to Break Contract of Employment. It is an indictable conspiracy for a number of workmen to conspire together to persuade workmen under contract to break their contracts of employment and leave before the term has expired.[34] It is not essential to the offense that threats or intimidation be used.[35]

d. By Causing Person to Discharge Employees. It is an indictable conspiracy for a person to conspire to injure another's business by causing him, by threats and intimidation, to discharge other workmen in his employ.[36] An employer has the right to engage all persons who are willing to work for him at any prices that may be mutually agreed upon.[37] It amounts to intimidation, coercion, or threats, within the rule, for employees to combine to agree to stop work and notify their employer that they will stop work unless he discharges certain of his employees;[38] and it is also intimidation or coercion within the rule to cause the discharge of employees by a combination to agree to prevent patronage of the person, by threatening his customers with injury to their business if they continued their patronage of such person.[39] It had been held, however, that the formation of a club by journeymen, one of the regulations of which was that no person belonging to it should work for any master-workman who would employ any journeymen not members of the club, does not amount to an unlawful conspiracy; that the law will not intend without proof that it was formed for the accomplishment of any illegal purpose; that it might be used to afford each other assistance in times of poverty, sickness, and distress, or to raise their moral or social condition.[40]

This notice will be carried out after the 27th inst., unless settled in accordance with the society's laws." It was held that the secretary was rightly convicted under 6 Geo. It is perfectly consistent with every thing stated in this count, that the effect of the agreement was, that when they were free to act, they would not engage with an employer, or continue in his

e. By Causing Employees to Stop Work — (I) By Intimidation, Molestation, or Coercion. Neither at common law nor under statutes modifying the common-law doctrine is it lawful for workmen to combine to injure another's business by causing his employees to leave his service by intimidation, threats, molestation, or coercion. Such a combination constitutes an indictable conspiracy.[41]

(II) By Peaceable Persuasion. In a number of jurisdictions it is held, perhaps because of some statutory provision, that it is not unlawful for workmen to combine for the purpose of persuading other workmen by peaceable argument and persuasion to cease working for another, if they are not under contract of employment for a fixed period.[42]

f. By Preventing Persons From Entering Employment. An agreement among workmen to molest or intimidate persons willing to be hired or employed with the ntent of injuring another's business by deterring the workmen from entering into his employ is an indictable conspiracy.[43]

Picketing, which is the watching and speaking to workmen as they go to and from their employment to induce them to quit their employment, is not necessarily unlawful. Reg. v. Hibbert, 13 Cox C. C. 82.

What amounts to "hindering."— Where a committee from a trade union visits a place where members of the union are working and notifies those members that the demand of the union had been refused by their employers and that the workmen must therefore quit work such notice is not a "hindering" of the others within the meaning of a statute providing that the use of lawful and peaceful means, having for its object a lawful purpose, shall not be regarded as "in any way hindering" persons who desire to labor, and that the use of force, threat, or menace of harm to persons or property shall alone be regarded as in any way hindering persons who desire to labor for their employers from so doing or other persons from being employed as laborers. If two or more persons conspire by intimidation or molestation to deter or influence another in the way he should employ his industry, his talents, or his capital, they are guilty of a criminal offense. Thus it is an indictable offense for two or more persons to combine together to injure persons in their business by annoying them and making threats to their customers and patrons, with the intention of preventing them from continuing their patronage. The courts "have very generally condemned those combinations usually termed 'boycotts' which are formed for the purpose of interfering, otherwise than by lawful competition, with the business affairs of others, and depriving them, by means of threats and intimidation, of the right to conduct the business in which they happen to be engaged according

22. To Cause Loss of Employment — a. By Causing Breach of Contract by Employer. It is said to be an indictable conspiracy to combine to procure an employer to violate a contract of employment by discharging an employee.[46]

b. By Causing Discharge of Employee Not Under Contract For Time Certain. It is an indictable conspiracy for several to combine to constrain an employer to discharge a particular workman not under contract for a time certain, by threatening to prevent him from obtaining other workmen[47] or by refusing to continue work.[48]

23. To Prevent Persons From Obtaining Employment. A combination to constrain a workman to join a certain organization by threatening to prevent him from obtaining work unless he does so is an indictable conspiracy;[49] and so is a conspiracy by strikes to prevent a person from accepting employment from the person against whom the strike is operating by means of threats and intimidation.[50]

24. To Obtain Reward For Appointment to Office. An indictment will lie for a conspiracy to obtain money as a reward for an appointment to an office under government.[51]

25. To Prevent Competition at Auction. It is an indictable conspiracy for persons to agree among themselves that only one of their number shall bid on certain articles at auction, they afterward sharing the profit between the price of the articles thus obtained and their fair market value,[52] or for persons to aid or abet sham bidders in a mock auction whereby the articles are obtained at an unfair price.[53]

26. To Charge Unlawfully With Support of Pauper. While it is an indictable offense to induce paupers to voluntarily remove to another parish,[54] it is not indictable for the inhabitants of a township to make efforts to get rid of a party who is simply likely to become chargeable as a pauper.[55] Where, however, paupers are legally settled in their respective parishes, a conspiracy by the officers of one to marry a female pauper therein to a pauper settled in another parish, in order to transfer their charge to the latter, is indictable.[56] But it has been held to the dictates of their own judgments. The right of an individual to carry on his business as he sees fit, and to use such implements or processes of manufacture as he desires to use, provided he follows a lawful avocation and conducts it in a lawful manner, is entitled to as much consideration as his other personal rights; and the law should afford protection against the efforts of powerful combinations to rob him of that right and coerce his will by intimidating his customers and destroying his patronage. There is no question of raising or maintaining the rate of wages, and such act is one preventive of the exercise of a lawful calling.

The offense is considered as a prostitution of the sacred rights of marriage for corrupt necessary that defendant make use of some violence, threat, contrivance, or some sinister means to procure the marriage without the voluntary consent or inclination of the immediate parties themselves.[57]

D. Who Liable — 1. Corporations or Members of Corporations. It has been held that a corporation cannot be in contemplation of the common law one of the two or more persons whose guilty agreement constituted at common law the offense of conspiracy and that the corporate acts of a member of the corporation cannot form the basis of an indictment for conspiracy.[58] Nevertheless members of a corporation who enter into an unlawful agreement cannot escape criminal liability therefor by claiming that their wrongful acts were corporate acts.[59]

2. Person Incapable of Committing Offense Conspired to Be Committed. The fact that one of the persons conspiring is himself incapable of committing the offense which is the object of the conspiracy neither relieves him of guilt nor disables him from coöperating with another person who is able to commit it.[60]

3. Liability For Acts of Co-Conspirators. The general rule is well settled that where several parties conspire or combine together to commit any unlawful act, each is criminally responsible for the acts of his associates or confederates committed in furtherance of any prosecution of the common design for which they combine. In contemplation of law the act of one is the act of all.[61] Each is responsible for and mercenary purposes, and contrary to that freedom of choice which is peculiarly required in forming a union upon which the happiness of both parties thereto so entirely depends. It is not only a great oppression upon the parties most immediately interested, but an offense and abuse of that institution by which society is best continued and legal descents preserved. D. 420, a woman conspired with others to administer drugs to herself or by some other means to cause her to abort a child with which she was pregnant, and it was held that all the parties concerned in the combination could be prosecuted for the offense of conspiracy. Lord Coleridge, C. J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "I cannot entertain the slightest doubt that if three persons combine to commit a felony they are all guilty of conspiracy, although the person on whom the offence was intended to be committed could not, if she stood alone, be guilty of the intended offence."

everything done by his confederates, which follows incidentally in the execution of the common design as one of its probable and natural consequences, even though it was not intended as a part of the original design or common plan.[62] Nevertheless the act must be the ordinary and probable effect of the wrongful act, specifically agreed on so that the connection between them may be reasonably apparent, and not a fresh and independent product of the mind of one of the confederates outside of, or foreign to, the common design.[63] Even if the common design is unlawful, and if one member of the party depart from the original design as agreed upon by all of the members, and did an act which was not only contemplated by those who entered into the common purpose, but was not in furtherance thereof, and not the natural or legitimate consequence of anything connected therewith, the person guilty of such act, if it was itself unlawful, would alone be responsible therefor.[64]

4. Persons Coming in After Formation of Conspiracy. While to authorize a conviction of several persons charged in one indictment with conspiracy each must be proved to have come into the conspiracy prior to the consummation of the act to be done in pursuance thereof,[65] it is not essential to a conviction of a person or persons charged with a conspiracy, that he or they should have originated the conspiracy.[66] A person coming into a conspiracy after its formation is deemed in law a party to all acts done by any of the other parties, either before or afterward, in furtherance of the common design.[67] Whenever conspirators act, by lawful intendment they renew or continue their agreement, and it is renewed or continued as to all whenever either of them acts in furtherance of the common design.[68]

5. Persons Taking Subordinate Part. A person may be liable for a conspiracy, notwithstanding that the part he takes is a subordinate one, and although it was to be executed at a remote distance from the other conspirators.[69]

6. Persons Withdrawing From Conspiracy. The fact that a person, after entering into an agreement with another to commit a crime, withdraws from the agreement does not for obvious reasons prevent his conviction for the conspiracy.[70]

7. Effect of Absence of Pecuniary Benefit. To render a person criminally liable as a conspirator it is not necessary that under the scheme he should have had any pecuniary benefit in the matter or have joined with the view of obtaining pecuniary benefit.[71]

E. Merger in Other Offenses — 1. Offenses of the Same Grade. It is well settled that where the execution of the act which is the object of the conspiracy is a misdemeanor the conspiracy itself being an offense of the same grade — a misdemeanor — is not merged in the other offense;[72] and where a statute makes it a felony to conspire to commit a felony the conspiracy does not merge in the executed felony.[73]

2. WHERE OBJECT OF CONSPIRACY OF LOWER GRADE THAN CONSPIRACY. Where on a trial for conspiracy to commit larceny it appears that the theft was actually committed and that it was only petit larceny, the penalty for which is less than if it were conspiracy, there is no merger of the offense.[74]

3. WHERE OBJECT OF CONSPIRACY IS TO COMMIT A FELONY — a. At Common Law. There is considerable conflict of authority as to whether conspiracy to commit a felony is merged in the higher offense, when the object of the conspiracy is accomplished. Decisions, even in the same jurisdiction, are not always harmonious. According to a number of decisions where the felony, which is the object of the conspiracy, is committed, a conspiracy being a misdemeanor is merged in the higher offense.[75] There are, however, many decisions which reach the opposite conclusion, taking the view that a misdemeanor which is a part of a felony may be punished as a misdemeanor, although the felony has been completed.[76]

b. Under Special Statutory Provisions. Under special statutory provisions in one state,[77] the carrying of the conspiracy into effect does not merge the conspiracy in the greater offense.[78] The object of the statute is to preclude merger in such case.[79] Under the statutes of another state, providing that if two or more persons shall conspire to commit any felony and make some advance thereto, without committing the felony, they shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, a conspiracy to commit a felony is not indictable after the offense has been committed. The conspiracy merges into the greater offense,[80] and an indictment Reason for rule.— In State v. Setter, 57 Conn. 461, 468, 18 Atl. 782, 14 Am. St. Rep. 121, it was said: "The principles upon which the doctrine of merger seems to rest are that the offense merged is lesser than the one in which it is merged, and that the ingredients of the smaller ones are so identical with the ingredients of the larger that when both have been committed they cannot in reason and justice be separated; so that to punish an accused in such a case for both offenses would be in effect to punish the same act twice." In U. S. v. Gardner, 42 Fed. 829, 831, it was said: "The reason why a conviction cannot be had for the conspiracy to commit a felony, or for an attempt to commit a felony, when it appears that the felony was actually committed, is that the acquittal for the minor offense would not bar a subsequent indictment for the major, and consequently the accused might be put twice in jeopardy for acts which were all constituent parts of one offense."

for a conspiracy to commit a felony must allege that the felony was not committed.[81]

F. Grade of Offense. At common law a conspiracy, whether it be to commit a misdemeanor or a felony, is merely a misdemeanor.[82] Where a certain kind of conspiracy is defined and made punishable by statute but not declared a felony it also is merely a misdemeanor.[83]

III. CIVIL LIABILITY.

A. Introductory Statement. It is the purpose to consider here conspiracy in its civil aspect. By the rules of the common law an action of conspiracy or to use an equivalent expression a writ of conspiracy was never allowed but in two cases;[84] one for conspiracy to procure a man to be indicted for treason; the other for a conspiracy to prosecute a man for a felony by which life was put in danger.[85] In all other cases of conspiracy the remedy was and is now by action on the case, in which it is usual to charge a conspiracy.[86]

B. Conspiracy of Itself Not a Cause of Action — 1. IN GENERAL. From the earliest period, it has been said that a conspiracy of itself furnishes no cause of action. This statement has two distinct meanings, which neither courts nor text-writers have always properly distinguished. They are: (1) That no action lies unless the conspiracy is executed to the injury of another;[87] and (2) that a conspiracy will not render unlawful an act which is lawful when committed by one.[88]

2. NECESSITY FOR DAMAGES. Unless something is actually done by one or more of the conspirators pursuant to the scheme and in furtherance of the object which results in damage no civil action lies against any one.[89] The gist of the action is

In the leading English case on this subject, it was said: "An action will not lie for the greatest conspiracy imaginable, if nothing be put in execution; but if the party be damaged, the action will lie." Savile v. Roberts, 1 Ld. Raym. 374.

"A simple conspiracy, however atrocious, unless it resulted in actual damage to the party, never was the subject of a civil action; not even when the old form of a writ of conspiracy, in its limited and most technical character, was in use." Hutchins v. Hutchins, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 104.

the damage and not the conspiracy,[90] and the damage must appear to have been the natural and proximate consequence of defendant's act.[91]

3. Necessity For Act Unlawful Independently of Conspiracy. The other branch of the rule under consideration is that where damage results from an act which if done by one alone would not afford ground of action, a like act would not be rendered actionable because done by several in pursuance of an agreement.[92]

What one may lawfully do singly, two or more may lawfully agree to do jointly.[93]

C. Nature of Action Not Changed by Alleging Conspiracy. An averment that the acts were done in pursuance of a conspiracy does not change the nature of the action or add anything to its legal force and effect.[94] If a plaintiff fail in the proof of a conspiracy or concerted design, he may yet recover damages against such of the defendants as are shown to be guilty of the tort without such agreement.[95] The charge of conspiracy where unsupported by evidence will be considered mere surplusage not necessary to be proved to support the action.[96]

D. For What Purpose Conspiracy Important to Action. This being so the question arises for what purpose is the allegation and proof of conspiracy important? The answer is that when the mischief contemplated is accomplished the conspiracy becomes important as it may affect the means and measure of redress.[97] It may be pleaded and proved as aggravating the wrong of which plaintiff complains and to enable him to recover against all the defendants as joint tort-feasors.[98] The party wronged may look beyond the actual participants in committing the injury, and join with them as defendants all who conspired to accomplish it.[99]

E. Particular Actions on the Case in the Nature of Conspiracy — 1. Conspiracy to Defraud — a. In General. It is essential to a conspiracy to defraud that there be some designed and positively fraudulent artifice employed,[1] or that a fraudulent intent should exist[2] on the part of the party sought to be held,[3] and that such fraud or artifice should be practised on the party defrauded.[4] So too in a charge of conspiracy to obtain a favorable compromise of suits about to be commenced, the intention of the parties unfairly directed to the attainment of such end must be shown in connection with the groundlessness of the action.[5] It has, however, been held that no affirmative fraudulent representations need be shown, a concealment of the true nature of the transaction being sufficient.[6] And generally speaking all persons who enter into a compact to defraud by overvaluing property,[7] and by falsehood and device to induce a plaintiff to make a transaction without inspection or full examination of the property involved,[8] who falsely and fraudulently recommend an insolvent person as worthy of credit, by reason of which plaintiff is induced to trust him,[9] or who through his business transactions fraudulently induces such credit[10] are civilly liable in an action for conspiracy to defraud.

b. To Defraud Creditors. A civil action on the case in the nature of conspiracy to defraud creditors is no exception to the general rule that either an unlawful purpose or the employment of unlawful means must be shown;[11] and no recovery can be had where the injury complained of is remote, indefinite, and contingent.[12] Accordingly, an action will not lie for aiding and assisting a debtor to transfer or conceal his property to prevent plaintiff from attaching it, as such act only prevents him from executing his intention and does not deprive him of a property right.[13]

2. CONSPIRACY TO PROSECUTE MALICIOUSLY. An action will lie to recover damages caused by an executed conspiracy in the institution of a malicious prosecution, where it appears that the prosecution was malicious and without probable cause.[14] It has been held that in order to convict of a conspiracy to prosecute maliciously all the facts necessary to support an action for malicious prosecution must be shown.[15] Want of probable cause is essential. However malicious the defendants may have been if they have probable cause for the prosecution no action can be maintained against them.[16] Nor will an action lie where a verdict and judgment has been recovered against plaintiff, so long as the judgment remains unreversed,[17] nor where a nolle prosequi has been entered.[18]

3. CONSPIRACY FALSELY TO IMPRISON. While it is no doubt actionable falsely to imprison one in pursuance of a conspiracy therefor, an action for confining plaintiff in a lunatic asylum cannot be sustained if defendants conscientiously believed that plaintiff was deranged and required for his recovery medical treatment under restraint.[19]

Rule applied.— In one of the cases it was said: "The most that can be said is that he intended to attach the property, and the wrongful act of the defendant has prevented him from executing this intention." Bradley v. Fuller, 118 Mass. 239, 241. The rule is otherwise, however, where the creditor actually attaches the debtor's property and his attachment is defeated by an attachment made upon a suit for a fictitious debt brought in pursuance of a conspiracy between the debtor and a third person, the property being applied to the judgment obtained in such suit. Adams v. Paige, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 542. Raleigh v. Cook, 60 Tex. 438.

15. In an action on the case for conspiracy to maliciously prosecute plaintiff, proof that a magistrate, a prosecutor, and a constable each behaved improperly will not support a charge of conspiracy in instituting and conducting a malicious prosecution. This offense is specifically different from a mere malicious prosecution, much more dangerous in its character, and may justify much heavier damage. Newall v. Jenkins, 26 Pa. St. 159.

4. Conspiracy to Injure in Business, Property, or Calling — a. In General. While no civil action lies for a mere conspiracy, yet whenever in pursuance of an unlawful combination to injure another in his particular avocation or business means have been employed which tended to effectuate and to a greater or less extent did accomplish the object of the conspiracy an action on the case will lie.[20]

b. Effect of Malice. If without wrongful motive the cause of one person's interference with the property and privileges of another is to serve some legitimate right or interest of his own he may do the acts himself or cause other persons to do them that injuriously affect a third party, so long as no definite legal right of such third party is violated;[21] but where persons combine not for the purpose of protecting or advancing their own legitimate interests but for the purpose of injuring another in his trade or business, they are guilty of an unlawful conspiracy which when executed and when damages result therefrom is actionable.[22] There is a clear distinction between acts which have inducement in malice or ill-will and those which have inducement in business competition and rivalry. The latter are legal combinations and the former are not.[23] If injury results from the merely wanton or malicious acts of others without the justification of competition or the service of any interest or lawful purpose the injury is actionable.[24] Intentionally to do that which is calculated in the ordinary course of events to damage, and which does in fact damage another in that other person's property or trade, is actionable if done without just cause or excuse. Conspiracy to injure business as distinguished from lawful competition.— Lawful competition may injure the business of another or drive him out of business and yet not be actionable. Competition of one set of men against another set, carried on for the purpose of gain, even to the extent of intending to drive the other set of men from business, is not actionable unless there is actual malice; and malice in this sense does not simply mean an intent to harm, but an intent to do a wrongful harm and injury. Intent to do an unlawful harm and injury is unlawful, and if a wrongful act is done to the detriment of the right of another, it is malicious, and an act maliciously done with the intent and purpose of injuring another is not lawful competition. intentional action when done without just cause or excuse is what the law calls a malicious wrong.[25]

c. Effect of Fraud or Misrepresentation. A conspiracy to injure one in his business or trade by fraud or misrepresentation is actionable when it results in injury.[26] No man, whether trader or not, can justify damaging another in his business by fraud or misrepresentation.[27]

d. Commission of Act Declared Illegal by Statute. One who suffers injury in an act done in furtherance of a conspiracy entered into for the purpose of preventing competition in trade in commodities in common use, which combinations are declared illegal by statute, has a right of action to recover damages sustained.[28]

e. Particular Combinations to Injure — (i) In General. An action may be maintained for injuries resulting from a conspiracy to injure a teacher in his vocation by statements reflecting upon his mental condition;[29] from a conspiracy to injure the business and reputation of a dressmaker by falsely suing out an inquisition of lunacy;[30] or for injuries resulting from a conspiracy with the foreman of an employer to obtain the secrets of his business.[31] So it has been held that while the public who go to a theater have a right to express their free and unbiased opinions of the merits of the performers who appear upon the stage, parties have no right to go to a theater by a preconcerted plan to make such a noise that an actor, without any judgment being formed of his performance, should be driven from the stage; and that if two persons are shown to have laid a preconcerted plan to deprive a person who comes out as an actor of the benefits which he expected to result from his appearance on the stage they are liable in an action for a conspiracy.[32]

Boycotting hotel.— An agreement among the merchants of a town or village not to buy any goods of drummers who stop at a certain customers would have continued their voluntary patronage but for the wrongful acts complained of.[36] It has also been held that the mere fact that an organization has not counseled parties outside of its membership to withdraw their patronage from a party is not conclusive that no right of action against them exists. If the organization through any system of fines or coercive by-laws induces its members to withdraw their patronage from a plaintiff, a right of action exists against such organization, provided it does appear that patronage has been withdrawn which would not have been withdrawn had it not been for such fines or other coercive means provided for in the by-laws or management of the organization.[37] It is likewise an actionable conspiracy for a labor union to picket one's premises for the purpose of intercepting his customers and employees with the intention of ruining his business, and it is not necessary that any violence or threats of violence should be used.[38] It is clear that everyone has a right to withdraw his own patronage when he pleases, but it is equally clear that he has no right to employ threats or intimidation to divert the patronage of another.[39] hotel, the owner of which had incurred the displeasure of members of the combination, is an unlawful conspiracy and when put into execution to the injury of the owner of the hotel he is entitled to recover damages. Webb v. Drake, 52 La. Ann. 220, 26 So. 791.

Boycotting newspaper.— It is an actionable conspiracy for a labor union in order to force a newspaper company to pay the price fixed by its regulations to issue circulars instructing organized labor not to buy the newspapers or to patronize any firms who advertise in them and to send threatening resolutions among the advertisers of such paper. Matthews v. Shankland, 25 Misc. (N. Y.) 604, 56 N. Y. Suppl. 123. For a case almost identical on the facts with the foregoing see Casey v. Cincinnati Typographical Union No. 3, 45 Fed. 135, 12 L. R. A. 193.

Boycotting owners of sleeping-cars.—A combination by employees of railway companies to injure the owner of the cars operated by the companies by compelling them to cease using his cars by threats of stopping, and actually stopping, their service, thereby inflicting on them great injury, where the relation between him and the companies is mutually profitable and has no effect whatever on the character or reward of the services of the employees so combining, is a boycott and an unlawful conspiracy at common law. Thomas v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co., 62 Fed. 803.

Boycott of manufacturer.— The members of two labor organizations entered into a combination to compel a manufacturer of casks and barrels to discontinue the use of a valuable labor-saving device. This object was to be accomplished by notifying plaintiff's customers and other persons not to purchase machine-hooped barrels, and by inducing the members of all labor organizations throughout the country and persons who were in sympathy with them not to purchase provisions or other commodities which were packed in machine-hooped barrels. It was held that the combination in question was an unlawful conspiracy to deprive plaintiff of its right to manage its business as it thought best, such as would entitle the manufacturer to recover from the parties concerned in the conspiracy whatever damages it had sustained thereby. 37. Boutwell v. Marr, 71 Vt. 1, 42 Atl. 607, 76 Am. St. Rep. 746, 43 L. R. A. 803. The facts of this case were as follows: A granite manufacturers' association, embracing ninety-five per cent of all the granite manufacturers in the place, adopted a resolution that no trade should be conducted with any person, firm, or corporation engaged in cutting, quarrying, or polishing granite in the state who should not be members of the association. The by-laws imposed a fifty-dollar fine for the violation of the rules of the association. The result was to practically kill the polishing business of plaintiffs who were not members, which was the real object of the resolution, so as to compel plaintiffs to join the association. It was held that the members of the association were liable to plaintiffs for the actual damages caused to their business, notwithstanding that they did not try to influence persons outside of the association. It was also held that the voluntary acceptance of by-laws by members of an association providing for the imposition of coercive fines for the violation of the association's rules did not remove the fact of their coerciveness.

(III) To Prevent Persons From Obtaining Supplies Necessary For Carrying on Business. Persons engaged in the same line of business may combine and agree among themselves that none of them will sell to another person supplies necessary to the carrying on of his business;[41] and it has been held in numerous decisions that a combination may lawfully agree among themselves not to patronize any dealer who furnishes supplies of the description used by them to a person not a member thereof.[42] These decisions, however, presuppose as a basis for their holdings that the object of the association is to serve some legitimate interest of the members who compose it. If the purpose of the combination is to ruin or cause injury to the business of another and not to protect or advance their own legitimate interests, it is an unlawful conspiracy and an action will lie for the damages caused by putting the agreement into execution.[43] No number of men jointly having no legitimate interest to protect can lawfully injure the business of another by maliciously inducing others not to deal with him.[44]

A. 588, in which it was held that where the members of an association of retail dealers agree not to patronize any wholesale dealer who refuses to pay a fine to a member of the association for selling lumber in such member's community to one not a regular dealer, a person not a regular dealer who has underbid a member of the association on a contract, but who has been refused lumber by a wholesale dealer because it has been previously obliged to pay a fine to such member for selling lumber in his community to one not a regular dealer will be entitled to recover of such members damages resulting therefrom. This decision proceeds upon the theory that the acts complained of amounted to intimidation and coercion, and dissents from Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Hollis, 54 Minn. 223, 55 N. W. 1119, 40 Am. St. Rep. 319, 21 L. R. A. 337. Nothing is said as to the element of protection or advancement of legitimate business interests, or as to the element of malice.

Applications of doctrine.— An association of master plumbers, in order to free themselves from the competition of those who were not members, sent notices to wholesale dealers in plumbers' supplies not to sell to others than members of the association under the penalty of a withdrawal of the latter's patronage. The wholesale dealers thereupon refused to sell to non-members, who were in consequence unable to purchase supplies from wholesale dealers in this state and from other wholesale dealers in the United States. It was held that the sending of the notices did not violate any legal rights of those not members. Macauley v. Tierney, 19 R. I. 255, 33 Atl. 1, 61 Am. St. Rep. 770, 37 L. R. A. 455. A combination of employers prevented dealers in the supplies used by such employers from selling to an employer who was not a member of their combination, and who had conceded a demand of the employees by informing such dealers that no member of the combination would buy from them if they sold to such employer. It was held that this was not unlawful coercion. Buchanan v. Barnes, (Pa. 1894) 28 Atl. 195; Cote v. Murphy, 159 Pa. St. 420, 28 Atl. 190, 33 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 421, 39 Am. By threats of causing employees to quit work.—Where a committee composed of members of several trades unions, because of plaintiff's refusal to comply with their demand not to supply material to a firm which they have boycotted, procure others not to furnish material to plaintiff by threatening injury to their business by causing their employees to leave them, they are guilty of an actionable conspiracy and liable for the damages thus caused. (IV) To Cause Employees to Stop Work — (A) By Intimidation, Molestation, or Coercion. It is unlawful for persons to conspire to injure another in his property or business, by agreeing to procure his employees to quit his employment where the methods used are those of intimidation, molestation, or coercion. This will constitute an actionable conspiracy when executed and where injury results in consequence thereof.[45] No one can lawfully interfere by force or intimidation[46] to prevent employers or persons employed or willing to be employed from the exercise of these rights.[47]

(B) By Peaceable Persuasion — (1) Where Employees Not Under Contract For Fixed Period. In a number of jurisdictions, usually perhaps because of some statutory provision, it is held not an unlawful conspiracy for workmen to combine to persuade others by peaceable means and without intimidation or threats not to continue in the service of another, if they are under no contract to work for a fixed period.[48]

(2) Where Employees Under Contract For Fixed Period. It is an actionable conspiracy if persons combine to induce without justification, and do induce others to break their contract of employment, when this is done for the purpose of injuring their employer and damage is thereby caused to him.[49] It is immatethat their interference with his business was to serve any legitimate interests of their own, but that it was done maliciously, to injure him, and that the conspiracy had been carried into execution, whereby his business was ruined, states a cause of action.

