VI. POLICE POWER.

A. Definition.[60] Police power is the name given to that inherent sovereignty which it is the right and duty of the government or its agents to exercise whenever public policy in a broad sense demands, for the benefit of society at large, regulations to guard its morals, safety, health, order, or to insure in any respect such economic conditions as an advancing civilization of a highly complex character requires.[61] fers judicial powers on the registrar contrary to the constitution providing that they be vested in certain courts); Bissell v. Heath, 98 Mich. 472, 57 N. W. 585 (powers of receiver of an insolvent bank).

60. An attempt to define the term "police power" either accurately or satisfactorily is sometimes attended with no little difficulty, and it has been said by a learned jurist that "it is much easier to perceive and realize the existence and sources of this power, than to mark its boundaries, or prescribe limits to its exercise." Shaw, C. J., in Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 53, 85 [quoted in Rochester v. West, 29 N. Y. App. Div. 125, 127, 51 N. Y. Suppl. 482].

"The police power of the State, so far, has not received a full and complete definition. It may be said, however, to be the right of the State, or State functionary, to prescribe regulations for the good order, peace, health, protection, comfort, convenience and morals of the community, which do not encroach on a like power vested in Congress by the federal constitution, or which do not violate any of the provisions of the organic law." Champer v. Greencastle, 138 Ind. 339, 351, 35 N. E. 14, 46 Am. St. Rep. 390, 24 L. R. A. 768.

61. Other definitions are: "A power which inheres in the State and in each political division thereof to protect by such restraints and regulations as are reasonable and proper the lives, health, comfort and property of its citizens." Rochester v. West, 29 N. Y. App. Div. 125, 128, 51 N. Y. Suppl. 482.

"As understood in American constitutional law, means simply the power to impose such restrictions upon private rights as are practically necessary for the general welfare of all." State v. Wagener, 77 Minn. 483, 494, 80 N. W. 633, 778, 1134, 77 Am. St. Rep. 681, 46 L. R. A. 442.

"Nothing more or less than the powers of government inherent in every sovereignty, . . . that is to say, . . . the power to govern men and things." In re License Cases, 5 How. (U. S.) 504, 583, 12 L. ed. 256 [quoted in Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77].

"The power of the state, . . . to prescribe regulations to promote the health, peace, morals, education and good order of the people." Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 5 S. Ct. 357, 28 L. ed. 923.

"The power vested in the legislature by the constitution, to make, ordain and establish all manner of wholesome and reasonable laws, statutes and ordinances, either with penalties or without, not repugnant to the constitution, as they shall judge to be for the good and welfare of the commonwealth and of the subjects of the same." Per Shaw, C. J., in Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 53, 85 [quoted in Com. v. Bearse, 132 Mass. 542, 546, 42 Am. Rep. 450 note, where it is said: "No exposition has been given of this power more thorough and satisfactory, or more often quoted with approval than that of Chief Justice Shaw"].

Police is, in general, a system of precaution, either for the prevention of crime or of calamities. Its business may be distributed into eight distinct branches: (1) Police for the prevention of offenses; (2) police for the prevention of calamities; (3) police for the prevention of epidemic diseases; (4) police of charity; (5) police of interior communications; (6) police of public amusements; (7) police for recent intelligence; (8) police for registration. Commissioners of Canals & Locks Co. v. Willamette Transp., etc., Co., 6 Oreg. 222.

"The police of a State, in a comprehensive sense, embraces its system of internal regulation, by which it is sought not only to preserve the public order and to prevent offenses against the State, but also to establish, for the intercourse of citizen with citizen, those rules of good manners and good neighborhood which are calculated to prevent a conflict of rights, and to insure to each the uninterrupted enjoyment of his own, so far as it is reasonably consistent with a like enjoyment of rights by others." Cooley Const.

B. Nature and Scope. This power extends to the protection of the lives, health, comfort, and quiet of all persons, and the protection of all property within the state,[62] and the mere fact that a law, necessary for the welfare of society, regulates trade or business, or to some degree operates as a restraint thereon, does not make it unconstitutional.[63] So too it may substantially interfere with the enjoyment of private property;[64] but there must be some obvious and real connection between the actual provisions of police measures and their assumed purpose; the legislature cannot, under the guise of such regulations, arbitrarily invade personal rights or private property;[65] and cannot at will impose upon property burdens so excessive as to work a confiscation thereof.[66]

Application to patented property.— Where, by the application of the invention or discovery for which letters patent have been granted by the United States, tangible property comes into existence, its use is to the same extent as that of any other species of property subject within the several states to the control which they may respectively impose in the legitimate exercise of their police powers over their purely domestic affairs. So the state might properly enforce a statute regulating the use of oils considered by the state inspector as unsafe for illuminating purposes; and this, although patent-rights for the manufacture of oil had been granted by the United States. Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U. S. 501, 24 L. ed. 1115.

Police regulations are not a taking under the right of eminent domain, or a deprivation of property without due process of law. Thus a prohibition upon the use of property for purposes that are declared by valid legislation to be injurious to the health, morals, or safety of the community cannot, in any sense, be deemed a taking or an appropriation of property for the public benefit, as such legislation does not disturb the owner in the control or use of his property for lawful purposes, nor restrict his right to dispose of it. It is only a declaration by the state that its use by any one for certain forbidden purposes is prejudicial to the public interests, the exercise of the police power by the destruction of the property, which is itself a public nuisance, or the prohibition of its use in a particular way, whereby its value becomes depreciated, is very different from taking property for public use, or from depriving a person of his property without due process of law. C. Authority to Exercise. The government of the United States being one of enumerated powers, the non-enumerated powers being reserved to the states,[67] it follows that this power not having been delegated to the federal government, was left with the individual states and belongs to them by virtue of their general sovereignty[68] and has no limitations or restrictions except such as are found in the constitution;[69] but the states must recognize this limitation, the federal power being paramount within the scope of its enumerated powers.[70] And while federal police powers cannot be exercised within the states by congressional legislation,[71] it may be said that the federal government doubtless has a power over its own property analogous to the police power of the several states.[72] A legislature cannot, by any contract, divest itself of its police power, the maxim

To be valid as police regulations, laws must be necessary to the preservation of the health, comfort, morals, order, or safety of the community; and no law prohibiting that which is harmless in itself, or commanding that to be done which does not tend to promote the health, safety, or welfare of society will be sustained. Ex p. Whitwell, 98 Cal. 73, 32 Pac. 870, 35 Am. Ct. 864, 42 L. ed. 260, holding that the federal government might, when found necessary for the protection of the public or of intending settlers, forbid all inclosures of public lands, although the alternate sections of private lands were thereby rendered less available for pasturage.

Salus populi suprema lex necessarily applying;[73] but it may delegate its power and jurisdiction to courts, municipalities, or committees to adopt police measures.[74]

D. Who Subject to. All natural persons within the state, and all corporations doing business within the state or created thereby, hold their property and engage in their business subject to the police power of the state.[75]

E. Particular Applications — 1. In General. Generally speaking it may be said that the proper authorities may control practices in the operation of all business which endanger the public welfare and safety;[76] but only such regulations will be sustained as in fact are necessary for the safety and comfort of the public, and the courts will declare arbitrary provisions invalid.[77]

2. Articles of Personal Consumption or Use. The legislature or its delegated agents may regulate the conditions of production and distribution of articles of food and take steps to control adulteration;[78] may determine in what

73. Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 25, 33, 24 L. ed. 989, where the court said: "The plaintiff in error boldly takes the ground that, being a Corporation, it has a right, by contract, to manufacture and sell beer forever, notwithstanding and in spite of any exigencies which may occur in the morals or the health of the community, requiring such manufacture to cease. We do not so understand the rights of the plaintiff. The Legislature had no power to confer any such rights. Whatever differences of opinion may exist as to the extent and boundaries of the police power, and however difficult it may be to render a satisfactory definition of it, there seems to be no doubt that it does extend to the protection of the lives, health and property of the citizens, and to the preservation of good order and the public morals. The Legislature cannot, by any contract, divest itself of the power to provide for these objects. They belong emphatically to that class of objects which demand the application of the maxim, Salus populi suprema lex; and they are to be attained and provided for by such appropriate means as the legislative discretion may devise. That discretion can no more be bargained away than the power itself. Boyd v. Alabama, 94 U. S. 645, 24 L. ed. 302."

A city, town, or village can only exercise such police power as is fairly included in the grants of power by its charter. And where certain acts are made criminal by the state law and are fully covered thereby, a city can punish only such acts as would be attended with circumstances of aggravation not included in the state law. So the carrying of deadly weapons, being an offense fully provided for and punished by law, and being an act not in itself amounting to a breach of the peace, cannot be made an offense and punished by municipal ordinance, unless expressly authorized by the municipal charter. in the interest of the public health hours of labor within certain limits may be controlled by the legislature.[98]

4. In Interest of Public Morals. It is also a proper exercise of police power to regulate and prohibit gambling;[99] to regulate lotteries, either by stringent measures against those having lottery tickets in their possession, or other steps necessary to stamp out the traffic;[1] to control the owning, letting, keeping, or frequenting of buildings or other places used for bawdy-houses or for other lewd or indecent purposes;[2] to regulate the display, sale, or distribution of immoral literature;[3] and to regulate entertainments given in places of amusement, by nure, or other substances not in themselves nuisances, but which if allowed to accumulate in unreasonable quantities would become such, or which may be utilized for some beneficial purpose. Such an attempted exercise of power is an invasion of the personal and property rights of citizens, in restraint of trade, and unnecessarily creates a monopoly. Iler v. Ross, (Nebr. 1902) 90 N. Co., 59 Conn. 63, 20 Atl. 17 (where the legislature, to remove a dangerous grade crossing of the tracks of two railroads by a street in the city of Hartford, appointed, by resolution of April 4, 1884, a commission and empowered it to order the carrying of the tracks over the street and to order the railroad companies or either of them to lay out and maintain a new line or lines of railway for a distance not exceeding half a mile on each side of the street and within three hundred feet of the center line of the existing tracks, and to require all surface tracks within those limits to be removed, to direct by whom, when, and how the work should be done, to apportion the expense among the parties, but not exceeding one half to the city, and to apply to any court of competent jurisdiction for aid in the enforcement of its orders. It was held that (1) This action was a valid exercise of the police power of the state, since the states are intrusted with the duty of enacting and maintaining all the internal regulations necessary for the protection of the lives, health, and comfort of their people and for the security of their rights; (2) The legislature may validly delegate power and jurisdiction to courts and committees to adopt measures to prevent all things hurtful make them responsible for losses caused by neglect so to do;[9] enact ordinances for the prevention of and protection from fires, as by the establishment of fire limits;[10] and prescribe reasonable and bona fide building regulations.[11]

7. To Trades, Professions, and Business — a. On Ground of Nuisance — (1) Rule Stated. The limitations upon the police power are frequently to be determined by the answer to the query whether a nuisance as generally understood upon the legal principles of the law of nuisance exists, as the police power clearly extends to the prevention and abatement of nuisances;[12] but the legislature or its agents cannot, by the mere declaration that a certain business is a nuisance, exercise police power over it, if in fact it is not injurious or offensive to the community,[13] and in case of such an act it is the duty of the courts to declare the same unconstitutional.[14] The power to regulate many kinds of business does not, however, as appears from a leading case, rest upon the existence of a nuisance,[15] as many to the comfort and welfare of society; (3) The fact that a railroad was put to great expense was no ground for illegality; and (4) The act was not a taking of property for a public use); Chicago, etc., R. 15. Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77 [affirming 69 Ill. 80], where the following principles controlling business "clothed with a public interest" were laid down:

(1) When the owner of property devotes it to a use in which the public has an interest, he in effect grants to the public an interest in its use, and must, to the extent of that interest, submit to be controlled by the public, for the common good, as long as he maintains the use. He may withdraw his grant by discontinuing the use;

(2) In the exercise of this control it has been customary in the United States from its first colonization to regulate ferries, common carriers, hackmen, bakers, millers, wharfingers, innkeepers, and other similar employments, and in so doing to fix a maximum of charge to be made for services rendered, accommodations furnished, and articles sold;

(3) The case more particularly decided that an act of the general assembly of Illinois, entitled "An Act to regulate public warehouses, and the warehousing and inspecting of grain, and to give effect to article 13 of the constitution of this state" was not repugnant to the constitution of the United States; and that where warehouses are situated and business is carried on exclusively within the state, it may as a matter of domestic concern prescribe regulations for them, notwithstanding that they are used as instruments by those engaged in interstate, as well as state commerce; and that until kinds of business so peculiarly and intimately affect the public interest that whoever engages in any one of them in effect grants to the public an interest in the methods and instrumentalities employed therein.[16] Aside from these considerations, however, the right to use property in the prosecution of any business which is not injurious or offensive to the community at large or to persons within its vicinity is one of the legal attributes of ownership of property of which the owner cannot be deprived by any state law or municipal ordinance.[17]

(II) Applications of Rule. The state may regulate or prohibit the transaction of business in such ways and places that noise,[18] smoke, dust,[19] odors,[20] and congress acts in reference to their interstate relations, such regulations can be enforced, even though they may indirectly operate upon commerce beyond her immediate jurisdiction.

16. Mr. Cooley justly pointed out that it was not very clear what circumstances affect property with a public interest. "In the following cases we should say that property in business was affected with a public interest. 1. Where the business is one the following of which is not of right, but is permitted by the state as a privilege or franchise. Under this head would be comprised the business of setting up lotteries, of giving shows, etc., of keeping billiard tables for hire, and of selling intoxicating drinks when the sale by unlicensed parties is forbidden; also the cases of toll-bridges, etc. 2. Where the state on public grounds renders to the business special assistance, by taxation or otherwise. 3. Where, for the accommodation of the business some special use is allowed to be made of public property or of a private easement. 4. Where exclusive privileges are granted in consideration of some special return to be made to the public. Possibly there may be other cases." Cooley Const. Lim. (5th ed.) 737, 739.

A. 493 (holding that an act aimed solely at commission merchants who engage in the business of selling farm produce for producers upon commission, which requires them to execute a bond in the penal sum of five thousand dollars, conditioned for the faithful performance of their contracts, and to pay a license-fee is unconstitutional, since it is class legislation, and an unjustifiable interference with the right of citizens to carry on legitimate business); In re Hong Wah, 82 Fed. 623 (holding unconstitutional a city ordinance providing that it should be unlawful for any person to maintain a public laundry within the city, except in designated localities, and declaring that any such laundry established or carried on in violation of this provision was a public nuisance and a violation of the ordinance a misdemeanor).

Impairment of franchise.—"The police power of the State comprehends all those general laws of internal regulation which are necessary to secure the peace, good order, health, and comfort of society," but the proper limit in its bearing upon chartered rights and privileges of private corporations for public uses would seem to be this: That the legislature may at all times regulate the exercise of the corporate franchise, by general laws passed in good faith for the legitimate ends contemplated by the state police power, that is, for the peace, good order, health, comfort, and welfare of society, but it cannot, under the color of such laws, destroy or impair the franchise itself, nor any of those rights or powers which are essential to the beneficial exercise of it. St. Rep. 233, where it is said that the legislature, under the police power, may in proper cases require railroad companies whose roads cross to meet each other, to construct such switches, sidetracks, and connections as will enable them to transport cars to and from each other's lines. Such regulations do not amount to a taking of the companies' property for which compensation must be provided.