Picketing, which is the watching and speaking to workmen as they go to and from their employment, to induce them to leave their services, is not necessarily unlawful, nor is it unlawful to use terms of persuasion toward them to accomplish that object. Perkins v. Rogg, 11 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 585, 28 Cinc. L. Bul. 32. But as soon as threats, personal injury, or unlawful harm are made against the employees, this amounts to intimidation and is unlawful. Vegelahn v. Guntner, 167 Mass. 92, 44 N. E. 1077, 57 Am. It has a broader significance; there may also be a moral intimidation which is illegal. (v) To Prevent Persons From Entering Employment. A combination to injure a person's business by preventing by means of threats and intimidation other persons from entering his employment is an unlawful conspiracy and actionable when injury results.[51]

(vi) To Stop Employment by Concerted Action. It is lawful for employees, without any illegal purpose, to quietly and peaceably leave the service in which they are employed by concerted action at a given time, so long as they do not violate any contract;[52] but if an employer uses the benefit which his labor is or may be to another, by threatening to withhold or by agreeing to bestow it, for the purpose of inducing, procuring, or compelling another to commit an unlawful or criminal act, the withholding or bestowing of his labor for such purpose is itself unlawful.[53]

(vii) To Cause Loss of Employment or Prevent Employment. All combinations and associations, the purpose of which is to coerce workmen to become members thereof or to prevent them from working below certain rates by procuring their discharge from employment or by preventing them from obtaining employment are unlawful conspiracies.[54] It has therefore been held that where a non-union man is discharged by his employer in consequence of a threat by a labor organization that in case he is retained in his employer's service the organization will notify all other labor organizations of the city that the employer is a non-union man, the employee will be entitled to recover damages sustained in

The right which the striking workman claims for himself, and to which he is justly entitled, viz., to work for whom he pleases and to ask for his work such wages as he shall deem proper, is also a right which he must accord to every other workman in the community; and any form of compulsion or coercion to interfere with the right is an invasion of the very right for which the striking workman is himself contending — the right of free labor. consequence of such discharge.[55] So an agreement between an association of masters and an assembly of workmen that all employees of the former shall be members of the latter and that no employee shall work more than four weeks without becoming such member is against public policy and the interest of society and cannot justify an action of members of such assembly in procuring the discharge of a workman because of his failure to become a member thereof.[56] It has been held, however, that a combination of workmen to strike unless another workman is discharged is not actionable in the absence of malice, intimidation, or violence, if no contract relations are broken thereby.[57]

5. Conspiracy to Refuse to Canvass Votes. A conspiracy to refuse to canvass votes and to declare a person elected to an office cannot be made the subject of a civil action, for such refusal without conspiracy would not give the right to a civil action.[58]

Where a man has combined and conspired with others to cheat and defraud plaintiff in the sale of certain property by fraudulent concealments and misrepresentations, and the fraud has been perpetrated accordingly by some other member or members of the conspiracy, he will be liable, although he may not individually have made any fraudulent misrepresentations or have fraudulently concealed anything in regard to the condition or whether they were active participants or not.[62] And it is no defense that the person committing the acts was of unsound mind.[63] Nor can any conspirator set up as a defense that his participation was not necessary to the accomplishment of the ultimate purpose and that it would have been consummated if he had not become a conspirator.[64] Where, however, there is no evidence of conspiracy each party is liable for his own acts alone.[65]

3. Liability For Acts of Agent. A man cannot be associated with others in conspiracy, civil or criminal, or be held guilty of acts done in pursuance of such association merely because his agent may have knowledge of the same or be a participant therein.[66]

4. Effect of Absence of Pecuniary Benefit. A conspirator is none the less liable because he expected to derive no benefit from the wrong or in fact received no benefit therefrom.[67]

5. Persons Coming in After Formation of Conspiracy. To render a person civilly liable for injuries resulting from a conspiracy of which he was a member, it is not necessary that he should have joined the conspiracy at the time of its inception.[68]

G. Time to Sue and Limitations. A right of action for conspiracy accrues when the combination itself is perfected or a wrong is done, and plaintiff need not wait until he has suffered the full damage intended by the conspirators;[69] and an action for the alleged conspiracy to injure plaintiffs by malicious and fraudulent statements cannot be considered an action for slander, thereby invoking limitations applicable to the latter action.[70] Plaintiff cannot, however, evade the statute of limitations by disguising his real cause of action by the form of his complaint.[71] The limitations applicable to conspiracy begin to run not from the time a defendant enters the same, but from the time of the commission of his last overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy.[72]

IV. PARTIES.

A. In Criminal Prosecutions — 1. In General. The usual and convenient course is to include all the conspirators in a joint indictment.[73] Nevertheless an indictment or information will ordinarily lie against one of the alleged parties to the conspiracy,[74] unless there be some reason peculiar to such an indictment plainly making a several proceeding improper.[75]

2. Joinder of Public Officials and Private Persons. There is no impropriety in joining in one indictment a charge of conspiracy against private individuals and against officers of the government where such indictment is based entirely upon the same statute,[76] and it makes no difference that the official might have been indicted under another statute.[77]

B. In Civil Cases — 1. Parties Plaintiff. In an action for conspiracy to injure plaintiff carried into effect by a trespass upon his place of business, the fact that his business was carried on in partnership with another is not sufficient to require or justify the joinder of such other as plaintiff.[78]

Joinder of railway officials and purchasers of tickets sold in pursuance of conspiracy.— In Reg. v. Quinn, 19 Cox C. C. 78, where railway officials were indicted for conspiring to defraud the railway company by stealing and selling uncanceled, but used, tickets, it was held that persons to whom they sold these tickets could be indicted together in the same count with the officials.

Participants in design.— Where the unlawful act in furtherance of a conspiracy to defraud was done in the state where the indictment is found, the conspirators who participated only in the design may be tried without joining in the indictment the perpetrators of the overt act. State v. Turner, 119 N. C. 841, 25 S. E. 810.

Persons not privy to acts relied on to show offense.— It is not proper to include persons who were not privy to the acts relied on to prove the conspiracy and whose offenses are wholly separate and distinct. "To include in the indictment defendants whose offence, if any, came under the latter head, was unfair and unjust, as tending to involve them in the odium of acts to which they were not parties." No. 15,670, said: "It is further urged that the ruling of Mr. Justice Miller in U. S. v. McDonald, supra, to the effect that it is improper to join in one indictment a charge of conspiracy against officers and private citizens, is applicable to this case. In that case the indictment charged a conspiracy on part of the officers of the government under the provisions of section 3169 of the Revised Statutes, and also charged a conspiracy against the private citizens under section 5440; and it was held an improper joinder, mainly by reason of the difference in the punishments provided in the two sections. In the case now under consideration the indictment for conspiracy is based alone upon section 5440, and the ruling relied upon has no application."

2. Parties Defendant. In an action on the case in the nature of a conspiracy to recover damages, one only may be sued, as the damage and not the conspiracy itself is the gist of the action;[79] or plaintiff may at his option join all the alleged conspirators as defendants in one action.[80]

V. PLEADINGS.

A. In Criminal Prosecutions[81] — 1. Joinder of Counts — a. In General. Counts charging a conspiracy and also the offense committed in pursuance thereof may be joined where both offenses are similar in nature and in mode of trial and punishment.[82] Nor is an indictment objectionable, because the same transaction is detailed differently in several counts.[83]

b. Duplicity. An indictment charging a conspiracy to commit an act in itself criminal, and also the commission of such act, is not bad for duplicity where no conviction is sought on account of the overt act.[84] Nor will such indictment be rendered duplicitous by the fact that the felony which it is the purpose of the conspirators to commit is described by different names,[85] or by the fact that the conspiracy in its consummation would in fact have required the commission of several distinct felonies.[86] So where an agreement to do several acts constituting one offense is charged as a single conspiracy the indictment is not bad because charging the doing of the several acts at different times and with different individuals;[87] and where more than one unlawful act is sought to be accomplished by the same conspiracy, the facts relating to each unlawful act so intended may be set up in a separate count.[88]

c. Effect of Joining Defective Counts. Where, although some of the counts are defective, one or more properly charged all the ingredients of the offense, the indictment is not vitiated by the insertion of the defective counts.[89]

2. CHARGING THE OFFENSE — a. In General. In accordance with the general rule in criminal prosecutions, an indictment or information for conspiracy must contain a statement of the facts relied upon as constituting the offense in ordinary and concise language, with as much certainty as the nature of the case will admit, in such a manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended, and with such precision that defendant may plead his acquittal or conviction to a subsequent indictment based on the same facts.[90] If the offense is not defined by statute it may be charged as at common law;[91] but if it has been made the subject of legislative enactment, all the material facts necessary to bring the case within the terms of the statute must be substantially set forth.[92]

b. Charging Offense in Language of Statute. Where conspiracy is made a statutory offense, when entered into for the purpose of committing certain specified offenses, if the statute sets out fully and without uncertainty or ambiguity the elements necessary to constitute the offense intended to be punished, it will be sufficient to charge the offense in the language of the statute or in words of equivalent meaning.[93] If, however, the statute employs broad and comprehensive language, descriptive of the general nature of the offense denounced, the use of such language is insufficient to charge a specific offense thereunder. There should be such a particular statement of the facts and circumstances as will inform the accused of the specific offense charged;[94] and the fact that the statute in question, and the arts is insufficient — there should be an explanation of their meaning in ordinary language. U. S. v. Reichert, 12 Sawy. (U. S.) 643, 32 Fed. 142.

Charging offense in the alternative.— An information for conspiracy charging that the conspiracy was to prevent a certain person "from obtaining work or employment, or continuing in his said work and employment" with a certain corporation, "or in any other shops or works," is not bad, as charging offenses in the alternative, where the information also alleges that such person was an employee of the corporation when the conspiracy originated. Indictment for conspiracy to procure illegal voting — Failure to show manner of disqualification.— An indictment charging conspiracy to procure illegal voting is not bad for failing to show in what manner the persons whom the defendants conspired to procure to vote were disqualified, but an allegation that they were not entitled to vote is sufficient. Averment of citizenship in indictment for conspiracy to threaten or intimidate a citizen.— An indictment under U. S. Rev. Stat. (1872), §§ 5508, 5509, for conspiracy to "injure, oppress, threaten, or intimidate any citizen" in the free exercise of any right or privilege secured by the constitution or laws of the United States, must aver that the persons conspired against were citizens, and it is insufficient merely to allege that they were officers conspired against in the discharge of their official duties. U. S. v. Patrick, 53 Fed. 356.

read in the light of the common law and of other statutes on the like matter, enables the court to infer the intent of the legislature, does not dispense with the necessity of alleging in the indictment all the facts necessary to bring the case within that intent.[95]

e. Combination or Confederacy — (i) In General. The agreement, combination, or common purpose must be charged in appropriate language,[96] and it must be alleged that the confederation was corrupt.[97]

(ii) Single Defendant. Where one defendant is separately charged it should be averred that he conspired with another or others — the usual form under such circumstances is that he conspired "with divers other persons, to the jurors unknown," [98] and it has been held that this form of indictment is good even though the names of the co-conspirators must actually have been known to the grand jury.[99]

(iii) Aider by Other Averments. An illegal combination imperfectly and insufficiently charged in the indictment will not be aided by other averments of the overt acts which were done in pursuance of it,[1] by matter which precedes or

Conspiracy to defraud United States by bribing examining board.— In an indictment under U. S. Rev. Stat. (1872), § 5440, for conspiracy to defraud the United States by bribing a member of a board of examining surgeons to make a false report to the commissioner of pensions, it is unnecessary to aver that the commissioner has authority to grant pensions, for such authority is given by general statute of which the court will take judicial notice. U. S. v. Van Leuven, 62 Fed. 62 [distinguishing U. S. v. Reichert, 12 Sawy. (U. S.) 643, 32 Fed. 142].

Conspiracy to present fraudulent claims — Averment of authority of officer to allow claims.— Where an indictment alleges as part of the conspiracy that a false, fictitious, and fraudulent claim was to be presented to the United States surveyor-general for allowance and payment, it should also allege that such officer was authorized to allow and approve the claim, and for the omission of this allegation the indictment is defective. U. S. v. Reichert, 12 Sawy. (U. S.) 643, 32 Fed. 142.

In an indictment under U. S. Rev. Stat. (1872), § 5440, for conspiracy to defraud, under the recognized rules of criminal pleading it is not sufficient to allege generally a conspiracy to defraud, but the nature of the fraud and to the required extent the manner in which or the means by which it was to be effected must be averred. In re Benson, 58 Fed. 962; U. S. v. Crafton, 4 Dill. (U. S.) 145, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,881, 17 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 127, 4 Centr. L. J. 441, 23 Int. Rev. Rec. 186 [following U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. ed. 588].

d. Time and Place. The time and place of the conspiracy alleged should be charged[3] with such particularity as will enable defendant to plead the judgment in bar to a future prosecution.[4]

e. Person Conspired Against. Where the conspiracy is directed against a particular person, or the object of the conspiracy has been effected so that the person or persons intended can be ascertained, he or they should be designated by name or the reason why such designation is not made should be stated;[5] but where no intent as to any particular person was formed it should charge an intended wrong against some person, persons, or class of persons or the general public,[6] without designating any particular individual.[7]

only be certain to a common intent. The crime intended to be accomplished by the conspiracy need not be described in the indictment with the accuracy or detail which would be essential in an indictment for the commission of the offense itself, but need only be designated as it is known to the common law or defined by statute. Allegations of acts which if committed would have constituted the crime are not required;[9] but where the intended offense has no designation at common law, or having a designation the indictment does not so refer to it but attempts to state its ingredients, they must be stated as fully as if the indictment were for the commission of the offense itself.[10] If the purpose of the conspiracy be the doing of an act which is not an offense at common law but only by statute, such purpose must be set forth in such a manner as to show that it is within the terms of the statute.[11]

(1872), § 4746, providing for the punishment of persons knowingly or wilfully procuring the making or presentation of any false or fraudulent affidavit concerning any claim for pension, an indictment for conspiracy to defraud the United States by making a false and fraudulent affidavit in support of a claim for pension should allege that defendant knowingly caused to be made and presented such false affidavit. U. S. v. Adler, 49 Fed. 736.

Conspiracy to defraud by obtaining allowance of fraudulent claim.— An indictment under U. S. Rev. Stat. (1872), § 5438, for conspiracy to defraud the United States or any department or officer thereof, by obtaining or aiding to obtain payment or allowance of any false or fraudulent claim, will be defective for not stating that the accused knew that the claim was false, fictitious, and fraudulent. U. S. v. Reichert, 12 Sawy. (U. S.) 643, 32 Fed. 142.

Conspiracy to obtain mineral lands — Averment of knowledge of mineral deposits when conspiracy formed.— To constitute a criminal conspiracy to defraud the United States by obtaining title and possession through homestead entry to mineral lands not subject to entry, the fact that the land contained valuable minerals and knowledge of such fact by the conspirators at the time the conspiracy was formed are essential, and must be averred in the indictment. An indictment which, after charging such conspiracy and the subsequent making of an affidavit, and the filing of an application for entry in furtherance thereof, avers that the defendants "then and there" well knew that the land contained valuable mineral deposits, is uncertain and fatally defective, in failing to charge such knowledge at the time the conspiracy was formed. Averment of intent in conspiracy to obstruct justice or impede administration of laws.— The acts of congress and the statutes of Indiana make it a crime for an inspector of elections or other election officer at an election for a member of congress, to whom is committed the safe-keeping and delivery to the board of canvassers of the poll-books, the tally sheets, and the certificates of the votes, to fail or omit to perform this duty of safe-keeping and delivery. An indictment in a federal court for a conspiracy to induce these officers to omit such duty that the documents mentioned might come to the hands of improper persons, who tampered with and falsified the returns, need not allege that the conspirators intended to affect the election of the member of congress who was voted for at that place, the returns of which were in the same poll-books, tally sheets, and certificates with those for state officers. Ex p. Coy, 127 U. Conspiracy to falsely and maliciously charge one with offense.— An indictment for a conspiracy, which avers that the accused, with another person, conspired unlawfully and maliciously to procure a third person to be arrested for the offense of larceny, well knowing that he was not guilty of said offense, follows the statute substantially, and contains all the averments needful to sustain a conviction. People v. Goslin, 67 N. Y. App. Div. 16, 73 N. Y. Suppl. 520.

Omission of statutory word "designedly." — Under a statute making fraudulent or malicious intent an element of conspiracy it is not material that the statutory word "designedly" is not found in the indictment for conspiracy which charges that the defendants conspired "for the unlawful, malicious, and felonious purpose, and with fraudulent and malicious intent and purpose, . . . to obtain," etc. State v. Grant, 86 Iowa 216, 53 N. Conspiracy to defraud United States.— U. S. Rev. Stat. (1872), § 5440, makes it a crime to conspire to defraud the United States in any manner, and a count in an indictment is not demurrable because it charges a conspiracy to defraud, without setting forth the means by which the fraud is to be consummated. such circumstances it will be deemed sufficient for the indictment to state the conspiracy and its object.[20]

(II) To Do Lawful Act. Where neither the conspiracy nor the object to be attained is unlawful, it is necessary to set out the means or state the character of the acts by which the design was to be accomplished as a component part of the offense, with such precision and certainty as to show that they were unlawful.[21] So if means are alleged that may create a crime, although in themselves

It was held that this met the requirement of the statute of an act "to effect the object of the conspiracy." Dealy v. U. S., 152 U. S. 539, 14 S. Ct. 680, 38 L. ed. 545.

Facts showing fraudulency of claim, the presentation of which is charged as overt act. — An indictment under U. S. Rev. Stat. (1872), § 5438, for conspiracy to defraud the government of the United States by obtaining the allowance and payment of a false and fraudulent claim, which charges as the overt act the presentation of such claim, must state the particular facts showing the fraudulent character of the claim, and a general averment in the language of the statute that it was fraudulent is not sufficiently specific. U. S. v. Greene, 115 Fed. 343.

Description of affidavit taken by applicant for public land.— Where the words of the affidavit required to be taken by an applicant for public land are set forth in the statute under which the application is made, it is sufficient, in an indictment for conspiracy to defraud the United States, to refer to or describe it as the affidavit required of such applicant by law. U. S. v. Thompson, 29 Fed. 86, 89.

28. Gantt v. U. S., 108 Fed. 61, 47 C. C. A. 210; U. S. v. Benson, 70 Fed. 591, 17 C. C. A. 293; U. S. v. Sanche, 7 Fed. 715; U. S. v. Donau, 11 Blatchf. (U. S.) 168, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,983, 17 Int. Rev. Rec. 181; U. S. v. Dennee, 3 Woods (U. S.) 47, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,948.

Sufficient showing of overt acts.— Allegations of the indictment that the defendant, in pursuance of the conspiracy, made application for appointment to the office, and made, signed, and delivered to the codefendant a letter embodying the agreement set forth sufficiently show overt acts done in pursuance of the alleged agreement. People v. Squire, 20 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 368.

The averment of the commission of the larceny which was the object of the conspiracy sufficiently charges an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy. U. S. v. Gardner, 42 Fed. 829.

Under U. S. Rev. Stat. (1872), § 5440, punishing conspiracy to defraud the United States where any act to "effect the object of the conspiracy" is done by any of the parties, the gist of the offense being the conspiracy, an indictment charging such a conspiracy entered into within the United States and the jurisdiction of the court is sufficient, although it does not allege the overt acts all the means employed,[29] to charge and describe any act by one or more of the defendants.

(B) Person Committing Act. Although the indictment should charge the conspiracy against all the defendants, an overt act in furtherance of the conspiracy may be charged against those only who committed it.[30]

(C) Time and Place. The indictment should allege the time and place of the act done to effect the object of the conspiracy so as to identify it and show that it post-dated the conspiracy and was not merely a part of it.[31]

j. Accomplishment of Purpose. It is not necessary that the indictment should aver that the object of the conspiracy was accomplished.[32]

3. Surplusage. The general rule that where an averment may be wholly omitted without affecting the charge against the prisoner and without detriment to the indictment it may be treated as surplusage is applicable to indictments for conspiracy.[33] And an immaterial averment not contradicting any other averment, not descriptive of the identity of the charge or of anything essential to it, or tending to show that any offense has been committed will not vitiate the indictment, but may be treated in like manner.[34]

4. Bill of Particulars. If the charge is general, or if it does not convey sufficient information to enable defendant to prepare for trial, a bill of particulars or specification of facts may be ordered, where the court is of opinion that otherwise defendant may be prejudiced or deprived of his rights;[35] and the prosecution charged to have been done within the United States. Dealy v. U. S., 152 U. S. 539, 14 S. Ct. 680, 38 L. ed. 545.

An allegation that an overt act was "according to and in pursuance" of the conspiracy sufficiently shows that it was subsequent thereto, and, the date of the conspiracy being alleged, the time of the overt act need not be specifically stated. Improper insertion of unnecessary words.— Where an indictment for conspiracy can dispense altogether with certain words complained of as being inserted in the wrong place, such improper insertion does not vitiate the indictment, as such words are only harmless surplusage. Elkin v. People, 24 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 272.

It is not necessary to set forth the county in which an alleged conspiracy was formed, in violation of the act of March 2, 1867 (14 U. S. Stat. at L. 484), and it may be rejected as surplusage. U. S. v. Smith, 2 Bond (U. S.) 323, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,322.

Rejection of averment as to false pretenses.— In Reg. v. Yates, 6 Cox C. C. 441, a count of the indictment charged the defendants with a conspiracy by false pretenses and subtle means and devices to extort from T one sovereign of his moneys, and to cheat and defraud him thereof; but the evidence failed to prove that the defendants employed any false pretenses in an attempt to obtain the money. It was held that so much of the count might be rejected as surplusage and the defendants convicted of the conspiracy to extort and defraud. See also Rex v. Hollingberry, 4 B. & C. 329, 6 D. & R. 345, 3 L. J. K. B. O. S. 226, 10 E. C. L. 601.

Where a common-law indictment concludes "contrary to the form of the statute," etc., such words may be rejected as surplusage and a demurrer for that cause will be overruled. State v. Straw, 42 N. H. 393.

L. 701, in which it was held that the judge will not, however, compel the prosecutor to state in his bill of particulars the specific acts with which the defendants are charged, and the times and places at which those acts are alleged to have occurred.

To whom application made.— An application for a bill of particulars should first be made to the officer prosecuting for the state. If refused, the defendant or his counsel should then, before the cause is called for trial, apply to the court. State v. Brady, 107 N. C. 822, 12 S. E. 325.

Discretion.— The matter of granting or re-under such circumstances will be confined to the specification of facts therein contained.[36]

5. Variance — a. In General. As in other criminal prosecutions, on trial of an indictment for conspiracy, the proof must correspond with and support its material averments.[37] If the offense intended is stated with unnecessary particularity it should be proved as laid.[38]

fusing a bill of particulars lies within the sound discretion of the trial judge, and where the exercise of such discretion has not been abused it will not be reviewed by the appellate court. State v. Brady, 107 N. C. 822, 12 S. E. 325; Com. v. Zuern, 16 Pa. Super. Ct. 588.

Particulars of overt acts.— In a general count for conspiracy the defendant is entitled to particulars of the acts relied upon in support of the charge; but on a special count reciting overt acts the court will not order particulars to be furnished in the absence of an affidavit on the part of the defendant that he has no knowledge of the overt acts charged and does not possess sufficient information to enable him to meet them. Reg. v. Stapylton, 8 Cox C. C. 69, 6 Wkly. Rep. 60.

Effect of nol. pros. of particular counts.— In State v. Howard, 129 N. C. 584, 40 S. E. 71, it was held that where, on a prosecution for conspiracy to defraud, particulars were fully furnished by certain counts of the indictment which were nolle prossed at the instance of defendants and after the close of the evidence, they were in full possession of all information which a bill of particulars could have furnished them.

Allegations as to possession and title.— On the trial for conspiracy to commit robbery, if the indictment alleges the possession of the property intended to have been stolen in one person and the title in another, the state must prove both allegations. Ward v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1893) 21 S. W. 250.

Means employed.— In Reg. v. Yates, 6 Cox C. C. 441, it was held that the charge of a conspiracy by false pretenses to extort money was supported by evidence of a conspiracy to extort money without reference to false pretenses.

Motive or intent.— Proof of one of several intentions charged is sufficient (Rex v. Evans, 3 Stark. 35, 23 Rev. Rep. 754, 3 E. C. L. 583); as is proof of particular motive although the evidence discloses others in addition (U. S. v. Lancaster, 44 Fed. 896, 10 L. R. A. 333).

Object or purpose.— A charge of conspiring to prevent particular workmen from continuing their employment is supported by proof of a conspiracy to so prevent any (Rex v. Byckerdike, 1 M. & Rob. 179); of preventing the employment of any apprentices, by proof of a conspiracy to prevent the hiring of more (Rex v. Ferguson, 2 Stark. 489, 3 E. C. L. 500); of obtaining goods, by proof of a conspiracy to obtain goods and labor (Com. v. Meserve, 154 Mass. 64, 27 N. E. 997), to obtain property, by proof of a design to obtain a draft or check (Regent v. People, 96 Ill. App. 189), and a charge of conspiring to inflict a great bodily injury by proof of a conspiracy to tar and feather (State v. Ormiston, 66 Iowa 143, 23 N. W. 370).

Overt act.— An indictment charging a conspiracy to injure and hinder a collector of internal revenue in the discharge of his duties by firing at him is established by proof that the posse which he commanded was fired at. U. S. v. Johnson, 26 Fed. 682.

Participation in combination.— To allege against a number of persons generally that they have conspired to cheat and defraud does not enable the prosecution to prove several conspiracies, each affecting different contracts and different persons or groups of persons interested in the contracts, unless all the contracts and the wrong purposes in respect to them form parts of the combination in which the parties have joined. In order that any of the defendants may be convicted of conspiracy he must be shown to have participated in the alleged general combination or concerted with all or some of the other defendants. Com. v. Zuern, 16 Pa. Super. Ct. 588.

38. Ward v. State, (Tex. Crim. 1893) 21 S. W. 250.

A count charging conspiracy to obtain goods by different indictable false pretenses is supported by evidence of a conspiracy to cheat by some one of those pretenses. Com. v. Meserve, 154 Mass. 64, 27 N. E. 997.

b. As to Time and Place. The time of the alleged conspiracy,[39] of the commission of an overt act,[40] or an unnecessary averment as to the place where the conspiracy was entered into,[41] need not be proved precisely as laid in the indictment.