W. 962, in which case the plaintiff operated a grain warehouse in a village in Minnesota in which no grain was stored but his own, which was purchased of the farmers at the warehouse, where the grain was delivered, and weighed and graded by him on his own scales and with his own appliances. It was held that the business so carried on was of such a public character and so affected with public interest that the legislature might require persons operating such a warehouse to take out a license therefor, as provided in Minn. Gen. Laws (1895), c. 148. And as the statute applied to all of the class defined by its first section (namely, "all elevators and warehouses in which grain is received, stored, shipped or handled, and which are situated on the right of way of any railroad, depot grounds, or any lands acquired or reserved by any railway company in this state to be used in connection with its line of railway at any station or siding in this state, other than at terminal points) it was not invalid by reason of its non-application to those who own or operate warehouses not situated on the right of way of a railroad. Such a classification was not so unreasonable as to amount to denial of equal protection of the laws, nor was the requirement of a license a regulation of commerce among the states]; Budd v. New York, 143 U. Ct. 462, 33 L. ed. 970]. The latter is a leading case which held constitutional N. Y. Laws (1888), c. 581, fixing a maximum charge of five eighths of a cent per bushel for elevating, receiving, weighing, and discharging by means of floating or stationary elevators, in any city of the state containing a population of one hundred and thirty thousand or over, as well in its application to elevators owned by private individuals as to those owned by corporations having chartered privileges from the state, since the business carried on was affected with a public interest and a practical monopoly. And the further provision was sustained that in transferring grain to and from vessels and canal-boats, the charge for shoveling to the leg of the elevator when unloading, and for trimming cargo when loading, should be limited to the actual cost of the outside labor employed therein. And the fact that the elevators were largely employed in the transfer of grain which was in course of transportation from the western states to the seaboard did not render the act obnoxious as a regulation of interstate commerce. Limit on amount of license charge.—Where police regulation alone is the object of a license, there is a conflict among the authorities, as to the rule governing the amount which may be charged for such license. The nature of the occupation, trade, or profession has of necessity much to do with it. In the case of such as are useful and beneficial to the community, the license charged should not ordinarily be so great as in the case of those not so, especially when immoral in their nature or tendency. The weight of authority is that the amount exacted for a license, although designed for regulation and not for revenue, is not to be confined to the expense of issuing it, but that a reasonable compensation may be charged for the additional expense of supervision over the particular business or vocation, at the place where it is licensed. For this purpose, the services of officers may be required, and incidental expenses may be otherwise incurred in the faithful enforcement of such police inspection or superintendence. ## VII. PERSONAL, CIVIL, AND POLITICAL RIGHTS.

A. In General. The term "right" in civil society is defined to mean that which a person is entitled to have, to do, or to receive from others, within the limits prescribed by law.[36] The rights which are declared to be natural and inalienable, whose protection is guaranteed by the several constitutions, are such rights as are personal to the individual as a citizen of a free community, civil as distinguished from political, and belonging alike to every man, woman, and child;[37] they include the right of personal liberty, the right of personal security, and the right to acquire and enjoy property;[38] and are to be construed in every jurisdiction, with reference to what were considered the natural rights of men under the common law which existed at the adoption of the constitution.[39] Such rights, however, are not absolutely indefeasible, but are so unless or until the government, acting in pursuance of the constitution or some law passed pursuant thereto, requires their surrender in consideration of the public welfare or safety.[40] Constitutional provisions for the security of person or property should be liberally construed.[41] The first ten amendments to the federal constitution commonly known as the "Bill of Rights," guaranteeing protection to certain rights of the people, are limited in their application to the federal government,[42] and were not intended to lay down any novel principles of government, but simply embodied certain guaranties and immunities which we had inherited from our English ancestors, and which had from time immemorial been subject to well-recognized exceptions, arising from the necessities of the case. The exceptions have continued to be recognized as if formally expressed.[43]

2. Involuntary Servitude. The constitutional provision that there shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude except as a punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, does not prevent the enactment of a law providing for imprisonment for contempt of court;[48] providing that persons committed to jail may be employed at labor;[49] requiring the performance of labor in lieu of taxes;[50] providing that if a laborer without just cause fails to perform the labor according to contract he shall be liable to fine or imprisonment;[51] granting exclusive rights to carry on certain kinds of business, when they are necessary and proper to effectuate a purpose which has in view the public good;[52] or preventing the immigration of negroes.[53] Nor does it invalidate a covenant in a deed of land in fee by which a grantee covenants for himself, his heirs and assigns, to pay a perpetual yearly rent.[54] The provisions against involuntary servitude do not apply to such services as have from time immemorial been treated as exceptional.[55] This exception to the general rule

3. Imprisonment For Debt[57] — a. In General. Whether or not a particular commitment is an imprisonment for debt depends entirely upon the construction o be placed upon the articles in the several state constitutions prohibiting imprisonment for debt, and the statutes passed for the purpose of carrying out such constitutional inhibition. Congress, by the act of March 2, 1867, adopted the modifications, conditions, and restrictions upon imprisonment for debt then existng by the laws of the several states, and the course of proceedings which might hereafter be adopted therein.[58] As a general rule it may be stated that this prohibition applies only to obligations growing out of contracts, and does not apply o cases of tort or cases of a criminal nature.[59]

b. Indiana.— Baker v. State, 109 Ind. 47, 9 N. proceedings.[68] It has also been held that imprisonment for non-payment of costs of one instituting a criminal prosecution without probable cause is not imprisonment for debt.[69]

e. Obligations in the Nature of Taxes. Taxes, not being founded on contract, do not establish the relation of debtor and creditor between the taxpayer and the state, and therefore are not debts within the constitutional prohibition.[70]

f. Enforcing Orders and Decrees of Court — (I) In General. The constitutional prohibition of imprisonment for debt does not take away the power of the judge to commit to jail for contempt,[71] or for failure to pay a fine imposed for contempt;[72] but some cases hold that there must first be a conviction for contempt.[73]

(II) Refusal to Apply Non-Exempt Property to Satisfy Execution. Imprisonment for disobedience to an order, made in supplementary proceedings, requiring the debtor to apply his non-exempt property to the payment of the execution, is not imprisonment for debt.[74]

D. Religious Liberty and Freedom of Conscience — 1. In General. The federal constitution, providing that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof,"[80] makes no provisions for protecting citizens of the respective states in their religious liberties. That is left to the state to regulate, no inhibition being imposed by the federal constitution on the states in this respect.[81] Accordingly most of the state constitutions guarantee to the individual, irrespective of sect or denomination, protection of the rights of conscience and liberty to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience.[82]

2. Religious Exercises in Public Schools. This guaranty, however, does not prohibit the use of the bible in public schools or devotional exercises, provided the pupil is not required to join in any ceremony contrary to his or her religious opinions, or those of a parent or guardian;[83] but denominational religious exercises and instruction in sectarian doctrine in the public schools are prohibited.[84]

3. Competency of Atheist as Witness and Qualifications as Guardian. So too the provision of the constitution is not violated by the rejection of a witness as incompetent by reason of his want of religious belief.[85] But under an article providing that no person shall be molested for his opinions, be subject to any civil or political incapacity, or acquire any civil or political advantage in consequence of such opinions, it was held that a person cannot be removed from guardianship of minor children merely because he is an infidel.[86]

4. Police Power.[87] Laws enacted for the purpose of restraining and punishing acts which have a tendency to disturb the public peace or corrupt the public morals, even though such acts may have been done pursuant to, and in conformity with, what was believed at the time to be a religious duty, are not repugnant to the constitutional guaranty of religious freedom. For example, laws against parent, to be supported by the town, such parent shall be deemed a pauper, and be subject to the same rules and regulations as a pauper.

85. Thurston v. Whitney, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 104, 110. In this case the court (Wilde, J.) says: "This article has no reference to atheists, and to their competency as witnesses. It was intended to prevent persecution by punishing any one for his religious opinions, however erroneous they might be. But an atheist is without any religion, true or false. The disbelief in the existence of any God is not a religious, but an anti-religious, sentiment. If, however, it were otherwise, the rejection of a witness for such a disbelief or sentiment, as incompetent, would be no violation of this article of the constitution. It is not within its words or meaning." See, generally, Witnesses.

blasphemy,[88] bigamy,[89] and the playing upon drums and musical instruments in the streets.[90]

5. Legislation in Aid of Religion. The doctrine of religious freedom does not forbid legislation tending to promote religion, or even to advance the interests of a sect or class of religionists;[91] nor is it violated by a statute incorporating a church which had been an "established church" before the Revolution and confirming to it its rights to lands acquired by it as such.[92]

6. Disposition of Property. Nor does the doctrine of religious freedom limit a testator's right to prescribe the purposes for which his property shall be used, as a condition to a legacy.[93]

7. Sunday Laws. Laws against the desecration of the christian Sabbath by labor or sports have been enacted in practically all the states. The constitutionality of such laws has been long established[94] and is not affected by the fact that they may work hardship upon persons whose conscience requires them to observe another day as their Sabbath, or upon persons whose religious sentiments lead them to believe it their duty to labor on the Sabbath.

91. Ex p. Andrews, 18 Cal. 678; Hale v. Everett, 53 N. H. 9, 16 Am. Rep. 82. The latter case was decided under an article in the constitution (part 1, art. 6) which permits the legislature to authorize the several towns, parishes, bodies corporate, or religious societies within this State to make adequate provisions, at their own expense, for the support and maintenance of public protestant teachers of piety, religion, and morality; but not to tax those of other sects or denominations for their support. The court held that this constitutional provision did not forbid the legislature to authorize such towns, parishes, etc., to make provision for the support of any other religious teachers besides protestants.

In Illinois it has been held that a statute granting the temporary use of school-houses for religious meetings and Sunday-schools does not violate a constitutional provision to the effect that no one shall be compelled to support a place of worship, and that no preference shall be given by law to any religious denomination or mode of worship. E. Pursuit of Happiness. The right to the pursuit of happiness is guaranteed by the state constitutions and declared to be one of the inalienable rights of individuals. Under these provisions the individual right of self-control can be limited only to that extent which is necessary to promote the general welfare;[95] but if the general welfare requires the prohibition of an act, it may be prohibited even though it does not involve direct and immediate injury to any other than the person who commits it.[96] Included in this right is the right to liberty in the choice of occupation,[97] and to conduct and advertise it in any legitimate manner, subject only to the restraints necessary to secure the common welfare.[98]

F. Right to Acquire, Hold, and Dispose of Property — 1. In General. The right to acquire, hold, and dispose of property is declared by the constitution to be inherent in the individual and inalienable. and may even totally prohibit individuals from engaging in either the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors.[14]

6. REGISTRATION ACTS. The property rights guaranteed by the constitutions are not infringed by provisions made for the reasonable protection of purchasers of property, such as is afforded by registration acts.[15]

7. LICENSE-TAXES. Neither are such rights infringed by an act authorizing cities to impose license-taxes on business occupations.[16]

8. PROHIBITING PEDDLING. Nor are they violated by laws making reasonable regulations for the use of streets of cities or of towns, although they indirectly interfere with the purchase and sale of goods.[17]

9. REGULATING DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY BY WILL. The right to dispose of property by will is a legislative, not a natural, right. Hence the legislature has power to prescribe the formalities to be observed in the execution of a will, and the condition to which it shall be subject.[18]

10. CREATION OF LIENS AND OTHER INVOLUNTARY LIABILITIES. Statutes giving mechanics' liens upon real or personal property, for work done or materials furnished to the owner or his agent, are not in violation of the property rights guaranteed by the constitutions.[19] But statutes which have given such liens to subcontractors and laborers have been held to be void.[20]

But in Clinton v. Phillips, 58 Ill. 102, 11 Am. Rep. 52, however, a city ordinance prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors, and permitting druggists to sell the same for sacramental, chemical, mechanical, or medical purposes, but requiring them under a heavy penalty to furnish to the city clerk a statement in writing of the kind and quantity thereof, and when and to whom sold, verified by the oath of every servant in the druggist's employ, was held to be an invasion of the sanctity of private business.

statutes allowing municipalities to aid (by subscribing for stock) in the construction of railroads and similar improvements, which, by terminating in or running through the municipality, or by being links in lines or routes of transportation that do thus terminate or run, will, as it is supposed, benefit the municipality, and to tax private property for this purpose, are constitutional and valid.[21]

12. CIVIL DAMAGE ACTS. The fundamental rights of private property guaranteed by the constitution are not violated by statutes which provide for the recovery of damages for the death of a person in certain cases by any person dependent on the deceased for support.[22]

13. RESTRAINTS OF MARRIED WOMEN. The legislature may, however, it is held, impose limitations upon the rights of married women in connection with property.[23]

G. Freedom of Speech and of the Press — 1. IN GENERAL. The constitution of the United States and the state constitutions guarantee the right of freedom of speech and liberty of the press, and congress has power, under the fourteenth amendment, to protect this right by appropriate legislation.[24] Most of the constitutions, however, provide expressly that persons exercising this freedom shall be responsible for its abuse; and even where there is no such provision in the constitution, it is universally conceded that there is some limitation of the right of free speech and free press. Such limitation is fixed by common-law principles and statutory declarations of the police power.[25]

2. LIBEL AND SLANDER. Accordingly libel laws and the punishment of libel and slander do not infringe this constitutional right.[26]

3. STATUTORY PROHIBITIONS. Nor do statutes required to protect the public morals or general welfare of the people infringe this constitutional right.[27]

4. Contempt. The constitutional guaranty presents no barrier to the exercise by courts of power to punish as for contempt one who publishes improper articles concerning a case in litigation.[28]

5. Injunctions to Prevent Abuse of the Right. It is still, however, uncertain whether the attempt to prevent rather than to punish abuses of speech or publication is constitutional.[29]

6. Private Contracts. The constitutional guaranty does not prohibit individuals voluntarily contracting among themselves for a limitation of their constitutional right.[30]

7. Regulating Use of Public Places. Nor does this constitutional guaranty prevent the government regulating the use of places wholly within its control.[31]

8. Taxing and Licensing. Nor does this constitutional guaranty prevent taxing newspapers or licensing any occupation which the general welfare requires to be under the control of the government.[32]

Limits of rule.— In Storey v. People, 79 Ill. 45, 22 Am. Rep. 158, it was held that the right to criticize judicial conduct is included in the right of free speech and free press. And a statute making certain provisions for the confinement of the insane, and their detention until discharged in one of certain modes, none of which could be resorted to by the person confined directly, as of right, in his own behalf, was held to be unconstitutional in In re Doyle, 16 R. I. 537, 18 Atl. 159, 27 Am. St. Rep. 759, 5 L. R. A. 359. So in Ex p. Neill, 32 Tex. Crim. 275, 22 S. W. 923, 40 Am. St. Rep. 776, a city ordinance declaring a certain newspaper a public nuisance and forbidding its sale in the city was held to be unconstitutional. In Re Jackson, 96 U. S. 727, 24 L. ed. 877, it was held that regulations against transporting in the mail printed matter which is open to examination cannot be enforced so as to interfere in any manner with the freedom of the press. Liberty of circulating is essential to that freedom. When therefore printed matter is excluded from the mail, its transportation in any other way cannot be forbidden by congress.