B. In Civil Cases — 1. Allegations of Declaration or Complaint[42] — a. Grounds of Action. In an action on the case in the nature of a conspiracy, the grounds or gravamen of the action, whether single or several, must be set out with the same certainty as in an action against a single defendant for the same character of action, whether it be libel, slander, assault and battery, malicious prosecution, or false imprisonment; for the judgment may be against a single defendant without proof of the conspiracy;[43] although it cannot be entered against joint defendants without such proof.[44]

Conspiracy to defraud. — In an action in the nature of conspiracy to defraud, the specific acts constituting the fraud must be alleged. A general charge of fraud will be insufficient as being a conclusion of law. Harshman v. Paxson, 16 Ind. 512; Davis v. Minor, 2 U. C. Q. B. 464 (where the court said that merely calling a transaction fraudulent in the declaration will not make it a fraud, if the act as described is not in its nature fraudulent); Wright v. Bourdon, 50 Vt. 494. See also Ide v. Gray, 11 Vt. 615. Where the complaint alleged that the defendants did in concert, by connivance, conspiracy, and combination, cheat and defraud plaintiffs, it was held that this was not a sufficient allegation of fraud and conspiracy, the averment of facts being too meager. Cohn v. Goldman, 76 N. Y. 284 [reversing 43 N. Y. Super. Ct. 436, and disapproving Ynguanzo v. Salomon, 3 Daly (N. Y.) 153].

Malicious prosecution. — In an action on a case in the nature of conspiracy for malicious prosecution, it is not sufficient to allege that the prosecution was false and malicious, an allegation that the action was without probable cause being essential. Kirtley v. Deck, 2 Munf. (Va.) 10, 5 Am. Dec. 445; Porter v. Mack, 50 W. Va. 581, 40 S. E. 459. See also Ellis v. Thilman, 3 Call (Va.) 3; Sutton v. Johnstone, 1 Bro. C. C. 76, 1 T. However, in an action in the nature of a conspiracy for malicious prosecution, malice and absence of reasonable and probable cause may properly be alleged as facts, without setting out the facts and circumstances from which they may be inferred. McCarthy v. Barter, 15 Can. L. T. 198. Where the petition, in an action for conspiracy, charges that the defendant maliciously, and without probable cause, instigated others to institute suits in the courts against the plaintiff, such petition is demurrable unless it alleges the termination of such suits. b. Combination — (i) Necessity For Alleging. The rule is well established that in civil actions the conspiracy is not the gravamen of the charge, but may be pleaded and proved in aggravation of the wrong of which plaintiff complains, and for the purpose of enabling him to recover against all the conspirators as joint tort-feasors. The allegation of conspiracy does not change the nature of the action from one purely on the case, subject to all the settled rules of such action.[45] And when it becomes necessary to prove a conspiracy in order to connect defendant with the wrong complained of, no averment of the conspiracy need be made in the pleadings to entitle it to be proved.[46]

(ii) Setting Forth Acts From Which Conspiracy Inferred. In an action of the nature under consideration the rule is to allow great latitude in setting out in the complaint the particular acts from which the conspiracy is to be inferred; even so far as to allow the individual acts of the conspirators to be averred.[47] The act complained of, however, must be definitely and issuably stated, so that if the facts themselves should be admitted the court can draw legal conclusions. An averment that a party has acted unlawfully, without showing what he did, is not an averment of issuable facts.[48]

45. See supra; III, B, C, and D.

Allegation of conspiracy matter of inducement.— Since less certainty is required in setting out matters of inducement than in setting out the gist of the action, it has been held that a plaintiff will not be compelled to set forth the names of individuals, copartnerships, and corporations organized as a trust under a certain name and alleged to constitute a conspiracy for the purpose of "freezing" such plaintiff out of a certain line of business. Where two or more persons are sued for a joint wrong done, it may be necessary to prove a previous combination between them in order to secure a joint recovery; but it is never necessary to aver this previous combination in the complaint, and if averred it is not to be considered as of the gist of the action. That lies in the wrongful and damaging act done. Herron v. Hughes, 25 Cal. 555.

47. Rourke v. Elk Drug Co., 75 N. Y. App. Div. 145, 77 N. Y. Suppl. 373; Mussina v. Clark, 17 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 188; Gaillard v. Cantini, 76 Fed. 699, 22 C. C. A. 493.

This rule was distinctly stated by Oakley, J., in Tappan v. Powers, 2 Hall (N. Y.) 277, 298, as follows: "It cannot be doubted that if the declaration had averred that all the defendants used the fraudulent means of obtaining plaintiff's property, which were charged against Lawrence, that such an averment should be supported by proof that they were used by him in pursuance of a plan considered among them all; and it seems to me equally clear . . . the act of each defendant may be stated to be done individually and that such act, in judgment of law, is the act of all."

Allegation of claim by defendant as to his right to do injurious act.— In John D. Park, etc., Co. v. National Wholesale Druggists' Assoc., 30 N. Y. App. Div. 508, 514, 52 N. Y. Suppl. 475, it was held that in an action based upon the allegation of a conspiracy to boycott the plaintiff's business it is not necessarily improper pleading to allege the claim made by a defendant as to his right to do a certain act which plaintiff insists is injurious, and his reason for doing it. In the course of this opinion the court said: "At the basis of this cause of action lies the allegation of a conspiracy to boycott the plaintiff's business, and as a conspiracy may consist either of a combination to do an illegal act or to accomplish a legal act by unlawful means (Buffalo Lubricating Oil Co. v. Everest, 30 Hun (N. Y.) 586) some of the acts which are done by the conspirators, while legal when standing alone, may, if they are joined with unlawful acts and have in view an unlawful purpose to the injury of the plaintiff, become improper because they are part of an illegal scheme. For that reason we cannot say that, in all cases, it is improper to set up a claim which was made by a party as to his right to do a certain act which the plaintiff insists is injurious, and his reason for doing it."

Allegations struck out as scandalous matter.— So far as the allegations of acts of individual conspirators are scandalous they should be stricken out if they do not relate to the foundation of the action. Mussina v. Clark, 17 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 188.

W. 390 (where the court said: "The allegation of a mere conspiracy need not, perhaps, in all cases, show the specific means which conspirators intend to use, because they may reserve some latitude as to choice of expedients. But the illegal purpose which they

c. Damages—(I) Necessity For Alleging Damages. The declaration or complaint must allege in a competent form that the conspiracy or the acts done in furtherance thereof resulted in damage to plaintiff or it will be demurrable;[49] and it has been held that the absence of such allegation cannot be supplied by amendment.[50] The declaration or complaint must also show that the damage alleged was the natural proximate consequence of the act complained of.[51]

(II) Method of Alleging Damages. In alleging damage it is not sufficient simply to state that damage did in fact result, but the facts should be alleged from which the court can see, if the facts be true, that damage would naturally or possibly result from the act stated.[52] The allegation of facts as they actually existed, however, does not require or permit a statement in the complaint of the evidence relied on to prove such facts, unless the evidence consists of the facts themselves.[53]

mean to accomplish must be described accurately, because unless the object is illegal, or means agreed upon are illegal, there is no wrong chargeable"); Setzar v. Wilson, 26 N. C. 501; Porter v. Mack, 50 W. Va. 581, 40 S. E. 459.

Sufficiency of allegation as to tort intended. — A complaint charging defendants with conspiracy in that one of them used a false letter of credit, thereby inducing plaintiff to sell him goods, and that the other subscribed his name as a witness to a false signature to said letter of credit, sufficiently pleads the tort that the conspiracy was formed to accomplish. Mendenhall v. Stewart, 18 Ind. App. 262, 47 N. E. 943.

49. Douglass v. Winslow, 52 N. Y. Super. Ct. 439; Silverman v. Doran, 23 Misc. (N. Y.) 96, 51 N. Y. Suppl. 731 (where a complaint for conspiracy alleged inter alia that defendants obtained a patent from the Dominion of Canada by perjury and subornation of perjury in a trial before arbitrators appointed by the Canadian court to decide whether plaintiffs or defendants were entitled to the invention, and averred that defendants had manufactured such invention, to the great loss of plaintiffs and asked damages therefor, but failed to set out in substance the patent laws of Canada. Such complaint was held demurrable on the ground that it failed to show that the patent would have been issued to plaintiffs but for the perjury and conspiracy of defendants, and hence the complaint failed to show damages, which was the gist of the action); Hutchins v. Hutchins, 7 Hill (N. (Pa.) 172, holding that the law will imply damage for a conspiracy, to accuse a person of an offense for which he is liable for indictment and removal from office. It is to be noted, however, that this case holds contrary to the overwhelming weights of authority that the gist of the action is the conspiracy and not a damage and is therefore of no particular value as authority on this proposition.

Averment of conclusion insufficient.— To entitle one to recover damages for the wrongful act of another, whereby he has been prevented from obtaining employment, he must allege that he has sought, and by reason of such wrongful act, been refused, employment; the averment that it is impossible for him by reason of such act to obtain employment being a mere conclusion and therefore not sufficient. Hundley v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 105 Ky. 162, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1085, 48 S. W. 429, 88 Am. St. Rep. 298.

Itemizing damages.— It was held in Barron v. Pittsburg Plate Glass Co., 10 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 114, that the averment of a conspiracy makes it possible to unite in one action, and as a single cause of action, claims for damages which would otherwise have to be sought in independent actions. Thus threats, slander of business, unlawful solicitation of customers, etc., may be parts or elements of a charge of conspiracy, or the attempted destruction of plaintiff's business. Therefore a motion requiring plaintiff to itemize his damages should be overruled.

Sufficient allegation of damages illustrated. — An allegation that by reason of a conspiracy shippers had been prevented from shipping a certain amount of grain through plaintiff's elevator is sufficient allegation of damages. Kellogg v. Lehigh Valley R. Co., 61 N. Y. App. Div. 35, 70 N. Y. Suppl. 237.

53. John D. Park, etc., Co. v. Hubbard, 30 N. Y. App. Div. 517, 52 N. Y. 2. JOINDER OF COUNTS OR CAUSES OF ACTION. Where a complaint in an action for conspiracy states facts which constitute several causes of action, on either of which plaintiff can recover, although he might fail as to the others, the court will order the complaint amended so as to state the causes of action separately.[54] Specific acts done to effectuate the conspiracy may be set forth and are not to be considered as constituting several causes of action, although they be different in their particular character, were done at different times, and defendants do not all claim to be interested in, or benefited by, each of them, or in the same degree as to any of them.[55]

3. BILL OF PARTICULARS. According to the weight of authority it is within the sound discretion of the court, in a civil action in the nature of an action on the case for a conspiracy, to require plaintiff to file a bill of particulars, which has sometimes been defined to be an amplification of the declaration, where the averments of the acts constituting such alleged conspiracy are general in their character.[56]

4. VARIANCE. Where the declaration or complaint alleges a conspiracy between specified persons to effectuate a purpose in a particular way, and the proof establishes such conspiracy between the persons named, but shows a variation as to the details of the conspiracy and the mode in which it is carried out, there is a variance in some particulars only, and not in the entire scope of the declaration or complaint, and it is not fatal.[57]

VI. EVIDENCE.

A. Presumptions and Burden of Proof. As in other criminal cases,[58] the prosecution has the burden of overcoming the presumption of innocence which attends a defendant charged with conspiracy.[59] The prosecution must prove the existence of the conspiracy and defendant's connection with it at some time within the period of limitation,[60] and also that the offense charged was committed within the county in which the venue is laid.[61] Where under a statute it is necessary to

Improper joinder of actions.— An action to recover damages against a number of defendants for a fraudulent conspiracy cannot be joined with an action to obtain a cancellation of a certificate of deposit owned and held by one of such defendants alone, even though the certificate was obtained as one of the fruits of the conspiracy. Therefore, where facts sufficient to constitute both said causes of action are blended in the same petition, a demurrer for improper joinder should be sustained. allege and establish a particular intent, the prosecution has the burden of making out the intent as a part of its case, but the burden shifts when the prosecution has established facts from which, no explanation being offered, the existence of the conspiracy may be reasonably inferred. It is then for defendants to explain their acts.[62]

B. Admissibility — 1. In General. General evidence of the conspiracy and the nature thereof may in the first instance be received as a preliminary step to the more particular evidence showing the participation of a defendant. "This is often necessary to render the particular evidence intelligible, and to show the true meaning and character of the acts of the individual defendants."[63] It is hardly necessary to add that a defendant is not affected by such general proof unless supplemented by proof bringing the matter home to him or to an agent employed by him.[64]

2. Character of Evidence Admissible. The conspiracy may of course be shown by direct evidence,[65] and it is apprehended should be so proved if this character of evidence is attainable. Direct evidence is, however, not indispensable. Circumstantial evidence is competent to prove conspiracy[66] from the very nature of

"Red Men's" Act.— Under W. Va. Code (1891), c. 148, § 10, if a band of persons was found using violence toward an individual it was presumed that such action was the result of a conspiracy. The presumption of fact which would naturally arise in such a case was made, by the statute, a presumption of law, and the burden was thereby thrown on the defense to show that such conspiracy did not exist. In Rex v. Hammond, 2 Esp. 719, an indictment for a conspiracy to raise wages, the prosecution having stated that a plan for a combination of shoemakers had been formed and printed some years before for the regulation of their meetings, subscriptions for their mutual support, and other matters for their mutual government in forwarding their designs, the court allowed a member of the society to testify to such regulations and rules and that others acted under them in execution of the conspiracy charged against defendant as introductory to the proof that defendants were members of the society and equally implicated. Lord Kenyon said: "If a general conspiracy exists, you may go into general evidence of its nature, and the conduct of its members, so as to implicate men who stand charged with acting upon the terms of it, years after those terms have been established, and who may reside at a great distance from the place where the general plan is carried on; such as was done in the cases of the State Trials in the year 1745; where, from the nature of the charge, it was necessary to go into evidence of what was going on at Manchester, in France, Scotland, and Ireland, at the same time."

Generally speaking the conspiracy must be proven by the acts of the party himself and of any other with whom it is attempted to connect him concurring together at the same time and to the same purpose or particular object. The evidence of the conspiracy is more or less strong according to the publicity or privacy of the object of such concurrence and the greater or less degree of similarity in the means employed to effect it. The more secret the one and the greater the coincidence in the other the stronger is the evidence of conspiracy. 1 East P. C. 97 [quoted in Gardner v. Preston, 2 Day (Conn.) 205, 2 Am. Dec. 91].

3. LATITUDE ALLOWED IN ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE. In the reception of circumstantial evidence great latitude must be allowed. The jury should have before them every fact which will enable them to come to a satisfactory conclusion.[68] And it is no objection that the evidence covers a great many transactions and extends over a long period of time,[69] provided, however, that the facts shown have some bearing upon, and tendency to prove, the ultimate fact at issue.[70] But Assumption of an alias.— On trial for conspiracy to obtain goods under false pretenses it may be shown that Kennedy, a defendant, had assumed the name of Brown in the transaction shortly before the conspiracy, that he went under the name of St. Clair, and that his wife while living with him took the name of St. Clair, as having some tendency to show that the assumption of the name of Brown was a mere pretense and that the agreement that he should assume that name for the purpose of obtaining goods on credit was a conspiracy to cheat as charged. Com. v. Meserve, 154 Mass. 64, 27 N. E. 997.

Complaints showing public alarm.— On the trial of an indictment for a conspiracy to procure large numbers of persons to assemble for the purpose of exciting terror in the minds of her majesty's subjects, evidence was given of several meetings at which defendants were present. It was held that the superintendent of police might testify that persons complained to him of being alarmed by these meetings, and that it was not necessary to call the persons who made the complaints. Correspondence after flight.— A letter received by one indicted for a conspiracy from his housekeeper, who was intimately acquainted with his affairs, advising him to disguise himself for the purpose of the trial, is admissible as showing his relation to the case and his means of information. Com. v. Waterman, 122 Mass. 43.

Printing of circulars used by conspirators. —A conspirator not on trial having refused to testify on the ground that he might incriminate himself, it is competent, for the purpose of showing that he printed circulars used during the existence of the conspiracy and in furtherance of it, to prove the testimony given by him in regard to that matter in the trial of another case, not as the declaration of a co-conspirator but merely to show printing. State v. Glidden, 55 Conn. 46, 8 Atl. 890, 3 Am. St. Rep. 23.

Good character is a fact, like all the other facts proven in the cause, to be weighed and estimated by the jury, and is especially proper to be shown in a case depending on circumstantial evidence. In a doubtful case it may turn the scale in favor of the accused. U. S. v. Lancaster, 44 Fed. 885, 10 L. R. A. 333; U. S. v. Babcock, 3 Dill. (U. S.) 581, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,487, 3 Centr. L. J. 143, 1 Cinc. L. Bul. 52. It must not be allowed, however, to obscure the other testimony in the case, and cannot justify an acquittal where the evidence of guilt is clear and convincing. U. much discretion is left to the trial court, in a case depending on circumstantial evidence, and its ruling will be sustained if the testimony which is admitted tends even remotely to establish the ultimate fact.[71]

4. Acts and Declarations of Co-Conspirators[72]— a. Admissibility — (i) Statement of Rule. If it be shown that several have combined together for the same illegal purpose, any act done by one of them in pursuance of the original concerted plan, and with reference to the common object is, in the contemplation of the law, the act of all, and therefore proof of such act will be evidence against any of the others who were engaged in the conspiracy, and any declaration made by one of the parties in the absence of the others during the pendency of the illegal enterprise is not only evidence against himself, but against all the other conspirators who, when the combination is proved, are as much responsible for such declarations and the acts to which they relate, as if made and committed by themselves.[73]

253. Thus on a charge of conspiracy to prosecute G, who was not guilty of the crime, the state may not prove that defendants prosecuted other parties who were guilty, and with whom G had no connection. Such proof could only create prejudice. The prosecution of guilty persons is not proof of a conspiracy to prosecute the innocent. State v. Walker, 52 Me. 195. And evidence that K wrote letters while in prison to one Flora Brown who was not called as a witness and whose relationship to him was not shown has no tendency to show that K's true name is Brown and is inadmissible for that purpose. S. 666, where it was shown that at the date of the fraud charged one defendant had declared that he had called himself by the name of H and represented himself as one of the firm of H & Co., which was the name under which the frauds were committed.

Seeking interview.— On trial of an indictment charging a conspiracy to commit burglary, evidence that defendant was seeking an interview with his co-conspirator for the purpose of arranging to commit burglaries is admissible, as tending to show his willingness to conspire as charged in the indictment. (II) Reason For Rule. Such evidence is admissible as being part of the res gestæ.[74] This rule of evidence is founded upon principles which apply to agencies and partnerships. And it is reasonable that where a body of men assume the attribute of individuality, whether for commercial business or the commission of a crime, that the association should be bound by the acts of one of its members in carrying out the design.[75]

(B) Acts and Declarations Not in Aid of or During Existence of Conspiracy. Acts and declarations of a conspirator cannot be admitted as against a co-conspirator, unless such acts were performed or declarations made in aid or execution of the conspiracy.[77] So the acts and declarations must occur during the

Time of joining conspiracy.— It is not necessary that the person whose declarations are offered should have been a party to the original concoction of the fraud if he, after full knowledge that it was committed, attempts to reap the benefits of the fraudulent transaction. Peterson v. Speer, 29 Pa. St. 478. Each co-conspirator is bound by declarations of each of his co-conspirators done and said during the continuance of the conspiracy touching the object and conduct of the conspiracy. Applications of doctrine.— When the evidence tended to show a conspiracy between the woman on trial and her codefendant to kill the former's husband, statements made by her prior to the time when the codefendant began work for her husband which was the earliest time as to which the evidence tended to establish any intimacy between the accused, were inadmissible to inculpate him. Applications of doctrine.—Where the charge was a conspiracy to make a false arrest, arrests made subsequently to that complained of cannot be shown. State v. Davies, 80 Mo. App. 239. So on an information against T and B for a conspiracy to cause and procure goods to be imported without payment of part of the customs dues, by entering the goods as less in quantity and quality than they really were, it was held that evidence of a memorandum made by T on the counterfoil of a check drawn by him that part of the money arising from the fraud was received by B was inadmissible, it being a declaration of T after the principal transac-

Declarations made by one to another not in furtherance of the design but after the former had abandoned the conspiracy are mere confessions and not admissible against the other conspirators.[80]

b. Necessity of Proving Conspiracy as Basis of Admission. On account of the difficulty in proving the conspiracy and bringing the guilty to justice there is no class of cases in which it is more important that the trial judge should have a large discretion as to the order in which evidence should be received, and this discretion cannot be reviewed on error except in clear cases of abuse.[81] It is frequently said that the acts and declarations of one conspirator cannot be admitted in evidence against his fellow conspirator until proof has been made of the existence of the conspiracy.[82] There is, however, no unvarying rule to this effect.[83] According to the great weight of authority the order in which the testimony shall be received is largely in the discretion of the trial court. If the circumstances of the case are so peculiar and urgent as to require it, the acts and declarations of a conspirator may be introduced in the first instance before proof of the agreement.[84] This is often done under a promise of the prosecution to establish the combination at a later stage of the case.[85] Such evidence, however, is in the nature of a confession and can operate only against the person whose acts and declarations are shown until the conspiracy is made out prima facie,[86]

the jury being cautioned not to let such confessions or admissions prejudice other defendants on trial.[87]

c. Requirements as to Preliminary Proof. The preliminary evidence of the combination which will justify the jury in taking into consideration, as affecting a codefendant, the acts and declarations of a conspirator, need not be conclusive on the question of the conspiracy. All that can be required is that in the opinion of the court it shall show prima facie that the conspiracy existed.[88] It is sufficient, according to some cases, if the whole of the evidence introduced on the trial taken together shows that such conspiracy actually existed,[89] while other authorities distinctly hold that there must be sufficient proof aliunde to establish prima facie the fact of a conspiracy.[90] And it is undoubtedly true, as was said

Acts occurring after conspiracy formed.— In no case can acts occurring after the conspiracy is formed be referred to to prove the existence of the conspiracy. People v. Brickner, 15 N. Y. Suppl. 528 [citing People v. Squire, 6 N. Y. Crim. 475; People v. Kerr, 6 N. Y. Crim. 406]. So where several were on trial for conspiring to defraud the government out of internal revenue taxes and one defendant testified that he gave money gained from the conspiracy to another at the end of every week for delivery to the defendant, the subsequent declarations of the one to whom the money was given before the one from whom he received it as to his disposition of such money, are admissible as a part of the res gestæ but not for the purpose of showing the fact of the conspiracy or connecting defendant therewith, and should be disregarded by the jury unless defendant's connection with the combination is shown by independent evidence. U. S. v. McKee, 3 Dill. (U. S.) 546, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 15,685, 3 Centr. L. J. 100, 22 Pittsb. Leg. J. (Pa.) 107.

Proposal of the same crime to another.— Where it was charged that the defendant in order to commit the fraud impersonated a confederate by wearing his clothes, it was in a recent case, that "if an act or declaration is of such a character as to tend to establish the existence of the conspiracy, then it should not be excluded merely because it is also of such a character as to bind all the conspirators by its consequences in the event of the establishment of the conspiracy."[91] But such acts and declarations cannot be used to show the conspiracy without other independent evidence.[92]

5. TESTIMONY OF CO-CONSPIRATORS.[93] A co-conspirator is an accomplice and although uncorroborated[94] is always a competent witness.[95] The fact that he is an accomplice operates, not against the admissibility of his testimony, but only against its credibility.[96]

6. OVERT ACTS. Although in the absence of statutory changes it is not necessary for the purpose of rendering a person criminally liable to prove that any overt acts were done in pursuance of the conspiracy, the common-law offense being complete when the combination was formed and the agreement entered into,[97] such acts may nevertheless be shown since from them an inference may be drawn as to the object of the conspiracy.[98] It sometimes occurs that a conspiracy can be proved in no other way.[99] If, however, overt acts are specified in the indictment, the proof must be confined to the acts so specified.[1]

7. COLLATERAL FACTS WITH WHICH PARTY CONNECTED. Where the guilt of a party depends upon the intent, purpose, or design with which an act is done, or upon his guilty knowledge thereof, collateral facts in which he bore a principal part may be examined into for the purpose of establishing such guilty intent, design, purpose, or knowledge. It is sufficient that such collateral facts have some connection with each other as a part of the same plan or as induced by the same

Acts beyond jurisdiction.— The circumstances by which the conspiracy can be established vary according to the objects to be accomplished, and the field of operations of the conspirators may extend over several states as the necessities of the conspirators require. Therefore the fact that the act was performed outside of the state in the course of the conspiracy does not affect the proof of it. Bloomer v. State, 48 Md. 521. See also State v. Soper, (Iowa 1902) 91 N. W. 774 (acts done in another county); Rex v. Bowen [cited in Rex v. Brisac, 4 East 164, 7 Rev. Rep. 551]; Reg. v. Connolly, 25 Ont. 151.

motive, and it is immaterial that they show the commission of other crimes.[2] The evidence in a conspiracy is wider than perhaps in any other case. Taken by themselves, the acts of a conspiracy are rarely of an unequivocally guilty character, and they can only be properly estimated when connected with all the surrounding circumstances.[3]

C. Weight and Sufficiency — 1. In General. Although the fraudulent and corrupt combination, the common design, is the essential element, it is not necessary to prove that defendants came together and actually agreed in terms to have this common design and to pursue it by common means and so carry it into execution. Such proof can seldom be made and therefore is not required. It is sufficient to justify the jury in finding a conspiracy if it is shown that the persons charged with conspiring pursued by their acts the same object, often by the same means, one performing one part of an act and the other another part of the same act, so as to complete it, with a view to the attainment of the object which they were pursuing.[4]

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Conspiracy," § 101.

Evidence limited by bill of particulars.— A bill of particulars in a criminal case limits and makes specific the charge to be proved and narrows the evidence to the specifications. So where the charge is a conspiracy to defraud a county by rendering false bills in connection with a certain public building and the bill of particulars limits the acts to such improvement it is not permissible to show bills rendered and acts done in connection with other improvements, especially where such evidence was not necessary to show conspiracy as to the building named. 2. Testimony of Co-Conspirators. Although the testimony of a co-conspirator is always admissible, it must be scrutinized with care. Although this is not a positive rule of law, yet juries are generally cautioned that there ought not to be a conviction on such testimony without corroboration;[5] and the corroboration must come from other evidence in the case aside from the testimony of other co-conspirators.[6] The weight to be attached to such evidence is for the jury alone who must consider it in view of the other evidence and reach their conclusion upon a view of the whole case.[7]

3. Reasonable Doubt — a. In Criminal Cases. Where a conviction of the crime of conspiracy is sought as in other criminal cases the jury must acquit if upon any reasonable hypothesis they can reconcile the evidence with defendant's innocence. And as in prosecutions for other crimes it is sufficient to sustain a conviction, if upon consideration of all the evidence the jury are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt.[8]

You are to look into the testimony of other witnesses for corroborating facts. Where it is supported in material respects you are bound to credit it, but where it is unsupported you are not to rely upon it, unless, after the exercise of extreme caution, it produces in your minds the most positive conviction of its truth."

b. In Civil Cases. The doctrine of reasonable doubt has no place, however, in a civil suit for damages, where it is sufficient if the evidence is full, clear, and satisfactory,[9] and the conspiracy established by a preponderance of the evidence.[10]

VII. TRIAL.

A. In Criminal Prosecutions — 1. Venue and Jurisdiction. The venue in an indictment for conspiracy may be laid in the county in which the agreement was entered into, or in any county in which any overt act was done by any of the conspirators in futherance of the common design.[11] If the conspiracy is entered into within the jurisdiction of the court, the parties thereto are triable in that jurisdiction, notwithstanding the offense was to be committed without the jurisdiction;[12] and if a conspiracy is formed without the jurisdiction, an overt act committed by one of the conspirators within the jurisdiction is evidence of the crime within the jurisdiction where the overt act is committed.[13]

2. Severance as to Joint Defendants. While there is one decision that defendants jointly indicted for a conspiracy cannot be awarded separate trials,[14] the weight of authority is to the effect that prosecutions for conspiracy are proper cases for severance as to the parties defendant.[15] Unless it is so provided by statute,[16] separate trials are not a matter of right, but the court is vested with judicial discretion, and its exercise thereof is not the subject of revision except for abuse.[17]

3. Instructions — a. In General. The general rules requiring the trial court to instruct the jury as to the effect of the evidence and the principles of law applicable to the facts thereby disclosed govern the trial of an indictment or information for conspiracy.[18]

b. As to Intent. An instruction that the jury must find that defendants sought to accomplish their purpose by "false and fraudulent pretenses and representations," sufficiently charges the necessity of the jury finding an intent to defraud.[19]

c. As to Refusal to Testify. It is error for the court to decline to instruct that the refusal of the alleged conspirators to testify when placed on the witness stand should not be considered by the jury in determining the question of guilt or innocence, and that the jury should not presume therefrom that the testimony if given would be against defendants.[20]

d. As to Reasonable Doubt. The jury should be instructed as to the doctrine of reasonable doubt, upon the question of guilt on the whole case, some element of the crime, or some entire matter of defense,[21] and not with respect to belief as to particular facts.[22]

4. Questions For Jury. In trials for conspiracy in accordance with the usual rule that all questions of fact are to be left to the jury, the question of knowl edge or intent when essential to the offense is for the jury.[23] So also whether the venue is changed for some of the defendants only, separate trials must be had. Casper v. State, 47 Wis. 535, 2 N. W. 1117.

Discrimination as to defendants.— Where the charge in reference to statements of one of the conspirators is fair and correct in principle, but by an oversight is in some parts applied by the judge to one of the defendants only, and no notice of the omission to expressly apply the same instruction to another defendant is taken at the time, the latter will not be heard to complain. People v. Saunders, 25 Mich. 119.

Remarks of judge on weight of evidence.— In Com. v. Zuern, 16 Pa. Super. Ct. 588, the fact that the judge had given the jury certain instructions as to the weight of the evidence was held not reversible error, in view of the fact that the defendant had offered no evidence, and especially as the jury were told that they must decide as to the credibility of the witnesses.

Sufficiency.— In State v. Grant, 86 Iowa 216, 53 N. W. 120, an instruction that if from the evidence the jury were "satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt, and believed as reasonable men" that the defendants were working together with a common object, they should find that the conspiracy was established was held not to be prejudicial to the defendants.

22. Ochs v. People, 124 Ill. 399, 16 N. E. 662, where it was held that a request to charge the jury as to reasonable doubt on a conflict of testimony as to the time when the offense was committed was properly refused.

Defendant's knowledge of the falsity of a claim by which it is intended to defraud the alleged pretenses by which an attempt was made to defraud certain citizens and "the public generally," in pursuance of a conspiracy, were of such a character as to impose upon citizens of the community is a question of fact for the jury.[24] In deciding whether the facts are sufficient to sustain a finding of conspiracy, the jury may consider the credibility of the witness.[25]

5. VERDICT — a. In General. In a trial for conspiracy the verdict must answer to the substance of the charge and not leave the truth or falsity of the accusation uncertain.[26] Where by statute,[27] providing that a conviction for a statutory offense need only state the offense in the words of the statute, a conviction containing such a statement is sufficient without setting out the particular acts constituting the offense.[28]

c. Acquittal or Nolle Prosequi as to One or More Defendants. It is not necessary that all the defendants charged with conspiracy be shown to be guilty. It will be sufficient if the guilt of at least two is shown;[30] and on an indictment of two persons and others unknown for a conspiracy, the acquittal of one does not affect the plea of guilty of the other.[31] So where one of three persons charged with conspiracy dies before the trial and one is guilty, the third may, notwithstanding this fact, be tried and convicted.[32] It has also been held that the fact that one of the conspirators has not been indicted in order that he may be a witness for the prosecution and that the prosecuting officer as he is authorized to do procures a dismissal on his own motion of the indictment as to two others does not bar a conviction of the remaining conspirator;[33] but inasmuch as two persons are necessary to a conspiracy, if two are tried and one is acquitted,[34] the other

Where one is indicted for conspiring with G and other persons to the jurors unknown, and is tried separately, it is not necessary for the jury to be satisfied that defendant and G conspired, or that there should be sufficient testimony to convict any other person of that crime, if on trial. The jury may convict defendant if they believe that he conspired with any person, whether named in the indictment or not, although there may not be sufficient evidence before them to convict such person. Duprey's Case, 4 City Hall Rec. (N. Y.) 121.

must also be acquitted; and the same is the case where a nolle prosequi is entered as to one.[35]

6. Judgment — a. On Indictment in Several Counts. In prosecutions for conspiracy, on a general verdict of guilty upon an indictment containing several counts for the same offense, judgment may be entered on any sufficient count.[36]

b. On Separate Trial. In England there are cases to the effect that where one tried separately for conspiracy is convicted, judgment may be passed on him, although the others who have appeared and pleaded have not been tried.[37] In this country, however, it has been held that, although this practice may be proper where one alone is indicted for a conspiracy with others unknown, or when he is indicted with others who cannot be taken or brought to trial, yet where several are prosecuted together, taken, and may be brought to trial for conspiracy, and upon severance one only has been tried and found guilty, there is impropriety in proceeding to judgment against him before the trial of his codefendants, and the judgment should be suspended until the number necessary to the crime are convicted; those found guilty being meanwhile held in custody or under recognizance.[38]

7. New Trial and Arrest of Judgment — a. In General. Where all of several defendants in an indictment for conspiracy are found guilty, if one of them show himself entitled to a new trial on grounds not affecting the others, a new trial will nevertheless be granted to all.[39] It has been held, however, that where two persons are indicted jointly for a conspiracy, both defendants having been found guilty, if one of them applies for a new trial, which is overruled and he obtains a writ of error, and the other does not apply for a new trial and there is a judgment against him, the judgment may be reversed as to the one who appeals without reversing the judgment against the other who did not apply for a new trial.[40]

b. Presence of All Defendants on Motion. The presence in court of all the defendants convicted on an indictment for conspiracy is necessary in order to move for a new trial in behalf of any of them.[41] But it seems that a motion in arrest of judgment will be entertained at the instance of one of several found guilty, although the others are not in court and may have actually escaped from custody.[42] specific punishment is provided for the offense it may be punished as a misdemeanor by fine and imprisonment.[43]

b. Where Punishment Is Measured by Object of Conspiracy. Conspiracy to commit a crime is sometimes punishable by the infliction of the same punishment as that prescribed for the commission of such crime;[44] and it has been held that conspiracy to commit an offense should never be punished more severely than the perpetration of it.[45]

c. Offense Committed by Official. If the punishment of an officer of the government for conspiring against an officer is more severe than when the offense is committed by a private person, an official indicted in his individual capacity cannot be subjected to the greater punishment.[46]

d. Place of Imprisonment. Where an act expressly authorizing a sentence of fine and imprisonment on conviction for a conspiracy is silent as to the place of imprisonment, the persons convicted may be sentenced only to confinement in an institution provided for the incarceration of persons convicted of a misdemeanor.[47]

B. In Civil Actions — 1. Instructions — a. In General. The jury should be instructed as to the principles of law applicable to conspiracy, and the facts disclosed by the evidence.[48]

b. As to Fact of Conspiracy. The jury must be instructed as to the persons who must be found to have united in the confederacy.[49]

c. As to Evidence of Accomplice. Where the acts and declarations of one of the alleged conspirators have been received in evidence the court should point out the distinction between evidence admitted to establish the confederacy and that to be considered after the conspiracy is found to exist, and should also instruct as to the weight and value of the uncorroborated evidence of the alleged accomplice and the caution to be exercised in considering it.[50]

d. As to Fraud and Resulting Damage. Instructions which authorize the jury to render a verdict for plaintiff without finding that he was deceived and defrauded by defendants because of their actions or conduct in pursuance of the conspiracy are erroneous.[51]

2. Questions of Law and Fact. Where there is no evidence tending to establish guilty complicity on the part of one of the defendants the jury should be instructed that they are bound to render a verdict of not guilty as to him.[52] But the existence of the alleged conspiracy,[53] whether or not defendant was a party to the conspiracy,[54] whether deceitful and fraudulent means were used as alleged, or plaintiff was deceived by them to his injury,[55] or whether a particular witness shall be believed[56] are questions for the jury to determine.

3. VERDICT — a. Right to Recover as Against One Defendant Alone. At the common law on the writ of conspiracy which has since become obsolete it was necessary that at least two should be joined and found guilty. One could not be found guilty and the other acquitted.[57] However, in an action on the case in the nature of conspiracy, which has superseded the ancient writ of conspiracy, although several are sued, judgment may go against one, although the others are acquitted, as the foundation of the action is the damage and not the conspiracy.[58]

b. When Joint Wrong Necessary. Nevertheless, where an action is brought against several as concerned in a wrong done, it is necessary in order to recover against all to show a joint wrong.[59]

4. MEASURE OF DAMAGE — a. Compensation. Where as the result of the conspiracy, property had been lost, and its value can be established or the precise quantum of damage sustained can be compensated, the injured party is limited to compensation only.[60]

I. DEFINITION.

A constitution may be defined as that fundamental law of a state[1] which contains the principles upon which government is founded, regulates the division of

1. "A constitution is but a law; it emanates from the people, the depository, and the only one, of all political power; it is therefore, the supreme law. It organizes and defines the different parts of the government, confers on each department the powers and duties allotted to each, and limits the powers of every department. It has this further quality: having distributed the different powers to the different departments, it leaves those powers to be exercised by those departments, and leaves to the sovereign people themselves no other power than that of choosing their own officers or representatives. The people can do no act, except make a new constitution or make a revolution." Com. v. Collins, 8 Watts (Pa.) 331, 349.

sovereign powers, and directs to what persons each of these powers is to be intrusted and the manner of its exercise.[2]

A. Unwritten. A constitution is said to be unwritten when its source is in precedents and customs. Such is often said to be the constitution of England.[3]

"That by which the powers of government are limited." Kamper v. Hawkins, 1 Va. Cas. 20, 24.

"The organization of the government, distributing its powers among bodies of magistracy, and declaring their rights, and the liberties reserved and retained by the people." French v. State, 52 Miss. 759, 762.

"The body of fundamental laws as contained in written documents, or established by prescriptive usage, which constitute the form of government for a nation, state, community, association, or society." Worcester Dict. [quoted in McRae v. McLeod, 26 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 255, 259].

"The established form of government in a state, kingdom, or country; a system of fundamental rules, principles, and ordinances for the government of a state or nation, either contained in written documents, or established by prescriptive usage." Imperial Dict. [quoted in McRae v. McLeod, 26 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 255, 259].

"The work or will of the People themselves, in their original, sovereign, and unlimited capacity." Vanhorne v. Dorrance, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 304, 308, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,857, 1 L. ed. 391 [quoted in Rison v. Farr, 24 Ark. 161, 167, 87 Am. Dec. 52].

"To some extent a declaration of rights. It neither enforces itself nor the privileges which it guarantees." Sayres v. Com., 88 Pa. St. 291, 308.

"The form of government instituted by the people in their sovereign capacity, in which first principles and fundamental law are established." Phoebe (a woman of color) v. Jay, 1 Ill. 268, 271.

"It is to . . . the departments of government, what a law is to individuals — nay, it is not only a rule of action to the branches of government, but it is that from which their existence flows, and by which the powers, (or portions of the right to govern,) which may have been committed to them, are prescribed — It is their commission — nay, it is their creator." Kamper v. Hawkins, 1 Va. Cas. 20, 24.

"A constitution is not the beginning of a community nor the origin of private rights; it is not the fountain of law nor the incipient state of government; it is not the cause, but consequence, of personal and political freedom; it grants no rights to the people, but is the creature of their power, the instrument of their convenience." Cooley Const. Lim. 37 [quoted in State v. Ah Chuey, 14 Nev. 79, 101, 33 Am. Rep. 530].

3. "There are four principal sources of English Constitutional Law: (1) Treaties, or quasi-treaties, (2) Precedents and customs generally known as Common Law, (3) Compacts, and (4) Statutes. The first, and the two last of these divisions are the written part of the Constitution, the second is the unwritten part." The treaties are: The Act of Union with Scotland (1707), the Act of Union with Ireland (1800). The precedents and customs are to be found in documents, such as judgments, authoritative reports and lawyers' opinions. The relations of the crown, cabinet, the house of lords and house of commons lie outside the domain of written law. The Compacts are the Great Charter (Magna Charta 1215), the Bill of Rights (1689), the Act of Settlement (1700). Petition of Rights (1627) and the Habeas Corpus Act (1697) are also important. The statutes are acts of parliament sanctioned by the crown. Boutmy Const. L. 8, 17, 18, 46. "The Parliament of Great Britain, indeed, as possessing the sovereignty of the country, has the power to disregard fundamental principles, and pass arbitrary and unjust enactments; but it cannot do this rightfully, and it has the power to do so simply because there is no written constitution from which its authority springs or on which it depends, and by which the courts can test the validity of its declared will." Cooley Const. Lim. (5th ed.) 209. "The British parliament has supreme and uncontrolled power, and may change the Constitution of England, and repeal even Magna Charta, which is itself only an act of parliament. But in this Commonwealth the legislative, as well as the executive authority and the courts of justice, is controlled and limited by the written constitution." In re Whitcomb, 120 Mass. 118, 122, 21 Am. Rep.

B. Written — 1. In General. A written constitution may be defined as a stipulation agreed upon by the people of a state or nation as a rule of action binding upon all its officials and departments, and susceptible of interpretation only by a tribunal established by its provisions, and of modification or repeal only by the authority creating it.[4]

2. United States — a. Federal Constitution. The constitution of the United States is the most famous of all written constitutions.[5]

502; Burnham v. Morrissey, 14 Gray (Mass.) 226, 238, 74 Am. Dec. 676. And see Opinion of Justices, 126 Mass. 557, 565. The provisions of Magna Charta were not original concessions. Nearly all of them may be traced to the usages and institutions of the Anglo-Saxons. See Bowen "Documents of the Constitution of England and America"; Stubb "Select Charters"; Thomson "Historical Essay on Magna Charta"; and Preston "Documents of American History."

A translation of Magna Charta may be found in Ky. Stat. (1899), p. 1.

4. Cooley says: "In our American Constitutional law, the word 'constitution' is used in a restricted sense, as implying the written instrument agreed upon by the people of the Union, or any one of the States, as the absolute rule of action and decision for all departments and officers of the Government, in respect to all points covered by it, which must control until it shall be changed by the authority which established it." Cooley Const. Lim. 3 [quoted in State v. McCann, 4 Lea (Tenn.) 1, 9; Cline v. State, 36 Tex. Crim. 320, 350, 36 S. W. 1099, 37 S. W. 722, 61 Am. St. Rep. 850; Rasmussen v. Baker, 7 Wyo. 117, 134, 50 Pac. 819, 38 L. R. A. 773].

Miller defines a constitution as "a written instrument by which the fundamental powers of the government are established, limited, and defined, and by which those powers are distributed among several departments, for their safe and useful exercise for the benefit of the body politic." Miller Const. 71 [quoted in Rasmussen v. Baker, 7 Wyo. 117, 135, 50 Pac. 819, 38 L. R. A. 773].

Other definitions are: "An agreement of the people, in their individual capacities, reduced to writing, establishing and fixing certain principles for the government of themselves." State v. Parkhurst, 9 N. J. L. 427, 443 [quoted in Rasmussen v. Baker, 7 Wyo. 117, 135, 50 Pac. 819, 38 L. R. A. 773].

"The supreme original written will of the people, acting in their highest sovereign capacity, creating and organizing the form of government, designating the different departments, assigning to them their respective powers and duties, and restraining each and all of them within their proper and peculiar spheres." State v. Cox, 8 Ark. 436, 443 [citing State v. Ashley, 1 Ark. 513].

"A written constitution is, in every instance, a limitation upon the powers of government in the hands of agents; for there never was a written republican constitution which delegated to functionaries all the latent powers which lie dormant in every nation, and are boundless in extent and incapable of definition." State v. Ah Chuey, 14 Nev. 79, 101, 33 Am. Rep. 530.

5. Its history is briefly as follows: Congress appointed at the same time a committee to prepare a declaration of independence and a committee to prepare a plan of confederation for the colonies. Dr. Franklin, as early as Aug. 21, 1775, submitted to that body a sketch entitled "Articles of Confederation and Perpetual Union of the Colonies," which became a basis for the articles reported on July 12, 1776. These articles of confederation were amended from time to time until Nov. 17, 1777, when congress determined to propose them to the states. The last state to ratify them was Maryland on March 1, 1781. "The exclusive cognizance of our foreign relations, the rights of war and peace, and the right to make unlimited requisitions of men and money, were confided to Congress, and the exercise of them was binding upon the states. But, in imitation of all the former confederacies of independent states, either in ancient Greece or modern Europe, the articles of confederation carried the decrees of the federal council to the states in their sovereign or collective capacity. This was the great fundamental defect in the confederation of 1781; it led to its eventual overthrow; and it has proved pernicious or destructive to all other federal governments which adopted the principle. Disobedience to the laws of the Union must either be submitted to by the government, to its own disgrace, or those laws must be enforced by arms. The mild influence of the civil magistrate, however strongly it may be felt and obeyed by private individuals, will not be heeded by an organized community, conscious of its strength and swayed by its passions. The history of the federal government of Greece, Germany, Switzerland, and Holland afford melancholy examples of destructive civil war springing from the disobedience of the separate members." 1 Kent Comm. 213. The weakness of the confederation and the need of the substitution of a more stable system was pointed out by Hamilton in a letter to James Duane, Sept. 3, 1780. See 1 Hamilton Works (Lodge ed.) 203. In May, 1785, congress failed to act on the report of a committee recommending an alteration of the first paragraph of the ninth of the articles of confederation so as to enlarge the powers of congress, especially as to trade; and the legislature of Virginia on Jan. 21, 1786, appointed commissioners to meet such commissioners as might be appointed by other states

b. State Constitutions. A state constitution consists of a number of fundamental laws passed by, and alterable and repealable alone by, the people; it is superior to the will of the legislature, the validity of whose acts is determined by its provisions.[6]

"to examine the relative situation and trade of said states; to consider how far a uniform system in their commercial regulations may be necessary to their common interest and their permanent harmony; and to report to the several states such an act relative to this great object as when unanimously ratified by them will enable the United States in congress effectually to provide for the same." Va. Code (1887), p. 11. The commissioners of only four states besides Virginia, viz., Delaware, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and New York, met in Annapolis on the first Monday in September. A report drawn by Mr. Hamilton was agreed upon recommending that commissioners from all the states meet on the second Monday in the May following. See Hamilton Works (Lodge ed.) 319. A convention of delegates from all the original thirteen states (except Rhode Island) met at Philadelphia May 14, 1787. On September 17 a form of constitution was unanimously agreed upon, and on September 28 submitted to the congress of the confederation. Conformably to recommendations as to its adoption, it was sent by the congress to the state legislatures, in order to be rejected or ratified by conventions of delegates chosen in each state by the people. The several state conventions ratified the constitution as follows: Delaware, Dec. 7, 1787; Pennsylvania, Dec. 12, 1787; New Jersey, Dec. 18, 1787; Georgia, Jan. 2, 1788; Connecticut, Jan. 9, 1788; Massacusetts, Feb. 6, 1788; Maryland, April 28, 1788; South Carolina, May 23, 1788; New Hampshire, June 21, 1788; Virginia, June 26, 1788; New York, July 26, 1788; North Carolina, Nov. 21, 1789; Rhode Island, May 29, 1790. Art. 7 of the constitution provides that "the Ratification of the Conventions of nine States, shall be sufficient for the Establishment of this Constitution between the States so ratifying the Same." The ratification by the ninth state was read to congress on July 2, 1788, and on September 13 congress passed the following: "Resolved, That the first Wednesday in January next, be the day for appointing electors in the several states, which before the said day shall have ratified the said Constitution; that the first Wednesday in February next, be the day for the electors to assemble in their respective states, and vote for a president; and the first Wednesday in March next, be the time, and the present seat of Congress (New York) the place for commencing proceedings under the said Constitution." 13 Jour. Cong. 141. Proceedings having taken place conformably to this resolution, Washington took the oath of office on April 30, and congress met on March 4. Owing to the want of a quorum the house did not organize until April 1, nor the senate until April 6. It has been held in Owings v. Speed, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 420, 5 L. ed. 124 (action of ejectment to recover a lot of land) that the operation of the constitution "did not commence before the first Wednesday in March, 1789."

Amendments.— The first ten of the amendments were proposed at the first session of congress, Sept. 25, 1789, and were finally ratified by the constitutional number of states on Dec. 15, 1791. The eleventh was proposed in congress on March 5, 1794, and was declared by the president in a message dated Jan. 8, 1798, to have been adopted by the constitutional number of states. The twelfth was proposed in congress on Dec. 12, 1803, and was adopted by the constitutional number of states in 1804. The thirteenth was proposed in congress on Feb. 7, 1865, and was ratified by three fourths of the states. The fourteenth amendment was proposed by congress to the legislatures of the several states on June 16, 1866, but it was not until July 28, 1868, that the secretary of state certified that it had been adopted. The history of this amendment is given in Mass. Rev. Laws (1902), p. 13. The fifteenth amendment was proposed to the legislatures by congress on Feb. 27, 1869, and it was declared on March 30, 1870, to have been ratified by the constitutional number of states.

6. See Taylor v. Governor, 1 Ark. 21, 27; Lynn v. Polk, 8 Lea (Tenn.) 121, 165; Bates v. Kimball, 2 D. Chipm. (Vt.) 77, 84, where it is said: "When the people associate, and enter into compact for the purpose of establishing government, that compact, whatever may be its provisions, or in whatever language it may be written, is the constitution of the State, revocable only by the people, or in the manner they prescribe."

While these state constitutions differ widely in their provisions, their important features may be thus summarized: (1) "The State Constitutions are the oldest things in the political history of America, for they are the continuations and representatives of the royal colonial charters, whereby the earliest English settlements in America were created, and under which their several local governments were established, subject to the authority of the English Crown and ultimately of the British Parliament. But, like most of the institutions under which English speaking peoples now live, they have a pedigree which goes back to a time anterior to the discovery of America itself. It begins with the English Trade Guild of the middle ages, itself the child of still more ancient corporations, dating back to the day of Imperial Rome, and formed under her imperishable law. Charters were granted to merchant

3. DOMINION OF CANADA. The British North America Act[7] is the sole charter by which the rights claimed by the Dominion and the provinces respectively can be determined.[8]

III. ESTABLISHMENT AND AMENDMENT OF CONSTITUTIONS.

A. Adoption. A state constitution adopted in convention but never recognized by the general government or ordained or established by the people is invalid.[9] guilds in England as far back as the days of King Henry I. Edward IV gave an elaborate one to the Merchant Adventurers trading with Flanders in 1463. In it we may already discern the arrangements which are more fully set forth in two later charters of greater historical interest, the charter of Queen Elizabeth to the East India Company in 1599, and the charter of Charles I to the 'Governor and Company of the Massachusetts Bay in Newe-England' in 1628. . . . So long as the colony remained under the British Crown, the superior authority, which could amend or remake the frame of government, was the British Crown or Parliament. When the connection with Britain was severed, that authority passed over, not to the State legislature, which remained limited, as it always had been, but to the people of the now independent commonwealth, whose will speaks through what is now the State Constitution, just as the will of the Crown or of Parliament had spoken through the charters of 1628 and 1691." 1 Bryce Am. Commonw. (3d ed.) 427–429. See also Fiske Beginnings New Eng. (2) On the separation from Great Britain in 1776, in most cases the charters of the thirteen colonies then or later remodeled became the state constitutions. In Massachusetts the first constitution was rejected by the people in 1778, the new one being established in 1780. In Connecticut there was no change until 1828, and in Rhode Island until 1842.

Since the alliance of the original thirteen states thirty-two have been admitted into the Union by acts of congress either directing the people to meet and enact a constitution or accepting a constitution already made by the people. An illustration of the former method of procedure is offered in 25 U. S. Stat. at L. p. 676, c. 180, providing for the admission of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington into the Union, and of the latter in 26 U. S. Stat. at L. p. 215, c. 656; p. 222, c. 664, providing for the admission of Idaho and Wyoming. "Of these instruments (state constitutions), therefore, no less than of the constitutions of the thirteen original states, we may say that although subsequent in date to the federal constitution, they are, so far as each state is concerned, de jure prior to it. Their authority over their own citizens is nowise derived from it." 1 Bryce Am. Commonw. (3d ed.) 431.

Great modifications have been made in nearly all the state constitutions, an excellent analysis of which may be found in 1 Bryce Am. Commonw. (3d ed.) 433 et seq.

Louisiana.— "We hold that on reason and authority that a majority of the property taxpayers in number and value means a majority of those voting at an election." De Soto Parish v. Williams, 49 La. Ann. 422, 441, 21 So. 647, 37 L. R. A. 761. See also Duperier v. Viator, 35 La. Ann. 957.

Maryland.— When an election is held at which a subject-matter is to be determined by a majority of the voters entitled to cast ballots thereat, those absenting themselves, and those who being present abstain from voting, are considered as acquiescing in the result declared by a majority of those actually voting; even though in point of fact but a minority of those entitled to vote really do vote. Walker v. Oswald, 68 Md. 146, 11 Atl. 711.

Massachusetts.—The constitution distinctly says that amendments shall be adopted if "approved and ratified by a majority of the qualified voters, voting thereon." Mass. Rev. Laws 42.

Michigan.— A majority of all the votes cast and not merely a majority of those cast on the question of bonding a city was held necessary in Stebbins v. Judge Superior Ct., 108 Mich. 693, 66 N. W. 594.

Minnesota.— In Smith v. Renville County, 64 Minn. 16, 35 N. W. 956, it was held that at an election under the county-seat removal act all the ballots cast, unintelligible as well as intelligible, must be considered. In Slingerland v. Norton, 59 Minn. 351, 357, 61 N. W. 322, "majority" was held to mean not a mere majority, but the majority required by the first clause of the act, to wit, sixty per cent. In Everett v. Smith, 22 Minn. 53; Bayard v. Klinge, 16 Minn. 249; Taylor v. Taylor, 10 Minn. 107, a "majority" in the constitutional provisions as to the removal of county-seats was held to mean a majority of those voting at the election.

Mississippi.—On an amendment to the constitution a majority of the votes cast is required. State v. Powell, 77 Miss. 543, 27 So. 927, 48 L. R. A. 652. See United States cases infra, this note.

Missouri.— A majority of those voting on township organization is not sufficient; there must be a majority of all the votes cast. State v. McGowan, 138 Mo. 187, 39 S. W. 771. See State v. Binder, 38 Mo. 450; State v. Renick, 37 Mo. 270; State v. Winkelmeier, 35 Mo. 103.

Nebraska.— "To secure the adoption of an amendment to our constitution it is necessary that the favorable votes be in excess of one-half of the highest aggregate number of votes cast at said election, whether such highest number be for the election of an officer or upon the adoption of a proposition." Tecumseh Nat. Bank v. Saunders, 51 Nebr. 801, 805, 71 N. W. 779; Bryan v. Lincoln, 50 Nebr. 620, 70 N. W. 252, 35 L. R. A. 752; State v. Babcock, 17 Nebr. 188, 22 N. W. 372 (holding that a majority of voters of the city are necessary to authorize the issue of bonds). So in State v. Anderson, 26 Nebr. 517, 42 N. W. 421 (sale of county grounds); State v. Bechel, 22 Nebr. 158, 34 N. W. 342 (consent to operate a street railway).

New Jersey.— Under the words "voting thereon" in the constitution "evidently only those voting for or against an amendment are to be deemed those voting thereon." Bott v. State Secretary, 63 N. J. L. 289, 300, 43 Atl. 744, 45 L. R. A. 251, 62 N. J. L. 107, 40 Atl. 740.

New York.— Smith v. Proctor, 130 N. Y. 319, 29 N. E. 312, 41 N. Y. St. 632, 14 L. R. A. 403, only majority of those voting required on the question of issuing bonds for school purposes. But see People v. Ft. Edward, 70 N. Y. 28; May v. Bermel, 20 N. Y. App. Div. 53, 46 N. Y. Suppl. 622, only majority required of those voting on question of town borrowing money.