H. Right of Assembly and Petition — 1. IN GENERAL. The right of assembly and petition is guaranteed by the constitutions, which secure to every person, natural or artificial, the right to apply to any department of the government for the redress of grievances, or the bestowal of a right, and also guarantee the enjoyment of such redress or right, when obtained, free from all penalty for having sought or obtained it.[33] This right does not relieve the persons joining in a petition from responsibility for charges made therein.[34] It is not violated by ordinances or rules making reasonable regulations for the use of places within the control of the government.[35]

2. SCOPE OF CONSTITUTIONAL GUARANTY. The first amendment to the national constitution, prohibiting congress from abridging the right to assemble and petition, was not intended to limit the action of the state governments in respect to their own citizens, but to operate upon the national government alone, guaranteeing the continuance of the right only against congressional interference.[36]

VIII. VESTED RIGHTS.

A. Definition. Rights are vested when the right to enjoyment, present or prospective, has become the property of some particular person or persons as a present interest.[37]

B. Power to Divest. A state has no right to divest vested rights,[38] whether such attempt be made by legislative enactment[39] or by a change in the constitution of the state.[40] If an act is within the legislative power, however, it is not a valid objection to it that it divests vested rights. Retrospective laws[41] divesting vested rights, unless ex post facto[42] or impairing the obligations of contracts,[43] are not within the prohibition of the United States constitution, however repugnant to the principles of sound legislation.[44]

C. How Divested — 1. Destruction of Property. Vested rights may be divested not only by a change of the title to the property, but also by the destruction of the property itself.[45]

2. Forfeiture and Transfer by State. Vested rights may be divested by forfeiture[46] and transfer of private property by the state.[47]

D. Application to Particular Rights — 1. In General. The term "vested rights" relates to property rights only,[48] and does not apply to personal rights. There is therefore no vested right in requirements for admission to the bar,[49] in a certificate of identification,[50] or in the right of a parent to the custody of children.[51] So there is no vested right in exemptions from public service,[52] such as jury duty,[53] military service,[54] or working on public roads.[55] Moreover there can be no vested right to do wrong, none to violate a moral duty, or to resist the performance of a moral obligation.[56] So too there can be no vested right in an existing law, which precludes its change or repeal, nor in any omission to legislate which will exempt a contract from the effect of subsequent legislation upon its subject-matter by competent legislative authority.[57]

b. Administration Proceedings.[59] Neither the personal representatives of a decedent nor his creditors obtain such an interest in his real estate on his death as precludes the legislature from repealing statutes authorizing sales to be made by executors or administrators for the payment of debts.[60] So a statute as to priority of payment out of the assets of a decedent is merely a direction to the administrator, and may be changed by the legislature at any time.[61]

c. Public improvements.— Complainants, lot-owners, were served with certain notice to rebuild their walk within thirty days. They let a contract for a new tar walk and proceeded to provide a foundation therefor. Before anything further was done, and only a few days later, the common council passed an ordinance which had been pending, extending the stone-walk district so as to cover complainants' lots. Complainants were immediately notified that they must build a stone walk in accordance with the ordinance. The work done on the foundation of the tar walk could have been utilized for the stone walk. It was held that complainants acquired no vested rights to construct a tar walk. Scribner v. Grand Rapids, 119 Mich. 188, 77 N. W. 699.

Time of sale.— An act limiting the time within which real estate of a decedent may be sold to pay debts or claims against him, not liens before his death, is not unconstitutional merely because a case might occur in which a creditor would lose his right of recourse to the real estate, as this could hardly occur without dilatoriness on the part of the creditor. In re Ackerman, 33 Minn. 54, 21 N. improvements cannot be divested of that right by a repeal of the act.[63] The legislature may also prospectively determine that a tenant for life shall have the right to make permanent improvements upon the estate and receive compensation for the value of them, although a retroactive law to that effect would be unconstitutional as an impairment of vested rights.[64]

d. Exemption Laws. The exemption privileges of a debtor are not vested rights.[65] Thus a homestead exemption is not such a vested right as cannot be impaired by subsequent legislation.[66] Again an exemption from taxation does not confer a vested right. It may therefore be modified by the legislature.[67]

e. Insolvency Laws. An insolvent has no vested right to a discharge on filing a petition, and therefore acts passed after the petition is filed providing a discharge in insolvency shall be refused on certain conditions are constitutional;[68]

An act which gives the occupying claimant the option either to take the land and pay the amount of its valuation, without the improvement, or to take pay for his improvements, is unconstitutional as impairing vested rights. McCoy v. Grandy, 3 Ohio St. 463. But see Leighton v. Young, 52 Fed. 439, 3 C. C. A. 176, 18 L. R. A. 266, holding that a statute providing that a successful plaintiff in ejectment shall at his election either pay the occupant the present value of his improvements or convey title to him and receive in return the value of the land as of the date at which the occupant entered thereon is a valid exercise of legislative power. W. 238, holding that under the occupying claimant's law the failure of the claimant to pay into court the assessed value of the occupant's improvements within one year from the rendition of the verdict or finding in favor of such claimant not only barred his remedy, but extinguished his right of property, the title to which thereafter vested in the adverse occupant, although no judgment had been entered in the action. Hence a law, amendatory of this law, and providing for payment within one year from the entry of the judgment, in so far as it is made to apply retroactively to such cases, is invalid.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Constitutional Law," § 206; and, generally, TAXATION.

Inheritance tax.— An act subjecting property to a collateral inheritance tax, although applicable by its terms to property of a decedent who died before its passage, is not unconstitutional. Short's Estate, 16 Pa. St. 63. See also Matter of Vanderbilt, 50 N. Y. App. Div. 246, 63 N. Y. Suppl. 1079, holding that an act imposing a tax on the right to succession derived from the exercise of a power of appointment, created before such act was passed, did not deprive the appointees of any vested right.

68. In re Lane, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 213, holding that acts refusing a discharge in insol-

and statutes providing that every sale or conveyance made by a debtor within a certain period before an assignment for the benefit of creditors shall be void if such debtor was insolvent at the time are not unconstitutional as impairing vested rights.[69]

f. Laws Authorizing Sale of Land. The legislature may pass acts authorizing the sale of land and interests therein, in cases where it is necessary for the quieting of titles and for the benefit of those concerned if no vested rights are impaired.[70] Thus an act authorizing the sale of the real estate of a minor, where the interest of such minor will be promoted by the sale, does not impair or lessen the property of the minor, but merely authorizes a change in the character of the estate.[71] So the legislature has the power to authorize a sale of property in which there is an estate in expectancy contingent on the happening of certain events.[72]

g. Laws Changing Nature and Tenure of Estates. The legislature has no power to alter or destroy by statute the nature or tenure of estates.[73] So where a vency where a debtor has given a preference within a certain time before petition filed are constitutional. See, generally, INSOLVENCY.

Preferences to employees.— An act providing that when the business of any person shall be suspended by the action of creditors, debts owing to employees not exceeding fifty dollars each, for work done within the six months next preceding the seizure of the property, shall be treated as preferred debts is not unconstitutional. An act validating previous sales of land by executors under powers in wills probated in other states is a proper exercise of legislative power. De Zbranikov v. Burnett, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 442, 31 S. W. 71.

As against an heir or devisee who is sui juris an act authorizing the sale of an estate by an administrator or executor is invalid, as the estate is vested and subject to the owner's control (Brenham v. Story, 39 Cal. 179; Kneass' Appeal, 31 Pa. St. 87), unless such statute was in force at the time the intestate or testator died, in which case the property of the heir or devisee vests subject to this power (In re Porter, 129 Cal. 86, 61 Pac. 659).

Defunct corporation.— A law authorizing the sale of lands of a corporation which had dissolved is not unconstitutional as depriving a person of possible reverter. Bass v. Roanoke Nav., etc., Co., 111 N. C. 439, 16 S. E. 402, 19 L. R. A. 247.