North Carolina.—A majority of the qualified voters, and not merely of those voting, is necessary to enable a municipal corporation to loan its credit or contract a debt. Duke v. Brown, 96 N. C. 127, 1 S. E. 873; Southerland v. Goldsboro, 96 N. C. 94, 1 S. E. 760. But see Reiger v. Beaufort, 70 N. C. 319.

votes cast upon the question of relocation of a county-seat is sufficient. Davis v. Brown, 46 W. Va. 716, 34 S. E. 839.

Wisconsin.— A majority only of the voters voting is required on the question of school tax. Sanford v. Prentice, 28 Wis. 358. See also Gillespie v. Palmer, 20 Wis. 544.

United States.— A provision in the constitution of Mississippi that the legislature shall not authorize a county to lend aid to a corporation unless two thirds of the qualified voters shall assent thereto at an election to be held therein does not require an assenting vote of two thirds of the whole number enrolled as qualified to vote, but only two thirds of those actually voting at the election held for the purpose. Carroll County v. Smith, 111 U. S. 556, 4 S. Ct. 539, 28 L. ed. 517. And so generally in the United States supreme court. Knox County v. New York City Ninth Nat. Bank, 147 U. S. 91, 13 S. Ct. 267, 37 L. ed. 93 [disregarding Hawkins v. Carroll County, 50 Miss. 735], was the case of the issue of county bonds in Missouri in aid of a railroad, the statute providing that "two-thirds of the qualified voters of such county, city or town, at a regular or special election to be held therein, shall assent to such subscription." It was held that a majority of those voting was sufficient. See also Douglas v. Pike County, 101 U. S. 677, 25 L. ed. 968; Cass County v. Johnston, 95 U. S. 360, 24 L. ed. 416; St. Joseph Tp. v. Rogers, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 644, 21 L. ed. 328; Madison County v. Priestly, 42 Fed. 817; Mobile Sav. Louisiana.— State v. State Secretary, 43 La. Ann. 590, 9 So. 776, holding that the secretary of the senate and the clerk of the house may spread a proposed amendment on the journal after it has been voted for by two thirds of the members, without express authority from the senate or the house, and that in this case there was a ratification of the secretary's act, if any was needed.

Mississippi.— "Two thirds of each house" means two thirds of a majority or a quorum. Green v. Weller, 32 Miss. 650.

Missouri.— Under Const. art. 15, § 2, a resolution proposing a constitutional amendment need not be read on three different days in each house, as an ordinary bill. Edwards v. Lesueur, 132 Mo. 410, 33 S. W. 1130, 31 L. R. A. 815. See State v. McBride, 4 Mo. 303, 29 Am. Dec. 636.

Nebraska.— A proposition to amend the constitution having been passed by the senate by the necessary three-fifths majority and entered on the journal, it was amended by the house and passed by the requisite majority and entered on the journal. Afterward the house amendments were concurred in by the senate and entered on its journal. It was held that there was a sufficient compliance with Const. art. 15, § 1. In re Senate File No. 31, 25 Nebr. 864, 41 N. W. 981, discussing the provisions of this article and section and the methods of procedure; also the necessity of a title stating the object of a bill to amend the constitution.

Nevada.— A proposed amendment to the constitution not having been made on the journal of either house as required by the constitution, the omission was held fatal in State v. Tufly, 10 Nev. 391, 12 Pac. 835, 3 Am. St. Rep. 895.

3. Approval by President or Governor. There seems to be a difference of view as to the necessity of the approval of the executive officer.[13]

4. Certifying and Publishing Proposed Amendments. Constitutions generally provide for the publication of all proposed amendments.[14]

5. Convention to Revise. Another method of proposing amendments is by constitutional conventions. The constitutional convention puts in form the questions of amendment upon which the people are to vote, but the changes are enacted by the people themselves.[15]

6. Submission to Popular Vote. As a general rule under the provisions of the constitutions ratification by vote of the people is essential to the validity of the amendment.[16]

B. Who Are to Construe[21] — 1. In General — a. Federal Constitution. It was no uncommon occurrence in early days for the individual states to claim the right to interpret the federal constitution for themselves individually, and in their aggregate capacity, independent of federal authority. Such claims were made in some cases through the state courts,[22] but most frequently through their legislative departments;[23] and an instance where the legislature of the same state has in turn claimed the right to interpret the federal constitution for itself, conceded the right to the supreme court of the United States, and reclaimed it for itself, is not wanting.[24] But it is now an established principle that in all cases

The terms employed in Magna Charta have a meaning quite as extensive as those used in the American constitutions, and the judicial exposition of the one should be taken as a guide to the proper understanding of the other. Matter of Dorsey, 7 Port. (Ala.) 293. The words "law of the land," as originally used in Magna Charta, and incorporated into the American constitutions, mean according to due course of law, including trial by jury, and prosecution by indictment for the higher crimes and offenses; or, in the language of Mr. Webster in the Dartmouth College case, they mean "a law which hears before it condemns; which proceeds upon inquiry, and renders judgment only after trial." The meaning is that every citizen shall hold his life, liberty, property, and immunities under the protection of the general rules which govern society. 2 Coke Inst. 50; 2 Kent Comm. (6th ed.) 13. 21. What persons or departments, under the American system, are vested with authority to construe constitutional provisions of doubtful meaning, whether occurring in the federal or the state constitutions, are questions that have given rise to much difficulty and confusion, as well as conflict of authority, not only as between the federal and state authorities, but in the internal affairs of the states. In but few of the state constitutions are provisions to be found authorizing the executive or legislative departments to call upon the judiciary for its opinions as to the meaning of doubtful constitutional provisions or statutes, or upon other questions requiring a construction of the fundamental laws of the states; and upon the same subjects the federal constitution is silent. 23. Resolutions passed by the legislatures of Kentucky and Virginia, as drawn by Jefferson and Madison respectively, declared in substance that the several states were sovereign and independent, that the federal constitution was a compact between them, to which they were the parties, that there was no common arbitrator to construe the federal constitution, and that each state had the right to construe it for itself, to judge of infractions, and the right to prescribe the mode of redress. 4 Elliot Debates 315, 322; North Am. Rev. (Oct. 1830), pp. 488–528. For answers of the legislatures of Delaware, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, New York, Connecticut, New Hampshire, and Vermont, to these resolutions and denying their principles see Cooper Am. Politics, bk. 2, p. 6. Similar views to those expressed in the Virginia and Kentucky resolutions, although less radical in tenor, were adopted by the "Hartford Convention" of 1814. Dwight Hist. Hartf. Conv. p. 361; 7 Nile Reg. p. 308.

24. In 1810 the legislature of Pennsylvania, being of the opinion that there was no common arbitrator of the federal constitution, passed a resolution proposing an amendment to it, providing for the "appointment of an impartial tribunal to decide disputes between the state and federal judiciary," to which the legislature of Virginia, of Jan. 26, 1810, answered that it was "of opinion that a tribunal is already provided by the Constitution of the United States, to wit: The Supreme Court, more eminently qualified from their habits and duties, from their mode of selection, and from the tenure of their offices, to decide the disputes aforesaid, in an enlightened and impartial manner, than any other tribunal which could be created." Va. Sen. Jour. (1810); Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 264, 5 L. ed. 257. But in 1829 the legislature of Virginia again resolved "that there was no common arbitrator to construe the Constitution of the United States;" that, "being a federative compact between sovereign states, each state has a right to construe the compact for itself." 3 Am. Ann. Reg. 131.

involving a construction of the federal constitution the courts of the United States have exclusive jurisdiction; and their decisions are binding upon the state courts, "anything in the constitution or laws of any state to the contrary notwithstanding."[25] And that the courts of the several states are as much bound to uphold the supremacy of the federal constitution as are the federal courts, or as much as they are bound to sustain the constitutions and laws of the other states, is now an acknowledged principle of jurisprudence.[26]

b. State Constitutions. The several states have the right to construe their own constitutions and laws as they see fit, so long as they do not infringe upon the federal constitution or laws of the United States or upon the rights of citizens of other states; and who are to be the arbitrators of a state constitution is an internal question that every state is of course at liberty to determine for itself.[27]

2. Practical Construction — a. In General. From force of circumstances and conditions necessarily arising in the administration of the affairs of the government, both state and national, it is evident that those who are charged with official duties, whether executive, legislative, or judicial, must necessarily construe the constitutions and laws in numerous instances.[28] Every department of the government, invested with certain constitutional powers, must, in the first instance, but not exclusively, be the judge of its powers or it could not act;[29] and this practical

It would no doubt be beyond the jurisdiction of a state court for any reason to declare a provision in the constitution of another state invalid; but with reference to statutes the rule is otherwise. If a statute of a state is in violation of its own constitution, and the rights of citizens of other states are affected thereby, the courts of the states whose citizens are so affected will declare such statute unconstitutional and void (Woodward v. Central Vermont R. Co., 180 Mass. 599, 62 N. E. 1051; Shoe, etc., Nat. Bank v. Wood, 142 Mass. 563, 8 N. E. 753; Simonds v. Simonds, 103 Mass. 572, 4 Am. Rep. 576; Stoddart v. Smith, 5 Binn. E. 1051, where the court, Holmes, C. J., in declaring a statute of Vermont to be in violation of its constitution, expressed regret that the declaration did not come from the supreme court of that state).

Practical construction.— Mr. Jefferson claimed the right to construe the federal constitution for himself, independent of the judiciary and in defiance of it. 4 Jefferson Corresp. 316, 317. President Jackson denied the power of congress, under the constitution, construction by persons or departments outside of the judiciary may or may not be final according to the circumstances and nature of each particular case.

b. Discretionary Powers. Whenever a constitutional provision or statute gives a discretionary power, to be exercised when and under such circumstances as those who are charged with exercising such power may deem expedient, the construction given to all such provisions or statutes by those charged with such duties is conclusive and not subject to review by the judicial power, even though erroneous.[30]

3. Political Construction. Where the questions involved are of a political character, and action depends upon the construction to be given a constitutional provision, or statute, courts will not only give great consideration to constructions of such provisions or statutes by the political departments of the government[31] in doubtful cases, but they are bound by such constructions where the power is of a discretionary character, and making those who are called upon to exercise such powers, in the first instance, judges of questions of fact and existing conditions.[32] to recharter the United States bank, after the original act of incorporation had been held constitutional by the supreme court of the United States. Veto Message (1832). And President Lincoln denied the constitutionality of the fugitive slave law, notwithstanding the decision of the same court in the "Dred Scott Case." Inaugural Address (1861).

Where governors have defied judiciary.— Two attempts by state executives to construe constitutional provisions to the exclusion of the judiciary are shown in American constitutional law. See Justices' Answer, 70 Me. 582, 608; Atty.-Gen. v. Barstow, 4 Wis. 567. Both of these cases were attempts by executives to perpetuate political power, against the expressed will of the people, by manipulation of election returns. In both cases the executives were vested with power, under constitutional provisions or statute, to canvass the returns and issue certificates of election; and in both cases it was held that the courts could look behind the certificates issued and pass judgment upon the result of the election contrary to the canvass made by the executive. In the Wisconsin case it was held that the court had constitutional power to oust the executive from office in proceedings by quo warranto. And in the Maine case the court, in impeaching the statement submitted by the legislative department in support of the contention of the executive, said: "To put such questions, in the absence of facts requiring their solution, would be an abuse of the power of the executive to call for the opinion of the court upon questions of law, on solemn occasions. . . . We are bound to take judicial notice of the doings of the executive and legislative departments of the government, and, when called upon by proper authorities, to pass upon their validity." Justices' Answer, 70 Me. 600, 609. And see Prince v. Skillin, 71 Me. 361, 36 Am. Rep. 325.

30. "Whenever a statute gives a discretionary power to any person, to be exercised by him upon his own opinion of certain facts, it is a sound rule of construction that the statute constitutes him the sole and exclusive judge of the existence of those facts." Per Story, J., in Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 19, 31, 6 L. ed. 537. See also People v. Parker, 3 Nebr. 409, 19 Am. Rep. 634.

No. 15,652, holding recognition by the president of the existence of certain state governments conclusive upon judiciary. See also Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch (U. S.) 137, 2 L. ed. 60, holding that the president was responsible to people only in a political capacity for acts of a discretionary character. See also Whiteman v. Wilmington, etc., R. Co., 2 Harr. (Del.) 514, 33 Am. Dec. 411. In Luther v. Borden, 7 How. (U. S.) 1, 47, 12 L. ed. 581, it is said: "According to the institutions of this country, the sovereignty in every State resides in the people of the State, and that they may alter and change their form of government at their own pleasure. But whether they have changed it or not by abolishing an old government, and establishing a new one in its place, is a question to be settled by the political power. And when that power has decided, the courts are bound to take notice of its decision, and to follow it."

Illustrations.— All constitutions contain numerous provisions granting discretionary powers, which are most frequently addressed to the executive and legislative departments. The power to call out the militia, to convene the legislature in extraordinary session, to recommend particular legislation, and the veto power are all familiar examples of the exercise of discretionary powers by the executive department. 4. Judicial Construction — a. In General. Since the construction of the constitutional provisions and statutes, by persons charged with duties in the exercise of discretionary power is final,[33] it follows that all constitutional questions cannot receive judicial interpretation. It is therefore only in cases where some right, public or private, is involved, which results in litigation, and is not included in that class of cases which are addressed to the discretion of the other departments, that questions requiring construction of constitutional provisions can be brought to the attention of the judiciary, and judicial construction of such provisions or statutes obtained in the course of judicial administration;[34] and when this is done the law, as declared in the judgment rendered, must be taken as the authoritative rule within the jurisdiction in which it is announced, until reversed,[35] overruled, or changed by constitutional amendment or legislation.

b. Duty of Courts to Take Jurisdiction. The right and duty of the judiciary to take jurisdiction and decide cases when constitutional questions are presented are both imperative and inseparable.[36]

S.) 19, 6 L. ed. 537 (holding the president to be the exclusive and final judge as to when to call out the militia). The power to reject recommendations from the executive, to pass laws over a veto by a two-thirds vote, and to enact special legislation when, in the judgment of the legislature, a general law is inapplicable, are also familiar examples of the exercise of discretionary powers by the legislative department.

C. General Rules For Construction — 1. As Paramount Laws. A written constitution is to be interpreted and effect given to it as a paramount law, to which all other laws must yield, and it is equally obligatory upon all departments of the government and individual citizens alike.[37] It is not always necessary, in order to render a statute invalid, that it should contravene some express provision of the constitution; if the act is inhibited by the general scope and purpose of the instrument it is as much invalid as though prohibited by the express letter of some of its provisions.[38] Therefore the implied powers and restraints to be found in a constitution are a very important part of it.[39]

2. Rules For Construction of Statutes Apply. The established rules of construction applicable to statutes also apply to the construction of constitutions.[40]

Questions of this character have frequently arisen in connection with legislation calculated to control municipal affairs by the establishment of local boards, authorized to control certain municipal affairs, or in statutes prescribing conditions and qualifications for the selection of local officers; and in many cases such legislation has been declared unconstitutional, as being repugnant to the principle of local self-government, although not contravening any express constitutional provision. These rules are equally appli-

3. Intent of Framers — a. Must Be Given Effect. The purpose of construction, as applied to a written constitution, is to give effect to the intent of the framers and of the people who have adopted it; and it is a rule of construction applicable to all constitutions that they are to be construed so as to promote the objects for which they were framed and adopted;[41] and to accomplish this result the extremes of both a liberal and a strict construction are to be avoided[42] and technical rules are to be excluded.[43]

b. To Be Ascertained From Whole Instrument. The whole instrument is to be examined with a view to ascertaining the meaning of each and every part.[44] The presumption and legal intendment is that each and every clause in a written constitution has been inserted for some useful purpose, and therefore the instrument must be construed as a whole in order that its intent and general purposes may be ascertained; and as a necessary result of this rule it follows that wherever it is possible to do so each provision must be construed so that it shall harmonize with all others, without distorting the meaning of any of such provisions, to the end that the intent of the framers may be ascertained and carried out and effect given to the instrument as a whole.[45] cable in the construction of a constitution — as a constitution is law, the people having been the legislators — as much as a statute is law, the senators and representatives being the legislators." People v. May, 3 Mich. 598, 605.

But the discretion of the courts is more restricted in the application of the rules of construction to a plan of government, embodied in a written constitution, than it is in the construction of statutes, which in many cases are hastily and unskilfully drawn and require construction in order to determine their meaning. But not so with constitutions, the most solemn and deliberate of human writings, always carefully drawn, and calculated for permanent endurance. Wolcott v. Wigton, 7 Ind. 44; Greencastle v. Black, 5 Ind. 557; Newell v. People, 7 N. Y. 9.

Liberal and strict construction.— It has been held that a liberal construction of statutes and a strict construction of constitutional provisions are regarded as sound judicial policy. Lafayette, etc., R. Co. v. Geiger, 34 Ind. 185; Wolcott v. Wigton, 7 Ind. 44. But strict construction, as here used, is not to be taken in the sense of being narrow so much so as to check in any way the exercise of the powers granted. On the contrary, a constitution should receive a fair and liberal construction, so that the true objects of the grant may be promoted, and the government left in the full and free exercise and enjoyment of all its rights, privileges, and immunities which are not excepted out of its ordinary and general powers, and are declared by the sovereign will to be inviolable and supreme in the people. State v. Ashley, 1 Ark. 513; North River Steamboat Co. v. Livingston, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 713; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 6 L. ed. 23. See also infra, IV, E, 1, c, (I). And the rule that statutes in derogation of the common law are to be strictly construed should be applied to constitutional provisions with caution, for the reason that constitutions may contemplate some radical change in existing conditions; and if they were always to be strictly construed, the intent of the framers and of the people in framing and adopting them as a paramount law might be defeated. c. To Prevail Over Literal Meaning. The intent of the framers of a constitution, when ascertained, will prevail over any part of the law. But the intent is to be ascertained, not alone by considering the words of any part of the instrument, but by ascertaining the general purpose of the whole, in view of the evil which existed calling forth the framing and adopting of such instrument, and the remedy sought to be applied; and when the intent of the whole is ascertained no part is to be construed so that the general purpose shall be thwarted, but the whole is to be made to conform to reason and good discretion.[46]

4. Construction to Be Prospective. As a constitution always operates prospectively, unless from the language used or the objects to be accomplished it is clearly shown that some provision was intended to operate retrospectively,[47] construction therefore must be in favor of prospective operation, unless an intent to the contrary is clearly established.[48]

5. Construction to Be Uniform. The construction given must be uniform, so that the operation of the instrument will be inflexible, operating at all times alike, and in the same manner with reference to the same subjects.[49]

6. Construction Confined to Language of Instrument — a. Where Meaning Is Clear — (I) Rule Stated. To ascertain the meaning of a constitution, the first resort in all cases is to the natural signification of the words used, in the order and grammatical arrangement in which the framers have placed them; and if thus regarded the words used convey a definite meaning which involves no absurdity and no contradiction between parts of the same writing, then the meaning apparent upon the face of the instrument is the one which alone we are at liberty to say was intended to be conveyed.[50] And this meaning, when so ascertained, must be taken as the authoritative rule.[51] There is no occasion for construction in such cases, and it is not allowable.[52]

49. No change in public opinion or questions of policy can ever be given any weight in construing the provisions of a constitution where the meaning is clear; for the adoption of a construction that might be deemed wise at one time and unwise at another would abrogate the judicial character of the court and make it the reflex of the popular opinion or passion of the day. Per Taney, C. J., in Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. (U. S.) 393, 15 L. ed. 691 [citing Crandall v. State, 10 Conn. 339, 340], holding that a slave gaining a residence in a free state was not entitled to liberty under the federal constitution, slaves not having been formerly recognized as citizens in free states under that instrument.

The remedy for unwise or unjust constitutional provisions is to be found in amendments and not in construction. Gage v. Currier, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 399; People v. Blodgett, 13 Mich. 127; Hyatt v. Taylor, 42 N. Y. 258; People v. Morrell, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 563; Slack v. Jacobs, 8 W. Va. 612. In Hyatt v. Taylor, 42 N. Y. 258, 260, the court said: "Statutes which are plain and explicit are not to be qualified by construction on the mere ground that the court deem the legislation unwise or indiscreet, nor because, if effect be given thereto, according to their plain expression, one class affected thereby may be subjected to inconvenience to secure protection and immunity to another. Still less can the court create a distinct exception which the language of the statute forbids, and which no necessity demands. . . . Such considerations, though they very properly aid in the interpretation of a statute expressed in terms of possible double meaning, or of ambiguous import, or uncertain in the designation of the subjects to which they apply, have no influence in determining the legal effect of a statute free from any such obscurity." In Gage v. Currier, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 399, 402, the court said: "The language of the statute is clear and unambiguous, and when such is the language of a statute, we are bound to read it according to its obvious and usual signification, whatever may be our opinion of the expediency of the law. If we should give it a strained construction, even from motives of public policy, and for the advancement of apparent justice in a particular case, we should be justly chargeable with usurpation of power, and a violation of the constitution we are sworn to support."

(II) Policy and Expediency. In all cases where the meaning upon the face of the instrument is clear and unambiguous, the question is not what was the intention of its framers, but what is the meaning of the language they have used. The duty of the court is to declare what the constitution has said, and argument ab inconvenienti cannot be considered.[53] Where therefore a constitutional provision is plain and unambiguous, the fact that its enforcement may work great inconvenience or hardship to particular persons or a particular class furnishes no ground for courts, by construction, to prevent its evident purpose;[54] but a construction which must necessarily work great public and private mischief must never be preferred to a construction which will work neither, or neither in so great a degree, unless the terms absolutely require such a preference; and of two constructions of a constitutional amendment involving questions of public policy, either of which is warranted by its terms, that is to be preferred which best harmonizes the amendment with the general tenor and spirit of the instrument amended.[55] In all such cases of construction it should be borne in mind

Construction not allowed where meaning is clear.— "It is not allowed to interpret what has no need of interpretation. When an instrument is worded in clear and precise terms — when its meaning is evident, and leads to no absurd conclusion — there can be no reason for refusing to admit the meaning which the words naturally import. To go elsewhere in search of conjectures in order to restrict or extend it is but to elude it. If this dangerous method be once admitted, there will be no instrument which it will not render useless." Newell v. People, 7 N. Y. 9, 33; Vattel, bk. 2, c. 17, § 263. "We are not at liberty to presume that the framers of the constitution, or the people who adopted it, did not understand the force of language." People v. Purdy, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 31, 36. And see Hyatt v. Taylor, 42 N. Y. 258; Newell v. People, 7 N. Y. 9; Rasmussen v. Baker, 7 Wyo. 117, 50 Pac. 819, 38 L. R. A. 773. "As men, whose intentions require no concealment, generally employ the words which most directly and aptly express the ideas they intend to convey, the enlightened patriots who framed our constitution, and the people who adopted it, must be understood to have employed words in their natural sense, and to have intended what they have said." Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 188, 6 L. ed. 23. To the same effect is the language of the court in Henshaw v. Foster, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 312, 316. See also People v. Cowles, 13 N. If any of the provisions are unjust, so that their enforcement will work a hardship to any class of persons, the remedy must come from the people who have adopted them, in the form of amendments or abolition. Construction can furnish no remedy under our system of government. Scott v. Sanford, 19 How. (U. S.) 393, 15 L. ed. 691; Cooley Const. Lim. (6th ed.) 87.

Judge-made law.— The power of construction is so great that if it were not restrained by settled rules, the effect of a plainly worded statute would be practically uncertain. It was Chief Justice Pemberton, in the time of Charles II, who boasted that he had entirely outdone parliament in making law. See Spencer v. State, 5 Ind. 41.

55. On proceedings by habeas corpus to secure his release, by a prisoner who had been tried, convicted, and sentenced for commission of crime, by a judge who was disqualified for the office under the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the federal constitution, for having been engaged in insurrection, it was held, where like proceedings by other convicts were pending or contemplated, that the trial court held the office de facto if not de jure, and that habeas corpus did not lie. Griffin's Case, Chase (U. S.) 364, 8 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 358, 3 Am. L. Rev. 784, 2 Am. L. T. Rep. (U. S. Cts.) 93, 2 Balt. L. Trans. 433, 25 Tex. Suppl. 623, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 5,815.

that broad questions of expediency and sound public policy are not to be overlooked.[56]

b. Natural and Technical Meaning of Words. The words and terms of a constitution like those of a statute are to be interpreted and understood in their most natural and obvious meaning,[57] unless the subject indicates or the text suggests that they have been used in a technical sense.[58] The presumption is in favor of the natural and popular meaning in which the words are usually understood by the people who have adopted them;[59] and where the same words are used in different parts of a constitution or statute they are presumed to have a uniform meaning throughout the instrument, but this does not necessarily follow.[60]

as an aid in the construction of the enactment when it tends to throw light on the meaning.[63]

7. Construction Aided by Matters Extrinsic of Instrument — a. In General. In the United States,[64] where the validity of a statute is drawn in question, the general rule is that evidence outside of the act itself is not admissible to impeach it.[65] It is only where the meaning of some provision of a constitution is doubtful and not to be explained by comparison with other parts of the instrument that courts are at liberty to look beyond the instrument itself for aid in determining its meaning;[66] and when in such cases it becomes necessary to resort to extrinsic sources to aid in construction, courts will resort to the history of the times and the condition of affairs which led to the enactment of the provision in question, with a view to ascertaining its objects and purposes,[67] and then such provision should be construed in a way, so far as is reasonably possible, to further the

In other words, the courts will not review or reverse findings of fact by the legislative department necessarily implied in the enactments questioned, and a plea that a statute is invalid, on the ground that the legislature has not complied with constitutional provisions prescribed as conditions precedent to its validity, is demurrable where the conditions specified depend upon questions of fact. Questions of this character have most frequently arisen in connection with legislation organizing new counties or municipal districts without sufficient area, or the necessary population for such purposes, prescribed in constitutional provisions. Such questions necessarily require findings of fact by the legislative department in passing the acts of organization and will not be reviewed by the courts even if erroneous. b. Contemporaneous and Practical Construction — (1) In General. Contemporaneous and practical construction of constitutional provisions by the executive and legislative departments of the government will be considered by the courts in passing upon constitutional questions; and while they are not bound by such constructions, except as to questions of a discretionary character,[73] they often yield to them as matters of policy;[74] and in doubtful cases will follow such construction as of course,[75] unless they are clearly erroneous.[76] It is evident that to reverse a construction put upon a constitutional provision by a department charged with its execution, after it has received such practical construction for any length of time, would be to occasion great injury to those who would be affected by such a change; and it is to avoid such injustice that courts have often yielded to policy and expediency in adopting practical constructions of constitutional provisions and statutes by the other departments of the government, even though erroneous; and in view of these considerations, in all cases where there is doubt as to the meaning of such provision or statute, courts will adopt and follow contemporaneous and practical construction by the other departments.[77]

(II) Legislative Construction—(A) Generally. Practical construction of constitutional provisions by the legislative department, in the enactment of laws, necessarily has great weight with the judiciary, and is sometimes followed by the latter when clearly erroneous.[78] But this is a matter of policy only, for it is emphatically the province of the judiciary to construe the constitution;[79] and where the judicial and the legislative construction of a constitutional provision conflict the judicial construction prevails.[80] If the meaning of such provision is clear and unambiguous, legislative construction thereof is entitled to no weight;[81] but if the meaning is doubtful, a practical construction thereof by the legislature will be followed by the courts if it can be done without doing violence to the fair meaning of the words used in order to sustain the constitutionality of a statute.[82]

(B) Long Acquiescence. Legislative construction of constitutional provisions, adopted and acted on with the acquiescence of the people for many years is entitled to great weight with the courts,[83] and will not be disturbed except for mani-