Insolvent estates.— A special act of the legislature authorizing administrators of an insolvent estate to convey lands in payment of debts is not unconstitutional. Langdon v. Strong, 2 Vt. 234.

Joint tenancy, tenancy in common, or coparcenary.— An act authorizing the superior court as a court of equity, to order a sale of any real estate and of any rights therein, held in joint tenancy, tenancy in common, or coparcenary, whenever partition cannot be conveniently made in any other way, and to distribute the proceeds, is not unconstitutional, as destroying any vested rights in such real estate, since it merely affords a reasonable remedy for its enjoyment by partition. St. 479, holding that where under the provisions of the law the testator's property passed to the heirs subject to an easement in a religious corporation, under which it was entitled to use a part of the property for a certain religious purpose, an act authorizing the courts to direct the sale of land, and with the proceeds purchase a more suitable place for religious meetings, was unconstitutional, as destroying vested rights of heirs. See, generally, ESTATES.

Estate tail.— A special act authorizing the sale of certain lands in which an estate tail was limited is constitutional. Comstock v. Gay, 51 Conn. 45; Carroll v. Olmsted, 16 Ohio 251; De Mill v. Lockwood, 3 Blatchf. (U. S.) 56, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3,782.

Life-estate and remainder.— Provisions for a proceeding by the owner of a life-estate in possession to have the same sold with the estate in remainder, in so far as they apply to estates created subsequent to their passage, are not unconstitutional as invading the rights of private property. Nimmons v. Westfall, 33 Ohio St. 213. See also Gillespie v. Allison, 115 N. C. 542, 20 S. E. 627, holding that an act providing that the existence of a life-estate in land shall not bar a sale for partition does not impair the rights of a remainderman whose interest in the land was acquired before the passage of the act.

right[74] or title has once been acquired by adverse possession it cannot be taken away, either by the repeal of the statute limiting the time within which a suit for the recovery of the premises is barred,[75] or by a change in the requirements necessary to constitute adverse possession.[76] Again while an act of the legislature curing a prior defective conveyance is valid as against the owner, his heirs or assigns,[77] it cannot affect the title of a subsequent bona fide purchaser, since it would operate to divest vested rights.[78] The legislature, however, has the power to change a joint tenancy into a tenancy in common as the value of an estate is thereby increased.[79]

h. Laws Regulating Medium of Payment. Where the medium of payment

By statutes of interpretation.—A legislative interpretation changing titles, founded on existing statutes, is subject to every objection which lies to an ex post facto law, since it would destroy the rights already acquired under the former statutes by one made subsequent to the time when they become vested. But see McAuliff v. Parker, 10 Wash. 141, 38 Pac. 744, holding that adverse possession for ten years after passage of Wash. Code (1881) is sufficient to bar recovery, although the right of action accrued prior thereto, when the statute required adverse possession for twenty years.

Right to set-off.— An act giving a bona fide occupant of land under an adverse claim of title the right to set off the value of all permanent improvements made by him on good faith is not unconstitutional as interfering with vested rights. Mills v. Geer, 111 Ga. 275, 36 S. E. 673, 52 L. R. A. 934.

77. Assignee with notice.— Where a mortgage trust deed was given to a foreign corporation which had no legal capacity to take it the mortgagor's assignee of the equitable interest under the deed, thus having notice of the equities of the parties, acquires no such vested right as will defeat the application of an act which retrospectively validated the mortgage by endowing the mortgagee with legal capacity to take it. U. S. Mortgage Co. v. Gross, 93 Ill. 483.

Rights of persons applying for passage of act.— An act curing an invalid deed is not unconstitutional if it affects the vested rights of no person except those who applied for its passage. Caverow v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co., 52 Pa. St. 287.

Rights acquired after passing of validating act.— An act validating defective acknowledgments of deeds does not impair the rights of a person acquiring a lien on the premises conveyed after the taking effect of the act. Ferguson v. Williams, 58 Iowa 717, 13 N. W. 49. Nor does an attachment made after the recording of a mortgage but prior to the passage of the curative act give a vested right which will prevent such act taking effect. is designated by statute the right to receive it is a vested right, and an act providing for payment in another medium is unconstitutional.[80]

i. Laws Regulating and Taxing Trades and Professions. There is no infringement of vested rights by acts regulating and taxing trades and professions,[81] where such acts are a valid exercise of the police power of a sovereignty.[82] Therefore acts regulating the practice of medicine,[83] the sale of liquor,[84] and the business of plumbing,[85] as well as laws imposing a license-tax on attorneys[86] and theaters[87] are constitutional. Such acts, however, must be confined to police power and not deprive individuals or corporations of any of their essential rights and privileges.[88]

j. Lien Laws. Acts creating a lien cannot be construed retroactively because they would defeat vested rights.[89] But in the case of purely remedial statutes, where no alteration in the right is proposed further than to give an additional remedy there is no objection on the ground of divesting vested rights.[90] A lien

See, generally, CORPORATIONS.

Forfeiture without notice.— A statute providing for the licensing of foreign corporations to do business in the state on certain conditions, and for forfeiting and revoking such a license for condition broken, is not unconstitutional as disturbing vested rights, in that it does not provide for notice to the company to be affected by the revocation or allow it a hearing. Making corporations guilty of conspiracy. —An act providing that any corporation or individual who shall enter into any pool or trust with any other corporation or individual to fix the price or premium to be paid for insuring property or to maintain prices when so fixed shall be deemed guilty of conspiracy and shall forfeit their rights to do business in the state does not deprive an in-the franchises and privileges of insolvent corporations,[95] as well as statutes requiring railroads to fence their tracks[96] and to construct crossings,[97] or regulating the rate of speed of railroad trains,[98] are constitutional.

(II) Franchises and Privileges. Where a grant of a franchise or privilege has been accepted and acted on by a corporation it becomes a vested right and cannot be subsequently impaired,[99] except by a valid exercise of the police power.[1] But where such a grant has not been acted on[2] or where acts remain to be performed before certain corporate powers granted to individuals can be exercised, the grant of the powers does not become a vested right till the acts are performed, and the franchise remains in abeyance.[3]

l. Property or Rights of States or Municipal Corporations and Vested Interests of Individuals Therein — (I) Of States. A retroactive law passed by a state legislature operating on property belonging to the state is not unconstitutional so long as private rights are not infringed.[4]

4. Lewis v. Turner, 40 Ga. 416; Union Parish Soc. v. Upton, 74 Me. 545, holding that legislation which diverts the proceeds of sales of lands reserved for public uses from the ministerial fund to the fund for public schools, in cases where the fee of the land has not vested in any beneficiary, is constitutional.

Allowing appeal against state.— A resolution of the general assembly, allowing an appeal to be taken against the state after expiration of the statutory time therefor, is constitutional, no private rights being impaired thereby. People v. Frisbee, 26 Cal. 135; State v. Dexter, 10 R. I. 341.