Baltimore v. State, 15 Md. 376, 74 Am. Dec. 572. Policy and expediency will be kept in view where there has been long acquiescence in legislative construction of constitutional provisions or statutes that is clearly erroneous, for in all such cases property rights will necessarily have been acquired under a construction of long standing; and in such cases courts will yield to an erroneous construction (Rogers v. Goodwin, 2 Mass. 475) or decline to reverse it to the extent of declaring all legislative action in pursuance of it an absolute nullity where great interests are involved, and the public will be made to suffer by the adoption of a different construction, and the effect would necessarily be retroactive (Bingham v. Miller, 17 Ohio 445, 49 Am. Unquestioned existence for years of law of Mexican confederation, under which rights were acquired, is strong proof that such law not be allowed to control the judiciary in its construction of constitutional provisions.[86] Long, continuous, and unquestioned exercise of legislative power in the enactment of laws is evidence that such laws are constitutional, but it is not conclusive;[87] nor can practical construction of a plain constitutional provision be allowed to distort or in any way change its natural meaning;[88] and courts will declare void an act passed, even in the exercise of discretionary power, if it plainly violates the fundamental law of the state.[89]

c. Other or Previous Constitutions — (I) In General. A written constitution may be abrogated or wholly abolished, and a new one established in its place; but this could scarcely, if ever, be done without retaining in the new many of the terms and provisions of the old, and as to all such as are retained the purpose of retention becomes of material importance; and it is therefore an established rule of construction that where a constitutional provision has received a settled judicial construction, and is afterward incorporated into a new or revised constitution, it will be presumed to have been retained with a knowledge of that construction, and courts will feel bound to adhere to it.[90]

(II) Borrowed Provisions. It is an established rule of construction that whenever, in framing a constitution, provisions from the constitutions of other states are adopted, the judicial constructions of all such provisions from the other states are presumed to have been also adopted.[91]

d. Proceedings of Constitutional Conventions. When from any cause the meaning of a constitutional provision is doubtful, courts will examine the proceedings of the constitutional convention that framed the constitution, with a view to ascertaining the meaning,[92] in like manner as they will examine the proceedings of a legislature, in order to determine the meaning of a doubtful provision of a statute. In examining the proceedings of a convention it is the intent of the people, through their representatives, that is sought for; but with the legislature it is the intent of the representatives themselves that is sought for; and generally the proceedings of a legislature are regarded as more conclusive and more satisfactory as a source of information than those of a convention.[93] But in either case, where the proceedings clearly point out the objects and purposes of the doubtful provision, the aid to be obtained is valuable as a means of interpretation. Where the proceedings of a convention are to be examined, the history and condition of the times, the evils that existed, requiring remedies, the discussions before the people in the election of delegates, and issues under consideration may be consulted with profit. All such details tend to show the intent, as expressed in the work of the convention.[94]

doubtful meaning it is found to be similar to like provisions to be found in the constitutions of two other states, and the courts of both the parent states hold opposite views thereon, that construction will be preferred which is believed to have been in contemplation of the framers of the constitution when such provision was adopted. with, and a part of, the common law itself, and subject to judicial interpretation from their inception, it necessarily follows that the definitions of terms used in constitutions and statutes are to a great extent to be found in the common law,[96] and in the common usage and understanding of those terms according to the institutions of the country in which they originated and were brought into use in the administration of government.[97] The common law is not a controlling influence in the construction of constitutional provisions to the same extent that it is in the construction of statutes,[98] yet it has a great influence in dealing with such questions. It has been held that a constitutional amendment in derogation of the common law should be strictly construed.[99] But so close an application is going to extremes and may tend directly to defeat the purposes for which an amendment has been enacted. The doctrine has not been applied in later decisions in the same state.[1]

8. Implied Powers and Restraints. It would not be practicable, if possible, in a written constitution, to specify in detail all of its objects and purposes or the means by which they are to be carried into effect. Such prolixity in a code designed as a frame of government has never been considered necessary or desirable;[2] therefore constitutional powers are often granted or restrained in general terms, from which implied powers and restraints necessarily arise. The implied powers and restrictions to be found in constitutional provisions are therefore a very important element to be considered. It is an established rule of construction that where a constitution confers a power or enjoins a duty it also confers, by implication, all powers that are necessary for the exercise of the one or for the performance of the other.[3] And it is also an established rule of construction that where the means by which a power granted shall be exercised are specified no other or different means for the exercise of such power can be implied, even though considered more convenient or effective than the means given in the constitution.[4]

English decisions.— But it is also a rule of construction, applicable to constitutions and statutes, that recourse to the English decisions will not be had, in order to ascertain the meaning of the terms used, if by a series of decisions of the supreme court having jurisdiction or legislative construction the words in question have received a meaning different from that of the English law. The Huntress, 2 Ware (U. S.) 89, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,914, 24 Am. Jur. 486, 4 Hunt. Mer. Mag. 83, 4 West. L. J. 38. See also Flavell's Case, 8 Watts & S. (Pa.) 197.

Implied powers of the United States.— "Whenever the terms in which a power is granted to Congress, or the nature of the power, required that it should be exercised exclusively by Congress, the subject is as completely taken from the state legislatures as if they had been expressly forbidden to act on it." Per Marshall, C. J., in Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 122, 193, 4 L. ed. 529. It is not necessary, for the exercise of a power by the federal government, that it should be expressly granted in the federal constitution, or that it should be "clearly and directly traceable to some one of the specified powers" granted. Any number of the powers granted, or all of them, may be combined and considered together, and any power necessary to carry out the general purposes of any or all of the powers specified will be considered granted by implication, and as an incidental means of executing the powers specifically granted. Knox v. Lee, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 457, 20 L. ed. 287.

In construing either the federal or the state constitutions, it is regarded as a safe rule "to look to the nature and objects of the particular powers, duties, and rights with all the lights and aids of contemporary history, and give to the words of each just such operation and force, consistent with their legitimate meaning, as may fairly secure and attain the ends proposed." State v. Glenn, 18 Nev. 34, 40, 1 Pac. 186: Prigg v. Pennsylvania, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 539, 10 L. ed. 1060; Story Const. § 405*a*.

4. "That other powers than those expressly granted, may be, and often are, conferred by implication, . . . is too well settled to be doubted. Under every constitution, the doctrine of implication must be resorted to, in order to carry out the general grants of power. A constitution cannot, from its very nature, enter into a minute specification of all of the minor powers, naturally and obviously included in and flowing from the great and important ones which are expressly granted. It is therefore established as a general rule, that when a constitution gives a general power, or enjoins a duty, it also gives, by implication, every particular power necessary for the exercise of the one, or the performance of the other. The implication under this rule, however, must be a necessary, not a conjectural or argumentative one. And it is further modified by another rule, that where the means for the exercise of a granted power are given, no other or different means can be implied, as being more effectual or convenient." Field v. People, 3 Ill. 79, 83.

Constitutional inhibitions arising by implication are equally as effective as those arising by expression (Page v. Allen, 58 Pa. St. 338, 98 Am. Dec. 272), "as exceptions strengthen the force of a general law, so enumeration weakens as to things not enumerated." Where a grant of legislative power, made in general, indefinite terms, is followed by an enumeration clearly and explicitly made, such enumeration must be construed as limiting and explaining the general terms. In re Opinion of Court, 4 N. H. 565.

"Where the power is granted in general terms, the power is to be construed as co-

9. Irreconcilable and Ineffective Provisions — a. In General. Where full effect cannot be given to a constitutional provision, it will be enforced as far as possible;[5] and if two provisions are irreconcilably repugnant, the last in order of time and local position will be preferred.[6] And a particular intent, incompatible with a general intent, will be treated as an exception.[7]

b. Constitutional Amendments. The terms of a constitutional amendment are not to be taken as controlling in the construction of a constitution as it previously stood.[8]

c. Bill of Rights. The bills of rights inserted in the American constitutions contain a declaration of general principles as a basis of government, copied from Magna Charta and the English Bill of Rights of 1689. These bills are regarded as parts of the constitutions in which they are recited, and are to be construed with other constitutional provisions.[9] But in view of their origin and long use they cannot be regarded as introducing new matters or prescribing new conditions. Their purpose is to preserve ancient principles rather than to establish modern principles.[10] But to what extent they are to control or to be controlled in the construction of constitutional provisions are questions on which the authorities are not harmonious.[11]

D. Operation and Effect — 1. Time of Taking Effect — a. In General. The time when a constitution takes effect is of importance, and often becomes material in the course of litigation. The manifest intent of the framers of the instrument, to be gathered from the instrument itself, controls in the determination of such question.[12] extensive with the terms, unless some clear restriction upon it is deducible — expressly or by implication — from the context." Story Const. § 424.

See also Jackson v. State, 87 Md. 191, 38 Atl. 504, holding that where the constitution speaks in plain language with reference to a particular matter, courts cannot place a different meaning on the words employed, because the literal interpretation is inconsistent with other parts of the constitution in relation to other subjects.

11. In some cases it has been held that the bill of rights is the governing and controlling part of a constitution, and that all other provisions are to be expanded, and their operation restricted or extended with reference to it. So held in Matter of Dorsey, 7 Port. (Ala.) 293, but the court nevertheless refused to admit an attorney to practice where the constitution, although conflicting with the bill of rights, inhibited the holding of civil office by persons who had been engaged in dueling. But in other cases bills of rights have been treated as of a directory rather than of a mandatory character, and it has been held that the constitution should prevail where its provisions conflict with the bill of rights. b. Upon Ratification — (I) In General. Provisions are always made designating the time when constitutional amendments or new constitutions shall take effect, the usual language of such being that the amendment shall become a part of the constitution if adopted by a majority of the electors, or that the new constitution shall become effective if adopted by a majority of the electors, and if nothing further is added the instrument will take effect immediately upon ratification, that is, on the day the vote is cast.[13]

(II) Constitution of State Admitted to the Union. When a state is admitted to the Union, upon the approval of congress, its constitution takes effect from the date of ratification by its people and not from the date of its admission to the Union.[14]

c. Upon Canvass of Returns or Executive Proclamation. If, however, the language of the instrument is that it shall take effect upon the canvass of the election returns, if adopted by a majority of the electors, or upon proclamation of the result by the executive, it will not take effect until such canvass is completed,[15]

f. Prohibition of Local and Special Laws — (I) In General. Constitutional provisions prohibiting the enactment of local or special laws in particular cases are prospective in their operation and do not affect past legislation.[45] The constitutionality of acts granting local and special privileges in numerous instances, passed prior to the adoption of prohibitive constitutional provisions, have been called in question; but in most cases have been held valid,[46] since such provisions only operate prospectively. But few decisions to the contrary for stated reasons have been rendered.[47] corporations. Generally constitutional changes do not affect the charters of private corporations previously granted,[49] or subsequently amended by legislation;[50] but it has been held that the adoption of constitutional provisions regulating condemnation proceedings repealed all forms of such proceedings prescribed by charters of private corporations previously granted.[51]

4. Self-Executing Provisions — a. In General. While no part of a constitution is to be regarded as immaterial or advisory, there are many provisions which do not directly confer power so that rights under them can be enforced, but merely confer power to be exercised when the legislature, in its discretion, shall deem it wise. A constitutional provision authorizing suits to "be brought against the state, in such courts as may be by law provided,"[52] may confer a right to prosecute a claim against the state; but it is evident that no such claim could be prosecuted until the legislature shall see fit to establish courts for that purpose, or authorize those established to entertain jurisdiction; and until this is done any rights conferred under such a provision must lie dormant,[53] because the means by which they may be enforced are not supplied. Examples of this kind are numerous. Provisions declaring that all property shall be taxed in proportion to its value, "to be ascertained as provided by law,"[54] making it the duty of the legislature to enact laws submitting questions of local option to a vote of the electors[55] or declaring that the state shall control the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, under laws to be prescribed by the legislature,[56] are all of this character, and cannot be enforced until aided by supplemental legislation. They are not therefore self-executing provisions. But provisions declaring that taxes within a limited jurisdiction shall be uniform, and all property not exempt from taxation by the constitution shall be assessed at its fair value,[57] making officers of banks who receive deposits after a knowledge that such banks are insolvent individually liable,[58] or declaring that railroad companies shall carry freight for all parties at the same rate and fixing penalties for refusing,[59] confer rights and fix liabilities that can be enforced immediately, and without the aid of supplemental legislation. They are therefore self-executing. A self-executing provision then is one which supplies the rule or means by which the right given may be enforced or protected or by which a duty enjoined may be performed.[60]

b. Determination of Character of Such Provisions. It is not always easy to determine what are or what are not self-executing provisions, nor are the authorities upon this subject reconcilable. Where the provision supplies the rule for enforcement and fixes a penalty for violations there can be no doubt as to its character. It is not only self-executing but prohibitive, and renders void all statutes in conflict therewith.[61] But a provision may be both prohibitive[62] and mandatory[63] and not self-executing. The question in such cases is always one of intention, and to determine the intent the general rule is that courts will consider the language used, the objects to be accomplished by the provision, and the surrounding circumstances,[64] and to determine these questions from which the

Subsequently the same question came before the court of errors of Mississippi, where the ruling in Groves v. Slaughter, 15 Pet. (U. intention is to be gathered the court will resort to extrinsic matters when this is necessary.[65]

c. Prohibitions and Restrictions — (I) In General. Although the absence of a penalty for violations of a constitutional provision is a circumstance which is given much weight in some cases in determining its force, it is by no means a conclusive test; and the rule favored by the weight of authority is that prohibitive and restrictive provisions are self-executing and may be enforced by the courts independent of any legislative action.[66] While legislation may be desirable and beneficial it is void to the extent to which it is adverse to such provisions.[67] appears that they were intended to remain inoperative in the absence of such legislation. The intent in such cases is to be found in the express language of the provisions or by necessary implication.[73]

(III) Limitation and Equalization of Taxation. Provisions that property shall be assessed for taxes under general laws and by uniform rules according to its value,[74] and restricting the power of municipal corporations to incur indebtedness to such amounts as they shall make provisions for payment of within a prescribed time, and interest annually, by direct taxation at the time of incurring such indebtedness,[75] are self-executing. But it has been held that such a limitation on the power of such a corporation to incur indebtedness is inoperative in the absence of supplemental legislation.[76] And in all of the cases on this subject, if it appears from the provision that anything remains to be done to complete the objects contemplated, it is to that extent inoperative, and will remain so until all such requirements are complied with.[77] Provisions authorizing municipal authorities to levy taxes,[78] providing for an increase in the rate in taxation on submission to a vote of the taxpayers[79] or for assessments by a jury or by commissioners,[80] requiring the legislature to provide a uniform system of taxation,[81] requiring the exemption of certain property from taxation by general laws,[82] and provisions for the collection of taxes without suit,[83] and declaring that all taxes shall be uniform, to be collected under general laws,[84] are not self-executing and require supplemental legislation to render them effective.

(iv) Civil Service and Appointments to Office. A constitutional provision declaring that appointments and promotions in the civil service shall be according to merit and fitness, to be ascertained as far as possible by examinations, which, so far as possible, shall be competitive, has been held to be self-executing, and that courts, in a proper case, would pronounce appointments made in violation thereof illegal, in the absence of supplemental legislation.[85]

(v) Removal From Office. Constitutional provisions empowering courts to remove certain county officers from office, for causes specified, and others defined by law, upon being found guilty by juries,[86] are self-executing; and so also are provisions declaring offices vacant upon indictment and conviction of the incumbents for official misconduct or neglect[87] of duty.

(vi) Criminal Proceedings. Provisions relating to and governing criminal prosecutions by indictment and information for offenses committed before the adoption of a provision relating to criminal procedure are governed by it after it takes effect.[88]

(vii) Provisions Conferring Judicial Power. Constitutional provisions conferring judicial powers are self-executing and vest the courts with original jurisdiction[89] unless an intention to the contrary appears.

d. Provisions Conferring Privileges and Imposing Liabilities — (i) In General. Constitutional provisions conferring privileges and imposing liabilities sent of the people or their representatives in the legislature does not restrict the power of the legislature to repeal acts imposing taxation or inhibit the collection of taxes that have been assessed. Augusta v. North, 57 Me. 392, 2 Am. Rep. 55.

86. No legislation is necessary in order to authorize a district judge to remove a county attorney or other county official from office for official misconduct, under a constitutional provision authorizing such removals for offenses prescribed, and others defined by law. Trigg v. State, 49 Tex. 645.

87. A provision authorizing the removal of county judges, justices of the peace, sheriffs, and other county officers, upon indictment or presentment for official misconduct or neglect, in such manner as may be prescribed by law, offices to become vacant upon conviction, is self-executing. Lowe v. Com., 3 Metc. (Ky.) 237.

Where court is disqualified.— A provision that where a court is for any reason disqualified to sit upon a case the parties interested may by consent appoint a proper person to try such case is self-executing. Parker County v. Jackson, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 36, 23 S. W. 924.

88. A provision that no person shall be prosecuted criminally for felony or misdemeanor otherwise than by indictment or information, which shall be concurrent remedies, is self-executing. Provision vesting power in courts to change venue, to be exercised in the manner to be provided by law.

are held to be self-executing in cases where the language used is positive and independent of legislative action. But such provisions will be held to be inoperative in cases where the object sought to be accomplished by them is made to depend in whole or in part upon subsequent legislation.[90]

(II) Liability of Stock-Holders For Demands Against Corporations. By the weight of authority constitutional provisions designed to secure dues and demands against corporations by imposing liability therefor upon the stockholders thereof to an amount in addition to the stock held by each, by declaring that such demands shall be so secured, and by such other means as shall be provided by law, are not self-executing.[91]

(III) Authority to Frame Municipal Charters. The authorities do not agree as to whether constitutional provisions authorizing cities of a limited number of inhabitants to frame charters for themselves are self-executing.[92]

Wattson v. Chester, etc., R. Co., 83 Pa. St. 254. Provisions for removal of pending cases from territorial to state courts, upon the organization of territories into states, the procedure for removal to be under the direction of the legislature. McCollom v. Pipe, 7 Kan. 189. Where a constitutional amendment gave district courts jurisdiction to try cases of contested elections, and a statute merely provided that any qualified voter in such districts might contest elections therein, in courts of competent jurisdiction, in such manner as has or may be prescribed, it was held that such elections could not be contested without further legislation. Odell v. Wharton, 87 Tex. 173, 27 S. W. 123.

Federal constitution.— That clause in the federal constitution giving the supreme court of the United States original jurisdiction in a class of cases specified, and appellate in all others, is self-executing; and an act of congress purporting to give that court original jurisdiction in cases other than those so specified is invalid. Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch (U. S.) 137, 173, 177, 2 L. ed. 60. But another clause in the same section which vests the judicial power in the supreme court and in such inferior courts as congress shall from time to time ordain and establish is not self-executing, since congress is given discretionary power to apportion the jurisdiction conferred. Roback v. Taylor, 2 Bond (U. S.) 36, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,877, 4 Int. Rev. Rec. 170, 14 Pittsb. Leg. J. (Pa.) 137. The provision therefore is in part self-executing and in part it is not; and the same is true of the fifteenth amendment, which provides that "the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude," and declares that "Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation." To the extent to which this provision defines the general rights of citizens to vote, and inhibits discriminations, it is mandatory, prohibitive, and self-executing; but the conferring upon congress power to enforce by appropriate legislation is an indication that it is incomplete and that something more may be required to make it effective. U. S. v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214, 23 L. ed. 563.

Election of officers.— Provision that members or stock-holders of corporations may cast the whole number of votes for one candidate for office or distribute them as preferred is self-executing. Pierce v. Com., 104 Pa. St. 150.

Provision that railroad companies shall have the right to connect their lines does not authorize proceedings to connect them without supplemental legislation; but where such companies are not hostile to each other courts will enforce such a provision in the absence of such legislation. Denver, etc., R. Co. v. Atchison, etc., R. Co., 15 Fed. 650 [reversed in 110 U. S. 667, 4 S. Ct. 185, 28 L. ed. 291]. Compare Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Texas, etc., R. Co., 4 Woods (U. A. 281, a provision imposing such liability, except as to stock-holders of manufacturing corporations, and making no reference to subsequent legislation, was held self-executing.

(iv) Appropriations of Public Funds. Constitutional provisions authorizing appropriations of the public funds for public or private purposes or for charities are held to be self-executing.[93]

(v) Homestead Exemptions. In some cases constitutional provisions exempting homesteads from forced sales for debts and other liabilities are held to be self-executing, while in others the contrary has been held, according to the apparent intent of the instrument.[94]

(vi) Poor Debtor Exemptions. A constitutional provision requiring the protection of poor debtors by the enactment of wholesome laws has been held to be self-executing,[95] but the contrary has been held, except where fraud is proved.[96]

(vii) Mechanics' Liens and Other Individual Rights. Constitutional provisions declaring in favor of mechanics' liens and requiring the speedy enactment of legislation to enforce such liens are held ineffective;[97] and the same is generally true of all provisions which are merely declaratory of rights and do not supply the means by which they may be enforced.[98]

ters was held to be self-executing and operative without legislation. People v. Hoge, 55 Cal. 612. Contra, Reeves v. Anderson, 13 Wash. 17, 42 Pac. 625, holding that a provision authorizing cities of twenty thousand inhabitants to frame charters is not self-executing to the extent of invalidating legislation prescribing the manner of exercising the power.

Provision that in incorporated towns of five thousand inhabitants justices of the peace shall receive such salaries as may be provided by law, but no fees, was held to be self-executing, the population to be ascertained by the courts, according to the last federal census. Anderson v. Whatcom County, 15 Wash. 47, 45 Pac. 665, 33 L. R. A. 137.

93. Provision prescribing the manner of drawing money from the state treasury justifies the rejection of claims authorized by prior laws, but not covered by such provision. State v. Holladay, 64 Mo. 526. See also State v. Babcock, 19 Nebr. 230, 27 N. W. 98 (holding a provision, requiring the indorsement of state officers on state bonds donated for purposes of internal improvement that same were "issued pursuant to law," to be self-executing); State v. Weston, 4 Nebr. 216 (holding a provision requiring the state auditor to draw warrants for the payment of the salaries of constitutional officers to be self-executing).

Charity.— Provision authorizing state aid to private institutions for the maintenance of aged indigent persons, to be paid pro rata to such towns, cities, and counties as establish such institutions, was held to be self-executing. San Francisco v. Dunn, 69 Cal. 73, 10 Pac. 191.

94. If the provision specifies the number of acres or limits the value of the premises to be exempt it is self-executing and no legislation to make it effective will be required. Miller v. Marx, 55 Ala. 332. See also Beecher v. Baldy, 7 Mich. 488; Martin v. Hughes, 67 N. C. 293; Wilson v. Cochran, 31 Tex. 677, 98 Am. Dec. 553. See also Adrian v. Shaw, 82 N. C. 474, holding that a provision exempting a homestead of limited value, to be selected by the owner, or in lieu thereof city or village lots with buildings thereon was self-executing. But if it merely provides that the legislature shall protect by law from forced sale a certain portion of the homestead and other property of the heads of families, it is not self-executing, and will remain inoperative until made effective by supplemental legislation. Holt v. Williams, 13 W. Va. 704; Speidel v. Schlosser, 13 W. Va. 686. Provision that "the right of the debtor to enjoy the comforts and necessaries of life shall be recognized by wholesome laws, exempting from forced sale to the heads of families a homestead, the value of which shall be limited and defined by law, and a reasonable amount of personal property; the kind and value to be fixed by law" does not in the absence of supplemental legislation confer any rights capable of being enforced. Roesler v. Taylor, 3 N. D. 546, 58 N. W. 342. See also Noble v. Hook, 24 Cal. 638; Tuttle v. Strout, 7 Minn. 465, 82 Am. Dec. 108.

95. Green v. Aker, 11 Ind. 223.

96. A provision exempting debtors from imprisonment for debt except for fraud is not self-executing. Spice v. Steinruck, 14 Ohio St. 213.

97. Provision that mechanics shall have a lien upon property for the benefit of which they have furnished labor or materials, to be enforced by efficient laws to be speedily enacted, confers no enforceable rights in the absence of supplemental legislation. Spinney v. Griffith, 98 Cal. 149, 32 Pac. 974.

98. Appeal.— Provision granting a right of appeal, without providing the manner by which it may be perfected, requires supplemental legislation to make such a right available. Ohio, etc., R. Co. v. Lawrence County, 27 Ill. 50.

Injuries suffered.— Provision that every stated,[99] if constitutional provisions merely indicate a line of policy or principles, without supplying the means by which such policy or principles are to be carried into effect, they are not self-executing,[1] and will remain inoperative until rendered effective by supplemental legislation.[2] Provisions of this character are numerous in all constitutions and treat of a variety of subjects.[3]

(II) Provisions Regulating Municipal Government. Constitutional provisions requiring the establishment of a system of municipal government, without prescribing the territorial limits of the towns, counties, or districts, or indicating the officers or means by which they are to be governed, are not self-executing; and the range, area, population, and machinery of government and all other details will depend upon legislative action.[4] The same is true of provisions regulating sales of land under public authority.[5] But a provision authorizing cities having a population prescribed to frame charters for their own government is self-executing.[6]

(III) Provisions Regulating Salaries. Constitutional provisions requiring the legislature to fix by law the compensation of county officers and clerks are not self-executing[7] and repeal no existing laws upon the subject until legislative action is taken.[8]

(IV) Provisions Regulating Elections. Constitutional provisions fixing municipal elections upon a particular date,[9] or declaring that "the judges of the person injured shall have adequate remedy by due process of law gives no additional remedies for injuries suffered until provided for by the legislature. State v. Dubuclet, 28 La. Ann. 698. But a provision that "knowledge by any employe injured of the defective or unsafe character or condition of any machinery, ways, or appliances shall be no defense to an action for injury caused thereby" is self-executing. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Ihlenberg, 75 Fed. 873, 875, 21 C. C. A. 546, 34 L. R. A. 393.

1. "In civil governments, rights are enforced by rules and methods having the authority of law, and they can be legally enforced in no other way. The high behests of the organic law are not always self-enforcing; the manner in which its commands are to be obeyed is often left to be provided by the legislative branch of the government. To this branch of the State government the organic law delegates the power to prescribe rules and principles by which its provisions are to be made practically useful, and especially so when the organic law itself is silent on the subject. Without such prescribed rules established by law, courts have no guide by which to proceed in their investigation of litigated questions." State v. Dubuclet, 28 La. Ann. 698, 704.

5. Mandatory and Directory Provisions — a. In General. What constitutional provisions are to be regarded as directory merely and not mandatory is a subject on which the authorities do not agree. Some cases hold that no constitutional provisions are to be regarded as directory merely, to be obeyed or not according to the discretion of the departments of the government to which they are addressed.[17] But the cases in which constitutional provisions relating to the mode of procedure of the legislature in the enactment of laws have been held to be directory,[18] are numerous, although such provisions have been held to be mandatory.[19] By the weight of authority the provision that no bill shall become a law which embraces more than one subject, and requiring that subject to be expressed in the title, is mandatory.[20] But it is a settled rule of construction, as shown by an examination of the decisions, that all constitutional provisions are to be taken as mandatory unless it expressly appears, or is necessarily implied from the instrument, that some provision is intended as directory merely.[21]

b. What Provisions Are Directory. In most cases the constitutional provisions that have been held to be directory merely, and not mandatory, are provisions addressed to the legislative department with reference to the course of procedure in the enactment of laws[22] or to the structure of the acts to be passed,[23] lan v. Smye, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 156, 50 S. W. 1068) interests may require legislative action, there is no remedy if such action is not taken (Gillinwater v. Mississippi, etc., R. Co., 13 Ill. 1; In re State Census, 6 S. D. 540, 62 N. W. 129).

c. What Provisions Are Mandatory. The great majority of all constitutional provisions are mandatory,[28] and it is only such provisions as, from the language used, in connection with the objects in view, may be said to be addressed to the discretion of some person or department, that courts have held to be directory; and these provisions in most cases have been those addressed to the legislative department with reference to the mode of procedure in the enactment of laws as above stated.[29] But provisions of this kind will be treated as mandatory if the language used justifies it, even though the proceedings to which they refer are but formal.[30] Whatever is prohibited or positively enjoined must be obeyed; therefore all prohibitions and restrictions are necessarily mandatory.[31] So also all provisions that designate in express terms the time or manner of doing particular acts and are silent as to performance in any other manner are mandatory and must be followed.[32]

d. Legislature Must Obey Constitutional Mandate. The legislature is in duty bound to perform all duties imposed upon it by the constitution, but if it fails to e. Mandatory Statutes. Statutes are frequently treated as directory merely; but not so with statutes that are enacted in obedience to the mandates of a constitution. Statutes so enacted are mandatory and not directory.[34]

6. Provisions Relating to Public Office — a. In General. Public offices are created, and their tenure, compensation, manner of choosing and removing the incumbents, and all regulations, including power to abolish, are prescribed either by constitutional provisions or by statutes enacted in pursuance of such provisions.[35] An office created by a constitution cannot be enlarged or restricted in scope by statute or filled in any other manner than that prescribed by the constitution itself.[36] Upon the adoption of a constitution no official functions can be exercised otherwise than is provided by such constitution; all existing officers cease to be such when it goes into operation,[37] and all vacancies occurring thereafter must be filled according to the manner prescribed in such constitution.[38]

"Ought" is mandatory in a constitutional provision relating to uniform taxation. Life Assoc. of America v. St. Louis County Bd. Assessors, 49 Mo. 512. All acts designed for the security of the citizens, to insure equality of taxation, "to enable every one to know, with reasonable certainty, for what polls and for what real and personal estate he is taxed, and for what all those who are liable with him are taxed" are mandatory. Where a constitution made no limitation as to duration of the term of office of notaries public, and a subsequent constitution fixed the term of all officers not otherwise

b. Changes in Mode of Election or Appointment. Since a constitution does not operate retrospectively, any changes in the manner of electing or appointing to office, by constitutional amendment, or by the adoption of a new constitution, will not affect the tenure of office of present incumbents,[40] unless an intention that such changes should have such an effect is expressed or necessarily implied.

c. d. Abolition of Office. Constitutional provisions abolishing state offices do not inhibit the establishment of other offices in their stead, unless an intention that such provisions shall have that effect is expressed or necessarily implied;[45] nor is a constitutional prohibition against legislative interference with municipal improvements, through the appointment of special commissions to perform municipal functions, retrospective, nor do they repeal prior commissions or prevent future action by them.[46]

7. Validating and Curative Provisions[47] — a. In General. It is a rule of general application that where a defect in a proceeding consists of an omission, the necessity for the performance of which the legislature might have dispensed with by prior statute, a subsequent statute dispensing with such performance retrospectively is valid. So also if the defect consists in some act which the legislature might have rendered directory merely or immaterial, by prior statute, a subsequent statute, designed to have the same effect, by validating defective execution, is valid.[48]

b. As to Defective Deeds and Other Instruments — (i) In General. In general legislation curing formal defects in deeds and other written instruments, and giving to them the same validity as though they had been properly executed, is constitutional; and as between the original parties to such instruments such legislation renders them valid and binding to all intents and purposes.[49]

(ii) Deeds of Married Women. The deeds of married women, invalid for formal defects, may be validated by subsequent legislation.[50]

c. As to Defective Tax Assessments. It is well settled that statutes validating and confirming defective and informal assessments of taxes, so as to render collectable future assessments — and without attempting to legalize prior invalid

48. Thus where a sale of land of infant tenants in common, under orders of court, in a partition suit, was purchased by a company of persons who wished to subdivide it and sell it in parcels, and the sale confirmed in the names of all, but by mutual agreement and for convenience the deed was made to one of them only, the conveyance was found to be defective, because it did not follow the order of sale. 49. Formal defects in the execution of deeds may be cured by subsequent legislation, although a future right of action might be defeated thereby. Acts curing formal defects in the execution or acknowledgment of deeds debar those who might have relied on such defects of what would otherwise have been a legal vested right. But such acts have been frequently decided to be constitutional. Chestnut v. Shane, 16 Ohio 599, 47 Am. Dec. 387; Grim v. Weissenberg School Dist., 57 Pa. St. 433, 98 Am. Dec. 237. seizures and sales — are constitutional. To this extent the authorities are uniform.[51] And it is also well settled that curative statutes may cover any irregularities in the course of proceedings for the enforcement of any lawful[52] demand, including irregularities in the assessment and collection of taxes. But whether or not such statutes, by retrospective operation, can confer jurisdiction so as to validate a prior illegal proceeding to enforce payment of taxes assessed is a question on which the authorities are not uniform.[53] But in no case can the owner be precluded from impeaching the validity of tax deeds, conveying his property for non-payment of taxes.[54]

d. As to Municipal Contracts and Proceedings. In most cases statutes validating void contracts and defective proceedings of municipal corporations are valid. Legislation validating such contracts and proceedings has been sustained in the following cases: Acts validating defective execution of county bonds for

53. In Iowa, Wisconsin, and Pennsylvania it has been held that legislation which legalizes and renders collectable a tax that is invalid and uncollectable, and supplies means by which payment may be enforced, does not impair any vested rights of the taxpayer, and that such legislation, by its retrospective operation, may constitutionally disbar future causes of action and defeat pending litigation which otherwise would have been a legal vested right, entitling the defeated party to a judgment in his favor. it expressly or by necessary implication appears that it was intended to operate retrospectively by validating antecedent unconstitutional legislation, all such legislation to which such a provision relates will be rendered valid, without reënactment by the legislature. Thus constitutional provisions enacted in accordance with the federal constitution, confirming and validating acts of illegal legislative bodies,[76] provisions continuing existing laws in force,[77] and provisions authorizing legislation upon a subject upon which it has already been enacted, without constitutional authority,[78] operate retrospectively and render valid all such prior legislation.[79] is not protected by it, but some cases hold to the contrary so far as protection to the officer is concerned.[82]

8. Recognition of Existing Laws Pending Constitutional Changes. Where a constitutional amendment or a new constitution adopted changes the mode of choosing officers and provides that present officers shall continue in office until their successors are chosen and qualified,[83] that the existing condition of things continue until organization under such amendment or constitution is perfected "as if no change had taken place,"[84] or that the duties of the officers shall "remain in full force though the same be contrary" to such constitution, to be performed until organization under such constitution,[85] the effect is that all officers continue in office and all of the functions of government continue until organization under such amendment or constitution is perfected.

9. Statutes Passed and Acts Done in Anticipation of Constitutional Amendments. Statutes enacted in anticipation of the adoption of constitutional amendments prescribing the manner of giving effect to such amendments, in accordance with directory provisions[86] thereof, or making appropriations of the public domain for the public[87] use are valid, in the absence of constitutional provisions prohibiting such legislation. But executive appointments, made in anticipation of vacancies in office, pending constitutional changes, are illegal and will be disregarded;[88] and a change of the return-day in judicial process, in anticipation of the adoption of a new constitution providing for such a change, is invalid.[89]

Original source of power. — At the adoption of the federal constitution all governmental powers were in the states, and under the division of those powers, made by the adoption of that instrument, the federal government received only such powers as were granted to it, and the states retained the residuum, except so far as those powers were extinguished by prohibitions upon the states. Thayer v. Hedges, 22 Ind. 282. This is true except as to the powers exercised by the colonial congress under the confederation, and which never belonged to, and never were exercised by the states as individuals. The power over peace and war, the regulation of foreign trade, and all other intercourse with foreign nations, and the general regulation of all subjects that pertain to international law, were never exercised by the states in any way except in their aggregate capacity; and that any state ever possessed absolute sovereignty is a proposition that cannot be successfully maintained. No legislative body in America, either federal or state, is possessed of any such powers with the fundamental laws that have been prescribed for its government by the people, who are superior to both the law-making power and the constitutions themselves. All written constitutions therefore are limitations upon legislative[92] powers or the sovereignty which in all organized governments must reside somewhere. Under our system of government the sovereignty, so far as it can be exercised by governmental means, is divided between the federal and state authorities, each being sovereign in its own[93] sphere; and both are subject to such constitutional limitations and restrictions as the people, acting in their national capacity in the one case and in their state capacities in the other, have seen fit to prescribe for both.[94] The constitution of the United States, then, is a grant of power.[95]

b. Federal and State Governments Distinguished. The government of the United States is a government of limited and restrained powers, while the governments of the several states are general and residuary as to all powers exercised by them. All national authority is derived from the constitution of the United as the British house of commons is possessed of, in which, under the English constitution, the sovereignty of the empire resides. Cooley Bl. Comm. 50 et seq.

States, in which the powers of the federal government are enumerated.[96] But not so with the governments of the several states; their original powers they received through charters from the British crown, which served as their constitutions during the colonial period, and up to the time of the framing and adopting of state constitutions by them or their peoples during or after the revolutionary period;[97] and all powers that are not expressly or by necessary implication granted to the United States, in the federal constitution, remain with the several states or with the people, being necessarily inherent in the state governments or in the people who have established such governments.[98]

c. Interpretation — (i) In General. There have always been two schools of constructionists with a view to construing the federal constitution, the one contending for a strict, and the other for a liberal, construction of that instrument; but the doctrine of the strict constructionists has never advanced beyond theory.[99]

(ii) Grants of Power and Restrictions. It is also a rule of construction, applicable to the federal constitution, with reference to grants of power to the United States and restrictions upon the states, that where no exceptions are made in terms none will be made by implication.[1]

96. "The powers delegated by the proposed Constitution, to the federal government, are few and defined. Those which are to remain in the state governments are numerous and indefinite." The Federalist, No. 45 (by Madison).

"The government, then, of the United States, can claim no powers which are not granted to it by the constitution, and the powers actually granted, must be such as are expressly given, or given by necessary implication." Martin v. Hunter, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 304, 326, 4 L. ed. 97, per Story, J. See also Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 6 L. ed. 23.

98. The legislature of a state does not look to its constitution for a grant of its powers, but exercises all powers compatible with civil government, unless restrained by some express inhibition or by clear implication, to be found in either the state constitution or in the federal constitution. In re Dorsey, 7 Port. (Ala.) 293; Com. v. Plaisted, 148 Mass. 375, 19 N. E. 224, 12 Am. St. Rep. 566, 2 L. R. A. 142; Adams v. Howe, 14 Mass. 340, 7 Am. Dec. 216; People v. Draper, 15 N. 99. By a series of early decisions, which have since been followed, the rule was established that the federal constitution, like other constitutions, is to be given a fair and reasonable construction, so as to promote the objects and purposes for which it was established; and that the extremes of both an enlarged construction, which would extend the meaning of words beyond their natural import, and a narrow construction, which would render the general government unequal to the objects for which it was instituted, are to be avoided. In Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 1, 187, 6 L. ed. 23, Marshall, C. J., said: "This instrument [the federal constitution] contains an enumeration of powers expressly granted by the people to their government. It has been said that these powers ought to be construed strictly. But why ought they to be so construed? Is there one sentence in the constitution which gives countenance to this rule? . . . What do gentlemen mean by a strict construction? If they contend only against that enlarged construction which would extend words beyond their natural and obvious import, we might question the application of the term, but should not controvert the principle. If they contend for that narrow construction which, in support of some theory not to be found in the constitution, would deny to the government those powers which the words of the grant, as usually understood, import, and which are consistent with the general views and objects of the instrument; for that narrow construction, which would cripple the government and render it unequal to the objects for which it is declared to be instituted, and to which the powers given, as fairly understood, render it competent; then we cannot perceive the propriety of this strict construction, nor adopt it as the rule by which the constitution is to be expounded." See also North River Steamboat Co. v. Livingston, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 713: In re Debs, 158 U. S. 564, 15 S. Ct. 900, 39 L. ed. 1092; McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. (U. 1. The constitution does not in terms extend the jurisdiction of the federal courts to all controversies between states, yet in

(III) Limitations Upon Powers of Government. But it is a rule of construction, applicable to the federal constitution, that where it imposes limitations upon the powers of the government, without reference to the states, such limitations will be held to be restrictions upon the powers of the federal government only, and this rule applies to all cases where the states are not mentioned.[2]

(IV) Implied Prohibitions to States. The granting of particular powers to the United States, in the federal constitution, does not necessarily prohibit the states, by implication, from exercising the same powers.[3] But in all cases of conflict, or where the exercise by the states of the powers so granted would defeat the purpose for which they have been granted to the federal government, the grant is an implied prohibition to the states to exercise the same powers.[4]

(V) Powers Not to Be Assumed. It is a settled principle of construction, applicable to the federal constitution, that powers are not to be assumed as possessed by the federal government other than those granted in the constitution itself.[5]

(VI) Prohibitions Against Impairing Obligations of Contracts.[6] By the weight of authority, the provision in the federal constitution which prohibits the states from passing laws impairing the obligations of contracts does not apply to the United States,[7] but the contrary has been held by some state courts.[8]

d. Amendments — (I) In General. The amendments to the federal constitution, adopted during the period of reconstruction, after the war, in no way disturbed the general division of powers between the federal and the state governments.[9]

(II) The Fourteenth Amendment. The fourteenth amendment to the federal constitution, prohibiting the states from denying to citizens of the United States equal protection under the laws, did not add anything to any rights which one citizen may claim over another. The only duty resting upon the United States under this amendment is to see to it that the states do not deny to any person this protection by discriminating legislation.[10]

(III) The Fifteenth Amendment. The fifteenth amendment to the federal constitution, prohibiting the United States, or any state, from abridging the right of citizens of the United States to vote, on account of "race, color, or previous condition of servitude," created no privileges or immunities of any one class of citizens over another. It only prohibited discrimination against any class of citizens of the United States, and annulled all state laws and constitutional provisions that were in conflict therewith.[11]

(IV) The Tenth Amendment. The tenth amendment to the federal constitution, declaring that the powers not delegated to the United States by the constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states respectively, or to the people, is construed to mean that powers not "expressly" delegated to the United States are reserved to the states.[12]

(V) The First Amendment. The first amendment to the federal constitution, prohibiting congress from abridging the right of the people to assemble and to petition the government for redress of grievances, was not intended to limit the powers of the states over their own citizens, but to operate upon the federal government alone.[13]

tion is the supreme written will of the people of the state, who have adopted it as a framework or basis of their government, subject only to the limitations to be found in the federal constitution.[15] A state constitution generally defines to a certainty what powers are to be exercised by each branch of the government, what powers are delegated to the legislative department, and what powers are reserved to the people,[16] or not to be exercised. But however definite the powers to be exercised under a state constitution may be pointed out, the legislative powers of the states are very general and very indefinite, notwithstanding; and the generally accepted doctrine is that they may pass any acts that are not expressly, or by necessary implication, inhibited by their own constitutions or by the federal constitution.[17]

the law-making power enacting it is subject cannot become a law.[18] And by the weight of authority, statutes passed by the state legislatures, and free from objections on constitutional grounds, must be enforced,[19] for the power of a state to enact laws within its constitutional limits is supreme.[20] The only test of the validity of an act regularly passed by a state legislature is whether or not it violates the state or federal constitutions in express terms or by clear implication.[21] Courts are never at liberty to question the wisdom or policy of an act of the legislature,[22] their duty being to enforce such acts as are passed to the extent to which they are found to be constitutional and no further.[23] There are cases, however, which hold to the contrary.[24]

(II) Limits of Legislative Power. In the absence of constitutional restrictions, the limits of the powers of the state legislatures to enact laws are not well defined.[25] Subject only to prescribed constitutional restraints, the state legislatures have been compared to the British parliament,[26] whose "power and jurisdiction," according to Sir Edward Coke, "is transcendent and absolute."[27] While such a comparison is too radical for American institutions, in which unlimited powers are unknown,[28] it is impossible to reconcile all of the decisions

Most of the decisions which deal with these questions are to be found in cases in which the constitutionality of statutes deemed to be in contravention of natural justice or natural right (see infra, IV, E, 2, b, (III)) or in contravention of the spirit of the constitution have been drawn in question (see infra, IV, of the courts upon the subject of the limits of the legislative powers of the states, in the absence of written constitutional restrictions defining such limits; and equally difficult is it to find a decision attempting to deal with this subject that has received the approval of an undivided court, or one that is not otherwise weakened by being directly opposed by preceding or succeeding decisions within the same jurisdiction; and if it could be said that the decisions were in harmony where the same question has been passed upon by the courts in parallel cases, the conflict in cases where the same principle has been involved in other cases would still be irreconcilable.

(III) Statutes Contravening Natural Justice and Common Right. It may be stated as a general principle that statutes will not be held unconstitutional merely because they are unjust and repugnant to the general principles of justice, liberty, or rights not expressed in constitutional provisions.[29] The contrary has been held in some cases,[30] and very strong dicta to the same effect are to be found in other cases where the acts in question were either sustained[31] or E, 2, b, (IV)). Some of the legislation of this character has involved the personal and property rights as between individuals, but the most of it has been in relation to statutes which have been held to infringe upon the right of local self-government by authorizing municipal taxation, for municipal, local, and other purposes, without municipal consent, or by authorizing state control of municipal affairs by establishing local boards, vested with authority to control municipal affairs, and by prescribing conditions and qualifications for the selection of local officers tending to give a preference to any one class (see infra, IV, E, 2, b, (VI)).

held to be repugnant to express constitutional provisions and void;[32] and even the English decisions are not free from similar expressions of opinion,[33] although the absolute authority of parliament was never questioned by the English judges.[34]

(iv) Statutes Contravening Spirit of Constitution. The validity of statutes deemed to be in violation of the spirit supposed to pervade all constitutions has been considered at much length by the courts in a variety of cases; but an examination of the authorities upon this subject leads to the conclusion that the principle involved is more properly a question of construction of some necessarily implied constitutional restriction, resulting more from express constitutional provisions than otherwise.[35] The generally accepted rule is that courts will not declare a statute void merely because in their opinion it is opposed to the spirit supposed to pervade the constitution.[36] The authorities are not in harmony upon this question; but in nearly all of the cases where statutes have been held to be prohibited by the spirit of the constitution, or nature and structure of the government, the acts in question have also been held to be in violation of some express or implied constitutional restriction.[37]

(v) Statutes Against Public Policy and Morals. Nor will courts

of a legislative body without any restraint. The fundamental maxims of a free government seem to require that the rights of personal liberty and private property should be held sacred. At least no court of justice in this country would be warranted in assuming that the power to violate and disregard them — a power so repugnant to the common principles of justice and civil liberty — lurked under any general grant of legislative authority, or ought to be implied from any general expressions of the will of the people. The people ought not to be presumed to part with rights so vital to their security and well-being, without very strong and direct expressions of such an intention." Per Story, J., in Wilkinson v. Leland, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 627, 657, 7 L. ed. 542.

"There are certain vital principles in our free Republican governments, which will determine and over-rule an apparent and flagrant abuse of legislative power; as to authorize manifest injustice by positive law; or to take away that security for personal liberty, or private property, for the protection whereof the government was established." declare statutes void on the ground that they are against sound public policy and morals and liable to lead to corruption and oppression.[38]

(VI) Statutes Infringing Upon Right of Local Self-Government. The objections to such statutes are that they deprive the inhabitants of municipal corporations of the right of local self-government, and that the enactment of such legislation is beyond the powers of the legislature, in the absence of express constitutional provisions authorizing it. In many well-considered cases upon this subject the doctrine of an implied constitutional guaranty of the right of local self-government, derived from the principles of the common law and the English constitution, has been maintained; and in states where this doctrine prevails a statute that is deemed to infringe upon the right of local self-government by interfering with the administration of municipal affairs by the local authorities will be held invalid, even though it violates no express constitutional provision, while in states where this doctrine is not recognized, statutes designed to control the administration of municipal affairs by the state authorities will be sustained, unless it can be shown that by express or necessary implication they violate some constitutional provision. By the weight of authority such statutes are valid, and the reasoning on which they have been sustained is that the state legislatures are proprietary governments, possessing plenary powers, subject only to express constitutional restrictions, and therefore vested with inherent power to pass any legislation not inhibited by the letter of the constitutions to which they are subject; while on the other hand the principle on which such statutes have been held invalid is that the state legislatures, like congress, derive their powers from the people, subject to the constitutional restrictions prescribed in the federal and state constitutions; and therefore are not vested with inherent power to legislate, except so far as they are authorized by the constitutions to which they are subject; and the right of local self-government, being secured to the people by the several English bills of rights, the customs and general policy of English and American institutions, and antedating the adoption of the constitutions themselves, is necessarily inherent in the people, and, without their consent, expressed in constitutional provisions that they have framed and adopted, cannot be taken away by legislative authority.

In Alabama any act of the legislature is regarded as constitutional unless it violates some express provision of the state or federal constitutions, and political rights of municipal corporations do not vest as against the state.[39] pensation, it was held that such prohibition was implied from the nature and structure of our system of government, if not prohibited by necessary implication in provisions of the bill of rights. Ex p. Martin, 13 Ark. 198, 58 Am. In Arkansas municipal corporations are regarded as agents of the state government, and subject to legislative control so far as the municipal officers are concerned.[40]

In California municipal corporations are regarded as subdivisions of the state government, and subject to legislative control so far as the exercise of political power is concerned.[41] The legislature may elect officers of state institutions, readjust municipal indebtedness so as to impose greater burdens,[42] and enforce payment of equitable claims against municipal corporations;[43] but its authority to validate illegal assessments for municipal purposes has been denied.[44]

In Colorado the right of local self-government is in all respects subordinate to the power of the legislature.[45]

In Connecticut the doctrine of local self-government, except as guaranteed in express constitutional provisions, is not recognized. The legislature may impose assessments against municipal corporations for local improvements not within their limits.[46]

In Florida the legislature exercises plenary powers over all public highways, including both streets in cities and county roads, and may authorize apportionment between municipal corporations of moneys raised by special tax levied by counties for the repair of public thoroughfares.[47]

public trust, and subject to legislative control, but private property acquired by them will be protected.[52]

In Kansas the authority of the legislature to establish local boards to control municipal affairs has been sustained;[53] but its inherent authority has been denied, the court holding that the people, in their primary capacity, possessed all political power of the state, and that they could delegate a particular part of it to the legislature to exercise, or exercise it themselves.[54]

In Kentucky it has been held that the legislature cannot interfere with the right of local self-government by fixing the compensation of municipal employees, and that the legislature is subject to implied restrictions which it cannot violate.[55]

In Louisiana the legislature may control municipal police affairs by the establishment of local boards, vested with full powers.[56]

In Maine the legislature cannot authorize municipal taxation for other than public purposes,[57] nor can it exonerate one municipal corporation from its obligations with another.[58]

52. An act authorizing the construction of a railroad through city streets, the fee to which was in the city, and without its consent or compensation to it, was held to be valid (Clinton v. Cedar Rapids, etc., R. The court say: "It is also suggested, though not much insisted on, that the statute is unconstitutional, because it takes from the city the power of self-government, in matters of internal police. 75. In People v. Morris, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 325, 331, the court say: "It is an unsound and even absurd proposition, that political power, conferred by the legislature, can become a vested right as against the government in any individual or body of men. It is repugnant to the genius of our institutions, and the spirit and meaning of the constitution; for by that fundamental law, all political rights not there defined, and taken out of the exercise of legislative discretion, were intended to be left subject to its regulation. If corporations can set up a vested right as against the government to the exercise of this species of power, because it has been conferred upon them by the bounty of the legislature, so may any and every officer under the government do the same."

76. The constitution of New York, unlike most of those of the other states, contains no bill of rights; but the decisions in that state on this subject are quite as conflicting as any to be found elsewhere. In People v. Shepard, 36 N. Y. 285; People v. Draper, 15 N. Y. 532, the right of the state authorities to establish municipal boards of control was maintained. But these cases have been overruled by the more recent cases of Rathbone v. Wirth, 150 N. Y. 459, 45 N. E. 15, 34 L. R. A. 408; People v. Albertson, 55 N. Y. 50, both of which hold, although not without a divided court, that the right of local self-government in cities and towns cannot be impaired by statutes establishing local boards of control and prescribing qualifications for the officers of such boards, or the method by which they shall be selected. The case of Rathbone v. Wirth, 150 N. Y. 459, 45 N. E. 15, 34 L. R. A. 408, may perhaps be considered as settling the question that the legislature cannot control municipal police affairs by legislation, unless it has been uniform and continuous.

An act establishing a police district court, not bounded by county, town, or city lines, conferring exclusive jurisdiction upon the justice thereof in cases mentioned, and authorizing the appointment of a local police board service regulations,[77] and it may authorize commissioners to lay out and improve city streets, independent of the municipal authorities.[78]

In Ohio the theory of local self-government is denied, and the legislature may control municipal affairs by creating state or municipal boards, vested with full powers;[79] but its authority to prohibit municipal electors from voting for all of the candidates for local police commissioners or to control the work in the construction of a state house has been denied.[80]

In Oregon municipal corporations are subject to legislative control, and the legislature may compel them to incur indebtedness for local improvements.[81]

In Pennsylvania municipal corporations are regarded as agents of the state in the administration of municipal affairs, subject to legislative control;[82] and the doctrine of local self-government, by implied constitutional guaranty, is not recognized.

In Rhode Island the theory of local self-government, otherwise than as expressed in the state constitution, is not recognized.[83]

In Tennessee municipal franchises are public grants subject to legislative control and may be amended, modified, or revoked at the discretion of the legislature.[84]

In Vermont the rights and franchises of municipal corporations are held not to vest as against the state.[85]

In Wisconsin[86] the legislature cannot extend the terms of office of municipal officers beyond the official terms for which they have been elected by municipal authority,[87] or compel municipal taxation for public purposes that are not local and municipal.[88]

The United States courts do not recognize the doctrine of local self-government further than it is guaranteed in express constitutional provisions.[89] the members thereof to be appointed by the state authorities for a prescribed term, and all members to be elected after the expiration of the first term, was held to be constitutional. Luehrman v. Shelby County Taxing Dist., 2 Lea (Tenn.) 425.

85. So far as public municipal franchises or their exercise are concerned the legislature may enlarge, restrain, exclusively control, or abolish them. Montpelier v. East Montpelier, 29 Vt. 12, 67 Am. Dec. 784.

The right of land in said town, for the benefit of schools, is, by the charter, placed under the care of the inhabitants of the town, without reference to their being owners of the soil, or original grantees. And the legislature can exercise no power over it, to vary the appropriation, without the consent of the town. Poultney v. Wells, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 180.

But the contrary has been held with reference to the right of a town, under its charter, to land for the benefit of schools. Thus an act authorizing an agent appointed by county authority to purchase spirituous liquors at the expense of a town, to be sold as its agent, without the consent of the town, express or implied, was held to be unconstitutional. Atkins v. Randolph, 31 Vt. 226.

The legislature cannot divert funds raised by municipal taxation for a particular purpose to another purpose of the same general character without the consent of the municipal authorities. Thus money raised by municipal taxation to erect a building for a high school cannot be used by the state in the construction of a building for a normal school against the will of the inhabitants who have raised the money. State v. Haben, 22 Wis. 660.

People v. Brooklyn, etc., R. Co., 89 N. Y. 75.

The validity of an act declaring a river a public highway, without making provision for compensation to the riparian owners, can be questioned only by such owners. An action by a town for damages cannot be maintained. Pierrepont v. Loveless, 72 N. Y. 211.