A grant of the right of the state to personal property is not unconstitutional, alchises of a municipality are not vested rights such as cannot be interfered with by the legislature,[5] unless rights of property have become vested thereunder.[6] Thus a general law which in its operation may change existing settlements of paupers, and thereby impose a new duty and charge on towns, is regarded as valid, since it does not impair private interests, and relates to a subject of public concern.[7]

(B) Disposition of Public Funds. The right of a municipality in the disposition of public funds is subject to legislative control.[8] The legislature may therefore divert funds payable to a county or municipality before they have been appropriated or any right acquired thereunder.[9]

(III) Bounties and Pensions. No person has a vested right to have a pension.[10] It is therefore competent for congress to provide that a person receiving a pension under a special act shall not receive in addition a pension under a general law,[11] and when a pension has been once granted the legislature may reduce or take it away entirely.[12] Nor has any person a vested right to a bounty [13] until it has been earned.[14]

(IV) Claimants and Creditors—(A) In General. Where rights have become vested in a claim against a municipality subsequent acts disallowing such claim are unconstitutional.[15] So where a state or municipality has collected [16] or been authorized to collect taxes to pay creditors whose rights have become fixed, such creditors have a vested right in the funds which cannot be affected by legislative act.[17] Again if bonds have been issued under authority given by statute, the subsequent repeal of such statute cannot affect the vested rights which a bona fide purchaser has acquired.[18]

(B) Corporations Granted Municipal Aid. When a statute authorizes the levy of taxes in aid of a corporation, a subsequent statute taking away such authority, is not unconstitutional as impairing a vested right in the corporation to have the benefit of the tax,[19] even though mandamus proceedings to compel payment have been begun.[20] But where rights of property have vested under such an act its repeal is inoperative.[21]

Application to purchase.— In Baty v. Sale, 43 Ill. 351, 92 Am. Dec. 128, it was held that an application to purchase land by a preëmptor under the federal laws created in him a vested right which was not taken away by the subsequent removal of the land-office from that district and the withdrawal of such lands from entry.

Requirements for title not fulfilled.— Under an act requiring land certificates to be located, surveyed, or patented only on vacant and unappropriated public domain, the holder of a certificate has no vested right to lands withdrawn from location and survey after the issue of his certificate, and before its location and survey. (xv) Support of Pauper. A pauper has no vested right to be supported in any particular place.[49]

m. Redemption Laws. A statute giving a debtor a right to redeem his property within a certain time after it has been taken on execution is a valid exercise of the legislative power to change remedies and process, when applied to contracts made after the adoption of the statute,[50] but when applied retrospectively is unconstitutional.[51] Where a person's right to redeem property sold has once vested a subsequent statute taking away such right or impairing it is unconstitutional.[52]

n. Registration Laws. Registration acts requiring the recording of deeds[53] or mortgages[54] within a reasonable time after their passage are not unconstitutional as impairing vested rights.

o. Rights Acquired by Marriage — (1) In General. Vested rights acquired by virtue of the law existing at the time of marriage cannot be disturbed by subsequent legislation.[55] So where rights acquired in the property of a wife under the law existing at the time of the marriage have become vested in her husband they cannot be impaired by legislative enactment.[56] A marriage does be for the advantage of the district to do so it might organize separate schools for colored children. The section was expressly repealed. It was held that the repealing act was not one affecting vested rights or in any way impairing the obligation of contracts.

49. Craftsbury v. Greensboro, 66 Vt. 585, 29 Atl. 1024, holding that an act placing the burden of supporting a pauper on a town other than the one in which he was residing at the time of its passage is not unconstitutional. See, generally, Poor Persons.

H. 387. Compare Tuolumne Redemption Co. v. Sedgwick, 15 Cal. 515, holding that an act taking away the debtor's right of redemption and making the sale absolute would be unobjectionable.

Imposing a penalty on the right of redemption.— An act requiring the owner of land sold for taxes, to be entitled to redeem, to pay the taxes that have been meanwhile paid by the purchaser and twenty-five per cent interest is void as to the excess of interest over seven per cent so far as it operates retrospectively. Lombard v. Antioch College, 60 Wis. 459, 19 N. W. 367.

Acts validating marriages.— An act declaring valid all marriages previously celebrated by an ordained minister does not impair vested rights. Goshen v. Stonington, 4 Conn. 209, 10 Am. Dec. 121.

Community property.— An act providing that a husband cannot convey community property without the written consent of his wife is unconstitutional as to community property acquired before its passage, in that it deprives the husband of a vested right. Spreckels v. Spreckels, 116 Cal. 339, 48 Pac. 228, 58 Am. St. Rep. 170, 36 L. R. A. 497.

Making property of a wife liable for family expenses.— An act making the property of a wife liable for family expenses does not deprive her of her vested rights, although it permits the seizure of property acquired before the passage of the act, as the exemption of the wife's property prior to the passage of the act was a mere privilege and not a property right. not, however, create in the husband a vested right in the property which his wife may afterward acquire so that an act securing to the wife's separate use all the property which she should acquire is not unconstitutional as to property conveyed to her after such act was passed.[57] And an act divesting a husband of all rights in his wife's chattels is not unconstitutional, as his right to the property is conditional until he has reduced it to possession.[58]

(II) Dower and Curtesy. The right of dower or curtesy is inchoate and contingent until the death of the husband or wife, and before that event is under the absolute control of the legislature,[59] unless rights of third parties have intervened.[60] Acts therefore confirming titles, where rights of dower have not been released, are constitutional.[61] Where, however, the right of dower or curtesy has once accrued it becomes a vested right which cannot be taken away by statute.[62]

(II) Creation of Cause of Action. The legislature cannot create a cause of action out of an existing transaction where there was none before.[66]

(III) Creation of Remedy to Enforce Existing Rights.[67] Where a right already exists for which there is no legal remedy the legislature may constitutionally provide one as no vested rights are thereby impaired.[68]

right thereto which the legislature may not take away or impair.[79] Nor does such right accrue until final judgment is rendered.[80] When, however, a penalty has once accrued under a statute it is a vested right which cannot be affected by the subsequent repeal of the statute.[81]

(VIII) PUNITIVE DAMAGES.[82] A plaintiff has no vested right to punitive damages until judgment is rendered[83] or until they have been assessed after verdict.[84]

(II) Altering Method of Executing Wills. The legislature has the power to prescribe rules for the execution of wills, whether made before or after the passage of the statute, if rights have not become vested by the testator's death.[90]

(III) Changing Rule of Inheritance. Laws changing the rule of descent, operative in the future only, are not unconstitutional.[91] Accordingly adoption and legitimation laws being but a change in the law of descent, operative in the future only, are valid.[92]

(IV) Curing Incapacity to Take by Devise. The right of heirs to property vested in them because of the incapacity of the devisees to take cannot be affected by a subsequent statute authorizing the devisees to take.[93]

(V) Validating Wills Defectively Executed. An act of the legislature

validating a will defectively executed is not unconstitutional when applied to a will made before its passage, where testator died thereafter.[94]

r. Rights of Purchaser at Judicial Sale. A purchaser at a judicial sale has no such vested right as will render an act unconstitutional which provides for the curing of irregularities in the sale.[95]

s. Rights of Trustees. Rights acquired by a trustee,[96] whether under letters of administration[97] or as executor under a will,[98] are vested and cannot be impaired by subsequent legislation. The rights of a mere naked trustee under a dry trust, however, are not vested and may be taken away by the legislature.[99] changing the rules of evidence[4] and providing for the reimbursement of taxes which have been paid and subsequently declared void,[5] or for the purchase-price paid at void tax-sales;[6] but a statute changing the basis of valuation for the assessment of a tax cannot act retrospectively.[7]

(II) Altering Method of Collecting Taxes. A tax laid by authority of law or an assessment for benefits conferred by a local improvement creates a duty and obligation which may be enforced by any means which the legislature may from time to time adopt.[8] An act therefore providing a new or additional remedy for collecting taxes is not objectionable on the ground that it divests vested rights.[9]

sage.— A tax law applied to the proceeds of mines extracted and removed from the state during the first quarter of the year before the passage of the law. The whole object of this law was to fix the mode of assessment for a particular year and future years, and it could not assess part of the property liable to taxation in that year without assessing all. It impaired no vested right, created no new liability upon the taxpayer, and did not come within the definition of a retroactive law. State v. Manhattan Silver Min. Co., 4 Nev. 318.