The validity of a statute condemning land taken for a cemetery, without making any provision for damages to land from which

8. With Respect to Discriminations. The denial of equal rights and privileges by discriminating legislation can be pleaded only by those who can show that they belong to the class discriminated against. This has been held in numerous cases, and the rule applies to all cases affecting civil rights of every kind, and to all cases in which property rights only are affected.[5] White persons cannot question the validity of statutes imposing taxation upon colored persons, where the latter are not allowed to vote upon the question of such taxation,[6] nor can white persons contest the validity of statutes excluding colored persons from serving as jurors.[7]

9. Estoppel or Waiver — a. In General. A person may, by his acts or omission to act, waive a right which he might otherwise have under the provisions of a constitution;[8] and where such acts or omissions have intervened, a law will be sustained which otherwise might have been held invalid, if the party making the objection had not by prior acts precluded himself from being heard in opposition.[9] This rule is of universal application in civil proceedings, and also in many crimi-

9. Pleading, in bar to an indictment, was held to be a waiver of the right to object to nal prosecutions where only the party waiving his constitutional privilege is concerned.[10] In cases of misdemeanor, the consent of the accused to the trial by less than twelve jurors is valid and binding upon him;[11] but the rule is otherwise in capital cases,[12] and also in cases of felony, unless the constitution allows a trial by less than twelve jurors in express terms.[13] But statutes permitting defendants in criminal prosecutions for misdemeanors to elect to be tried by the court instead of by a jury are valid.[14]

b. By Individuals. A waiver of a constitutional provision precludes the party waiving it from afterward claiming protection under it,[15] even though it was adopted solely for his benefit;[16] and such a waiver is binding as to both past and future transactions.[17]

c. By Officers. Officers who act under a statute are not entitled to plead that such statute is unconstitutional in proceedings against them for official misconduct,[18] nor is such a plea available in suits against them to recover moneys received by them in the course of their official duty.[19] The same rule has been the constitutionality of a law by which the grand jury was made up. U. S. v. Gale, 109 U. S. 65, 3 S. Ct. 1, 27 L. ed. 857.

invalid as to others. This rule of estoppel does not, however, apply to voters in elections held under such statutes.[33]

i. Participating in Judicial Proceedings — (i) In General. A person may waive his constitutional rights by taking part, without objection, in judicial proceedings. In civil proceedings the acts of the parties to the litigation which by fair inference acknowledge the validity of a statute are binding, and will preclude such parties from attacking such statute as unconstitutional.[34] Instituting proceedings to enforce a right estops the plaintiff from denying the jurisdiction of the court in which he brings suit,[35] and the acceptance by parties in interest of emoluments to which they are entitled, and which are obtained through judicial proceedings to which they are not parties, also estops the parties so accepting from denying the jurisdiction of the court in which such proceedings were instituted.[36]

(ii) Giving Bonds. The giving of a bond conditioned to perform an undertaking in the course of judicial proceedings, in accordance with statutory provisions,[37] or the bringing suit for a breach of the condition of bonds so given,[38] will preclude the parties to the litigation from attacking the constitutionality of a statute authorizing such bonds to be given. But a surety merely may attack such a statute after default of his principal.[39]

Dodd v. Thomas, 69 Mo. 364. enactment of an unconstitutional insolvent law, in an insolvency proceeding instituted under such law, and the acceptance of dividends from the estate of the insolvent, will preclude such creditors from attacking the validity of the law. It has been held that such an attack may be made by a creditor proving such a claim and receiving a dividend in a suit against the debtor.[40] But the contrary has been maintained.[41] And where the insolvent law is valid generally, it has been held that a prior creditor waives no rights by proving his claim and accepting a dividend.[42]

G. Determination of Constitutional Questions — 1. In General. The judiciary is a coördinate branch of the government, and like the other departments is independent within its own sphere; and where an act of the legislature is repugnant to the constitution the courts not only have the power, but it is their duty to so declare it.[44] But it does not follow that the courts are authorized to supervise every act of the legislature or that they will inquire into the validity of all legislative proceedings that may have the force of laws.[45] Neither have the courts any authority to avoid the effect of failure of the legislature to perform its duty.[46]

2. What Courts May Determine — a. In General. It has been held that only the highest judicial tribunals have the power to declare an act of the legislature unconstitutional,[47] but inferior courts have exercised this power;[48] and it is now generally held that inferior courts of original jurisdiction have power to pass upon the validity of a statute and to declare it unconstitutional in proceedings before them in the course of judicial administration.[49] But this power is exercised by such courts with great caution.[50]

b. The Federal Judiciary. The authority of the federal courts to pass upon the constitutionality of legislation is limited to such acts as contravene or are repugnant to some provision of the federal constitution.[51]

It is within the scope of the federal judiciary to inquire into the rates of compensation fixed by municipal corporations and private corporations for appropriated water within a state, and to determine whether such rates deprive property-owners of their property without just compensation, and the court may annul the same if found unreasonable. San Diego Land, etc., Co. v. National City, 74 Fed. 79.

Where they are called upon to determine the rights of parties to litigation under a state law, the federal courts will not, in doubtful cases, adjudge a state statute to be in conflict with the state constitution, unless the highest court of the state has pronounced such statute unconstitutional. Fish v. Fond du Lac, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 4,813*a*, 12 Reporter 295.

c. The State Judiciary. In doubtful cases, where a question of conflict between a state statute and an act of congress is raised, the supreme court of a state will render such a judgment as will enable the parties to bring the case before the supreme court of the United States for review, and without expressing an opinion which would conclude the parties to the action.[52]

3. Purpose of Determining and What Will Not Be Determined — a. In General. The purpose of determining constitutional questions is to expound the laws enacted by the government, for the protection of both public and private rights, and for these purposes only can the constitutionality of a statute be questioned in any court. The validity of a constitutional provision,[53] or the legality of the structure of the government of which the court called upon to give its opinion forms a part, by virtue of the same constitutional enactment,[54] are questions that will not be passed upon; nor will acts of the legislature be declared absolutely void where great injury must necessarily result,[55] unless to prevent a most palpable violation of the constitution.[56] And courts are cautious about declaring the statutes of other states unconstitutional and will do so only when a very strong case is presented.[57]

b. Reality of Controversy and Necessity of Determination — (I) In General. It is a well-settled principle that the constitutionality of a statute will not be determined in any case, unless such determination is absolutely necessary in order to determine the merits of the suit in which the constitutionality of such statute has been drawn in question;[58] and then only where the part of the statute alleged to

55. Where the legislature, without constitutional authority, and for many years, had granted divorces, it was held that such divorces would not be declared void on account of the evil that would follow from such a declaration, but that the court would be content with a declaration that the exercise of such a power was unconstitutional, feeling confident that the practice would cease. b. Pointing Out Specific Constitutional Provisions Infringed. A statute will not be declared void unless its invalidity is distinctly pointed out and clearly shown,[72] and therefore one who alleges that a statute is unconstitutional must point out the specific constitutional provision that is violated by it.[73]

tion is regarded as a duty of the court, in passing upon the constitutionality of an act of the legislature.[76]

b. Degree and Extent of Such Presumptions — (i) In General. The authorities are not in harmony as to the degree of the presumption that will be indulged in in favor of the constitutionality of a statute, but the rule favored by the weight of authority is that every reasonable presumption will be made that a law enacted by the legislature is constitutional,[77] and that it intended all laws enacted by it to be reasonable and just.[78] But it has been held that the presumption in favor of the constitutionality of a statute was very slight.[79]

79. That a law has been enacted affords little, if any, presumption that it is consti-

(II) Presumptions as to Motives For Legislation. Ignorance or improper motives in the enactment of legislation are never imputed to the legislature.[80] The courts will conclusively presume that no general laws are ever passed either through want of information on the part of the legislature or because it was misled by false representations of interested parties;[81] and a statute which violates, neither expressly nor by necessary implication, any constitutional provision, is itself conclusive evidence of its propriety and justice.[82] But the legislature cannot evade the purposes of the constitution, while keeping within the letter of its terms;[83] nor can it, under the guise of police power, enact measures which interfere with the citizens in the free pursuit of any lawful enterprise.[84]

(III) Presumption That State Will Not Violate Federal Constitution. It is presumed that a state legislature will not violate the federal constitution, and this presumption is very strong, so much so that it is the duty of the court, where an act of a state legislature is assailed as being in violation of the federal constitution, to make every possible presumption against such violation.[85] And the presumption that a state constitution does not violate the federal constitution is also very strong.[86]

(IV) Where Part of Statute Is Held Unconstitutional. While a statute is presumed to be constitutional, yet, when a part of it has been declared unconstitutional, the presumption in favor of constitutionality will not be indulged in as to the remaining portion.[87]

6. Effect of Declaring Statutes Unconstitutional — a. In General. The interpretation given to a statute or constitutional provision by a court of last resort is binding upon all departments of the government, including the legislature;[88] and a decision by such a court that a statute is unconstitutional has the effect of rendering such statute absolutely null and void,[89] from the date of its enactment, and not from the date on which it is judicially declared unconstitutional; and hence there is no presumption to be overcome, no disfavor to be encountered, by one who seeks to show its unconstitutionality. Baltimore v. State, 15 Md. 376, 74 Am. Dec. 572. But see State v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 12 Gill & J. (Md.) 399, 38 Am. Dec. 319, holding that an act of the legislature would not be declared unconstitutional, in the absence of the clearest proof.

Where an act amending a town charter would be unconstitutional unless such town had a certain population, it was held that such population would be presumed to exist until the contrary was shown. Roby v. Sheppard, 42 W. Va. 286, 26 S. E. 278.

Where there was doubt as to whether an act requiring plaintiffs in suits for debts contracted prior to a certain date to pay taxes thereon before entry of judgment impaired the obligation of the contract within the inhibition of the federal constitution, it was held that such act would not be declared unconstitutional. tional.[90] But a decision that a statute is unconstitutional, to be effective, must be distinct and positive.[91]

b. Amendments and Subsequent Legislation. Where a statute is declared unconstitutional, all acts amendatory thereof are without force or effect;[92] but unconstitutional legislation may be amended so as to render it constitutional, so far as future operation is concerned, by striking out the objectionable provisions or by supplying other provisions so as to make it conform to constitutional requirements;[93] and an unconstitutional act may be referred to in a subsequent valid act, in order to describe the powers conferred and the duties to be performed.[94]

c. Acts Done Under Unconstitutional Statutes — (I) In General. As a general rule all acts done under an unconstitutional law are void and of no effect;[95] but acts that are merely incidental to an unconstitutional legislative enactment, it seems, are valid.[96]

(II) Judgments. Judgments rendered in the course of judicial proceedings under unconstitutional statutes are void,[97] but the right to have such a judgment set aside, it seems, may be waived by voluntary action on the part of the defendant.[98]

for refusing to obey it.[99] But in proceedings to compel performance of official duty, the provisions of an unconstitutional law purporting to dispense with such performance cannot be pleaded as a defense;[1] and it has been held that an unconstitutional statute has sufficient force as a law to protect officers acting under it.[2]

V. DISTRIBUTION OF GOVERNMENTAL POWERS AND FUNCTIONS.

A. Legislative Powers and Delegation Thereof — 1. Nature and Scope. As above stated,[3] the legislature of a state has power to enact any laws that are not expressly or by necessary implication prohibited either by the federal constitution or by the constitution of the state enacting the law, the constitutionality of which is called in question.[4] There are dicta to the contrary in some cases,[5] but such a principle as a matter of law cannot be maintained.[6] The legislative powers are vested, under constitutional provisions, in a senate and house of representatives, to be elected by the people;[7] and such powers are usually granted in very broad and general terms, and include all such powers as may be necessary to carry the constitution into effect.[8] And while it is the province of the courts to say what the law is, and to determine its application to particular cases, it is the province of the legislature to say what the law shall be in the future.[9]

A constitutional provision authorizing the enactment of "all such laws as may be necessary to carry the constitution into effect"

2. IRREPEALABLE LEGISLATION. The power to amend and repeal legislation as well as to enact it is also vested in the legislature,[10] and a legislature cannot restrict or limit its right to exercise this power by prescribing modes of procedure for the repeal or amendment of statutes;[11] nor is an act of one legislature binding upon a future legislature.[12] But this does not apply to ministerial duties merely, performed by the legislature in compliance with a constitutional mandate,[13] or to rules prescribed by the legislature for the construction of statutes.[14]

3. ENCROACHMENT ON JUDICIARY — a. In General. The legislative power of a government, wherever it is undefined, will include both the judicial and the executive functions;[15] and it has been held that there are cases in which the legislative and judicial powers blend to such an extent that the exercise to a certain degree of judicial authority by the legislature in the enactment of laws is not open to objection as encroaching upon the province of the judiciary,[16] but this doctrine was subsequently denied in later decisions of the same court in which it was announced,[17] and it has not been reasserted. The states are at liberty to unite their legislative and judicial functions if they see fit; there is nothing in the federal constitution to prevent it (Satterlee v. Matthewson, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 380, 7 L. ed. 458); and the judicial opinions that were delivered by the state senators of New York, when the senate the legislative and the judicial functions is a vital one and not subject to alteration or change either by legislative action or by judicial decrees, for the lines which separate their powers are to be found in all constitutions, and are as much a part of them as though they were definitely and clearly defined.[18] The judiciary cannot consent that its province shall be invaded by either of the other departments of the government,[19] and it has been held that its province cannot be invaded even by a constitutional convention in the framing of a new constitution.[20] of that state exercised judicial functions, are not unfamiliar (Hartshorne v. Sleght, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 554).

Contested elections.— It has been held that the legislature may try and determine contested election cases without encroaching upon the judicial power. State v. Harmon, 31 Ohio St. 250. But see Segars v. Parrott, 54 S. C. 1, 31 S. E. 677, 865, denying the authority of the legislature to determine the result of the vote upon the adoption of a constitutional amendment.

18. The exercise by the legislature, either directly or through subordinate boards established by it, of the power to regulate the conduct of business in which the public have an interest, as to fix rates and charges for future observance, is wholly a legislative or administrative function; but after such action has been taken, whether it transcends the powers of the legislature is a question for judicial determination. The two functions are essentially and vitally different. The legislature cannot place its own acts beyond the constitutional jurisdiction of the courts; nor on the other hand can the courts regulate the conduct of business in which the public has an interest, by fixing rates or determining whether one rate is preferable to another, their province being limited to determining whether or not such rates as may be fixed by the legislature are in violation of any constitutional provision, and if so to enjoin their enforcement. It is essential to the administration of the federal government that the lines which separate its three coördinate departments shall be clearly defined and followed, without any encroachment by any one of them on the powers confided to the others; and hence congress can exercise no function which is judicial, unless the right to do so is conferred upon it by the constitution. b. Conferring Judicial Powers. The legislature has no authority to delegate judicial powers to executive or ministerial officers or to any class of persons charged with the performance of duties that are not judicial;[21] but it may authorize municipal corporations to perform many acts relating to their own self-government which are of a quasi-judicial character.[22]

c. Creating Offenses or Causes of Action by Prescribing the Elements Thereof. Statutes creating offenses or causes of action by prescribing the elements that shall constitute such offenses or by declaring what acts shall constitute a right of action, and giving a civil remedy therefor, are not regarded as encroachments upon the judicial power and are valid, so far as their prospective operation is concerned. Thus statutes declaring what shall constitute adulteration,[23] what is intoxicating,[24] what is wasteful,[25] what is a nuisance,[26] who shall be deemed fellow servants,[27] what decisions shall not be considered as authority in

Mo. Laws (1881), p. 87, providing that no benevolent association issuing certificates for the payment of money solely from the proceeds of assessments collected from the members shall be subject to the general insurance laws, and declaring that the object of the act is to remove doubts as to the true meaning and intent of the present law, exempts foreign fraternal societies from general insurance laws (Mo. Rev. Stat. (1889), §§ 5849, 5850), although the legislature cannot declare the meaning and intent of an existing law; that being a matter for the courts alone. Kern v. Supreme Council A. N. J. Pamphl. Laws (1900), p. 502, imposes a franchise tax on certain corporations, and section 8 provides that the act "shall not be considered to apply" to any corporation which has not or may not exercise any municipal franchise. It was held that section 8 is not invalid as a legislative attempt to control the courts in the interpretation of statutes, but is a limitation of the scope of the act itself, being equivalent to a provision that the act should not apply to the specified corporations. the courts,[28] and also statutes giving remedies for the benefit of the representatives of persons who have been lynched by mobs,[29] have been held valid.

d. Declarative and Expository Legislation — (I) In General. A declaratory statute is one which is passed in order to put an end to a doubt as to what is the common law or as to the meaning of another statute, and which declares what it is and ever has been.[30] Such a statute is necessarily retrospective, since it undertakes to declare what the law was before it was enacted, and its effect is to encroach upon the province of the judiciary, since it may put a different construction upon a statute than that which has been given to it by the courts. Thus after the courts had determined the rate at which insurance companies were taxable, under a statute, the legislature passed a subsequent statute declaring that such companies were taxable at a different rate from that determined by the courts, and also declared that the rate, as declared by the last statute, was the true intent and construction of the original statute.[31] A statute of this character is not objectionable because it declares the law in the past to have been what it declares it shall be in the future,[32] although it is for the courts to say what the law in the past was;[33] but such a statute cannot be made to operate retrospectively, so as to affect past controversies, thereby reversing decisions of the courts which have been previously rendered,[34] nor can such a statute be made to affect past transactions.[35]

(II) Amending and Remedial Statutes. Statutes amending prior unconstitutional or defective statutes and supplying the defects therein after they have been held unconstitutional are not objectionable as to future operation, and will be held valid as to past transactions, provided they supply the defects in such prior statutes merely, without assuming to determine the validity of proceedings taken under such statutes.[36] Legislation of this character is regarded as a modifi-

36. A statute authorizing street commissioners, within a limited time after the building of new sewers, to assess the property specifically benefited thereby for the proportional cost and enacted as an amendment to a prior unconstitutional statute was held not to be an attempt to exercise judicial power by the legislature and valid. Hall v. Boston St. Com'rs, 177 Mass. 434, 59 N. E. 68.

An act amending a prior statute, and providing that such statute should govern certain contracts entered into before such statute took effect and prescribing the manner of enforcing such contracts was held to be cation of prior legislation, in the nature of a reënactment, and not an assumption of judicial power by the legislature; or, more properly, it is a legislative construction of prior statutes, and is valid so far as future operation is concerned, and also as to past transactions if no judicial decrees have been rendered,[37] but invalid as to past transactions where such decrees have been rendered.[38]

(III) Mandates to Judiciary Directing Construction of Statutes. The question whether or not a statute violates the constitution is purely judicial, and cannot be determined by the legislature;[39] and therefore all statutes or mandates from the legislature to the judiciary, directing what construction shall be put upon existing statutes, are assumptions of judicial power and unconstitutional and void.[40]

A retrospective statute confirming and legalizing a contract made by a county which had been held invalid by the courts in an action thereon for want of precedent authority to contract on the part of such county is valid, since it does not attempt to annul a judgment of the court, but recognizes its validity by supplying the element found by the court to be wanting. Steele County v. Erskine, 98 Fed. 215, 39 C. C. A. 173.

A statute directing municipal assessments for street improvements that have been paid by abutting owners to be returned to them, and that the amounts thereof be collected from the city at large, without declaring such assessments to be erroneous, does not in effect vacate assessments having the force of judgments, and is a valid exercise of legislative power. (IV) Operation of Repealing Statutes. Repealing statutes are not objectionable so far as their prospective operation is concerned, but the extent to which they can be made to operate retrospectively is a judicial question and cannot be determined by the legislature. All legislation enacted for the purpose of determining whether a statute operated to repeal or suspend prior legislation is void.[41] But a legislative declaration as to the construction to be given to such statutes will not render them invalid. Such declarations are treated as surplusage so far as past transactions are concerned.[42]

e. Appointment and Removal of Trustees and Receivers — (I) In General. Acts appointing and removing trustees have been held to be valid.[43] The appointment of a receiver by the legislature to settle the affairs of an insolvent bank has been held not to be a judicial act, to the extent of being in violation of a constitutional provision vesting the judicial powers in the courts of the state.[44]

(II) Authorizing Trust Companies to Act as Trustees. An act authorizing trust companies to act as trustees and guardians is constitutional;[45] but one providing that certain corporations shall be accepted by courts as "sole security" where security is required is not.[46]

Conferring and Withdrawing Jurisdiction. Legislation extending the jurisdiction of the courts[48] or withdrawing it[49] is not an exercise of judicial power by the legislature, and is valid, unless repugnant to the constitution.[50] And the legislature may confer upon courts of chancery powers which inherently belong to the supreme court.[51]

h. Conferring Functions Upon Judges Instead of the Court. Where the legislature has full power over a subject-matter, it may confer such powers upon judges rather than upon the courts;[52] but where it has no power it can confer none upon either judges or courts.[53] It has been held that the legislature may confer judicial power upon a judge where, under the constitution, such power can be exercised only by the courts;[54] but by the weight of authority such legislation is unconstitutional and void.[55] and a reinvestment of the proceeds for the purpose of perfecting the title thereto.[69] Statutes confirming defective titles generally are valid,[70] provided they do not assume to interfere with pending litigation.[71]

(II) By Executors and Administrators. Statutes authorizing executors and administrators to sell the real estate of the decedent to pay debts contracted during his lifetime are not regarded as an exercise of judicial power by the legislature and are valid;[72] and it is no objection to such statutes that they prescribe the terms of sale,[73] provide means for the distribution of the proceeds received,[74] or give discretionary power to the representative of the decedent to make such distributions,[75] provided that in the case of an executor powers are given him and duties are imposed upon him respecting such real estate under the terms of the will of the decedent. But where no such powers are given and no such duties are imposed, a statute authorizing an executor to sell real estate and make distribution of the proceeds, and enacted without the consent of the heirs, is void.[76] And statutes authorizing the sale of real estate to pay debts of the decedent, without providing for judicial proceedings to ascertain the amount of such debts,[77] or which authorize such sales for the purpose of paying debts of the estate found due by the legislature,[78] or which assume to cure defects or errors in judicial sales[79] are an exercise of judicial power by the legislature and unconstitutional.

77. A statute authorizing the sale of the real estate of the decedent by his adminis-

(III) By Guardians and Trustees. By the weight of authority, the legislature has power to authorize the sale of the real estate of infants and persons non compos mentis, through guardians and trustees.[80] But such sales cannot be authorized by special statutes where a guardian duly appointed under general statutes is in charge of the property.[81]

m. Impairing Obligation of Contract and Declaring Forfeiture or Requiring Cancellation. It is not competent for the legislature to violate contracts, obligations, etc.[82] Hence it cannot determine that a contract, deed, or other obligation has been violated and require cancellation or forfeiture; this is a question which involves judicial inquiry.[83]

o. Prescribing Qualifications For Admission to the Bar. By the weight of authority, it rests with the courts to determine the qualifications of those who shall become attorneys and counselors at law by being admitted to practise as such.[85] But the right to practise law has been held to be a statutory right, subject to legislative control, and a statute prescribing a test oath that the applicant is loyal to the federal government and to the state, as a prerequisite to admission to practice, has been held to be within the power of the legislature and constitutional.[86] And also statutes prescribing test oaths that the applicants have not been engaged in dueling have been sustained.[87] The line distinguishing between the legislative and judicial powers upon this subject cannot be said to be clearly drawn;[88] but in general statutes regulating the conditions for admission to the bar and prescribing the qualifications of the applicants will be sustained,[89] provided they do not attempt to deprive the court, in the exercise of its discretion, of the power to reject applications[90] or interfere with its prescribed rules.[91]

p. Requiring Courts to Write Opinions and Syllabi, Attest Evidence, and Report Decisions. The legislature has no power to require the courts to give the reasons for their decisions in writing,[92] or to attest transcripts of evidence given in trials before them;[93] nor has it any authority to require the courts to prepare syllabi or to report decisions.[94] All such duties are ministerial merely, and statutes imposing any such duties upon the courts are an encroachment upon the judiciary and invalid,[95] unless such duties are incidental to the judicial functions of the court, in the course of judicial administration.[96] So too a statute imposing

97. A statute making it the duty of the courts, on application of the attorney-general, to authorize the examination of witnesses in proceedings against monopolies in certain cases was held to be unconstitutional, as imposing upon the courts the performance of non-judicial duties and the taking from them the exercise of judicial discretion. A statute validating a prior contract of county commissioners for transferring the records of deeds of an old county to a new county is not an exercise of judicial power and is valid. Erskine v. Steele County, 87 Fed. 630.

5. Where county commissioners, acting under an unconstitutional law, offered bounties for the destruction of gophers and issued county warrants in payment therefor, and a subsequent statute was passed validating such acts, it was held that the statute was operative as to such warrants only, and otherwise void as an encroachment upon the judiciary. But the conferring of jurisdiction by the constitution does not prevent the legislature from prescribing the forms of procedure, provided it does not impair the constitutional powers of the court. Ex p. Harker, 49 Cal. 465.

Where the constitution vested the judicial power in the supreme court, subject to legislative restriction, and authorized writs of error from the district courts to the supreme court, under regulations to be prescribed by law, it was held that a statute prescribing that transcripts of appeal to the supreme court be typewritten or printed, at the election of the appellant, was invalid. Jordan v. Andrus, 26 Mont. 37, 66 Pac. 502.

An act extending the time for filing exceptions, and directing the manner of making up the record, was held to be unconstitutional, as being an attempt by the legislature to control the record of the courts. Johnson v. Gehbbauer, (Ind. 1902) 64 N. E. 855.

Kentucky.— A statute making it the duty of the courts to take judicial notice of city ordinances relating to liens, in so far as they purported to render sufficient petitions for enforcing liens for street improvements, without stating the fact of the passage of such ordinances, was held to be invalid, as making such petitions depend upon legislative instead of judicial judgment. Johnson v. Ferrell, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 216, 1 S. W. 412.

New Jersey.— A statute providing that no judgment of the supreme court shall be reversed by the court of errors and appeals, unless concurred in by a majority of the members of such court competent to sit, is invalid. Clapp v. Ely, 27 N. J. L. 622.

(B) Pleadings. The regulation of pleadings by the legislature is not a usurpation of judicial functions,[30] and where the constitution recognizes the distinctions in the forms of pleadings, such forms may be abolished by statute.[31]

(III) Authorizing Defaults, Dismissals, Revival of Judgments, and Executions. The legislature may prescribe conditions on which defaults may be entered,[32] actions dismissed with costs,[33] or judgments revived in favor of sureties,[34] and it may also give written instruments, after default in payment, the force and effect of judgments, on which executions may be issued.[35]

(IV) Fixing Time For Trials, Perfecting Appeals, Granting Reviews, and Excepting to Jurors. The legislature may prescribe the terms of court at which cases shall stand for trial and forbid a continuance, a discontinuance, or a nolle prosequi, without cause shown and only with the consent of the court.[36] It may also limit the time for taking appeals,[37] the granting of reviews of invalid or erroneous judgments and other proceedings,[38] and taking exception to the disability of jurors.[39]

(V) Compelling Arbitration. Where the constitution provides for the submission of controversies to arbitration by consent of the parties, the legislature has no constitutional authority to provide for compulsory arbitration.[40]

(VI) Regulating References. Legislation providing for the trial of causes by auditors and referees and making their findings evidence, without concluding the parties thereby, is within the power of the legislature and valid.[41] In such cases the subordinate officers act under the direction of the courts, who may

review and reverse the findings of such officers;[42] but legislation making the findings of such officers conclusive is an invasion of the province of the judiciary and unconstitutional.[43]

(VII) Changing Venue and Transferring Causes. Acts changing venue and transferring causes from one court to another are regarded as both constitutional[44] and unconstitutional.[45]

(VIII) Directing Court to Take Bond. The legislature has no power to authorize a court to take a bond in a different manner from that prescribed by the general statutes of the state.[46]

(IX) Vacation, Modification, Rendition, and Validation of Judgments —(A) In General. A state legislature has no power to annul[47] or set aside[48] a judgment rendered by either a state or a federal court,[49] nor has it any power to require the courts to grant new trials or rehearings in causes that have been once passed upon and determined.

(B) Directing Reopening of Judgment. Nor has the legislature any authority to direct the courts to reopen judgments and decrees for the purpose of retrial and rehearing in cases that have been passed upon and judicially determined.[50] But if the act merely authorizes a reopening and leaves all action with the discretion of the court it will be sustained.[51] And where the state has an interest in the subject-matter of a suit, a rehearing after the entry of judgment therein, it seems, may be authorized by statute.[52]