Tax-sales.— An act providing that all matters relative to the sale and conveyance of land for taxes under any prior laws under which they originated, as if such laws remained in force, is not an attempt to take away vested rights of property, for its purpose is merely to complete an inchoate tax-title under proceedings instituted according to the former law. Watkins v. Inge, 24 Kan. 612. See also Kipp v. Johnson, 31 Minn. 360, 17 N. W. 957, holding that an act providing that actions to test the validity of proceedings for a sale of land for taxes or claims made thereunder shall be commenced within three years after the sale or forfeiture of the land was a remedial statute only, and not one which created a vested right. Therefore on its repeal the right remained to resort to any remedies which previous to its enactment existed, notwithstanding that it provided that all rights heretofore acquired should not be affected by the repeal.

(III) Validating Illegal Assessments and Tax Levies. Acts validating illegal assessments and tax levies are constitutional where the legislature had power to authorize the tax,[10] and no rights have become vested.[11]

3. Remedies — a. In General. On the question of how far vested rights may be obtained in particular remedies there exists much conflict of authority. Many decisions declare broadly that no vested right to a particular remedy exists,[12] and that the fact that the change may in fact operate prejudicially on parties in pending actions cannot affect the validity of the change, if in form it be only remedial.[13] The proviso is made in other decisions that the remedy must not by the change be entirely destroyed,[14] and must not be a part of the right itself.[15] A different view holds that while a remedy may be varied or modified this cannot be done in such a way as to impair vested rights previously gained;[16] and that legislation which does so impair them is unconstitutional even though not wholly destroying those rights by the entire prevention of their enforcement and although in form purporting to be merely remedial.[17] It is also said that the test is whether the substituted remedy is in fact substantial and adequate.[18] But there is no doubt that remedial alterations in no wise impairing rights previously acquired or enhancing or enlarging them as by improvements in the mode of procedure are completely within the power of the law-making body, whether such changes operate retrospectively or not.[19]

b. Changing Form of Action or Proceeding or Substituting One Remedy For Another. Changing the form of the action or proceeding or substituting one remedy for another may be accomplished by subsequent legislative action, irrespective of the question whether suits then pending are thereby affected;[20] provided that the new remedy is not less efficacious than the former,[21] and that the change affects no vested rights acquired under existing laws.[22] Thus the remedy may be limited to a particular one,[23] and the new remedy may be created by the act destroying the former one by substitution therefor.[24] Actions may also be con-

c. Creation of Additional or Cumulative Remedies. Acts providing a new remedy,[28] or changing the effect of a remedy already existing,[29] do not impair vested rights, although made to operate retrospectively.

d. Remedies of Creditors — (i) Alteration of Stock-Holders' Liability. A creditor of a corporation has no vested interest in a debt due to the corporation which the state cannot destroy by an act altering the liability of stock-holders for unpaid subscriptions.[30]

(ii) Deprivation of Right of Curtesy. The legislature has no power to divest an estate by curtesy in which the creditor of the tenant by curtesy has once acquired a lien by attachment.[31]

(iii) Exemption Laws. Laws which by increasing the amount of exempt property withdraw land from the lien of a judgment previously rendered are invalid, as destroying a vested right to property acquired by the creditor.[32]

(iv) Exemption of Husband From Liability For Wife's Debts. An act exempting a husband from liability for debts contracted by the wife before marriage, when applied to a debt contracted before the passage of the act, does not take from the creditor such a vested right in the contingent liability of the future husband as to render the act void on this ground.[33]

(v) Insolvency Laws. A creditor of an assigning debtor acquires no vested right in the estate by virtue of such assignment, and the trustee's action and all proceedings in the settlement of the estate are subject to legislative control.[34] Thus a subsequent law may vary the form of the creditor's remedy,[35] may extend a prior insolvency act so as to bring within its scope securities already held by such creditor,[36] may invalidate payments made to a creditor,[37] may cure defects in the assignee's bond and thus destroy the efficacy of a previous garnishment process,[38] or may order distribution between individual and partnership creditors according to equitable priorities.[39]

e. Jurisdiction of Courts. Acts affecting the jurisdiction of courts are usually sustained as relating merely to the remedy, although they may operate upon existing causes,[40] at least so long as the change does not make the trial more burdensome or less speedy or efficacious.[41] It has been held, however, that such laws cannot operate to divest a title gained under a decree in a court in which jurisdiction was rightfully acquired, although the decree and gaining of title were subsequent to the passage of the act;[42] nor to cure a previous jurisdictional defect or one going to the substance of a vested right, thus cutting off an acquired defense.[43]

The weight of authority in the several states, it is believed, supports the view that the bar gained by the running of the statute is a vested right which cannot subsequently be taken away by the legislature either by creating a new right, repealing the former statute, or withdrawing a specified past period from its operation.[57] There are, however, contrary authorities in several jurisdictions, and the rule that the bar to a claim for debt cannot be a vested right is established in the United States supreme court by a series of decisions. These authorities would usually distinguish cases where the bar gained is merely against the remedy of the creditors, as in case of a debt from cases where the bar has vested an absolute title to real or personal property.[58] There can be no right gained in the running of the statute till the prescribed period of limitations is completed,[59] or according to some authorities till not only the remedy is barred but the limitation has entirely extinguished the former right and vested a title.[60] But where only one particular form of remedy is barred, while other equivalent forms remain, there can be no objection to a removal of a bar on the first.[61] A distinction is sometimes attempted as to whether a statute as it originally stood conferred a right not existing at common law or limited one which did so exist before, the doctrine being that in the latter case a bar already complete under the statute may be removed by later act.[62]

(v) Limiting or Extending Time For Review. The bar arising from the lapse of time within which an appeal may be taken is a vested right and cannot be affected by subsequent legislation.[63] There is, however, authority to the contrary.[64]

The reason is, that, by the law in existence before the repealing Act the property had become the defendant's. Both the legal title and the real ownership had become vested in him. . . . But we are of opinion that to remove the bar which the Statute of Limitations enables a debtor to interpose to prevent the payment of his debt stands on very different ground." After plaintiff had filed a petition for mandamus to compel the judge to issue such a warrant the statute was amended by making it necessary to present a bill to the commissioners' court and entitling the party to such an amount only as might be allowed by that tribunal. It was held that in this respect the amendment was unconstitutional, as impairing plaintiff's vested rights and lessening the value of his remedy; but that it was valid as far as merely directing the warrant to be issued by one authority instead of another.

(II) Lien. A statute which changes the time when judgments first become a lien is constitutional, although it applies to those previously existing, as it merely affects the remedy.[96] But a specific lien once obtained by levy or otherwise cannot be divested by subsequent legislation.[97]

(III) Supplementary Proceedings. The right of a judgment creditor to notice of a judgment rendered against him by mistake, to make application to be relieved therefrom. A later provision enacted that the setting aside of the judgment should not prevail against a bona fide purchaser whose title was based thereon, when the judgment had been properly on record for three years before the making of such application. It was held that the amendment infringed no vested rights of the party against whom the judgment was rendered.

IX. OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS.

A. In General — 1. The Constitutional Guaranty. The provision of the constitution of the United States which forbids a state to pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts[8] does not extend to a state law enacted before the date of the operation of that constitution, which was the first Wednesday in March, 1789.[9] But a retroactive state law[10] passed after that date which impairs the obligation of a contract violates the constitution.[11] The prohibition in question does not

United States are contracts protected by the constitution of the United States.[21] A state constitution, however, is not a contract within the meaning of the federal constitution.[22] Likewise neither a judgment[23] nor a marriage is a contract within the federal constitutional provision as to the impairment of contracts.[24]

3. WHAT CONSTITUTES "OBLIGATION." The obligation of a contract consists in its binding force on the party who makes it. This depends on the laws in existence when it is made. These are necessarily referred to in all contracts, and forming a part of them as the measure of the obligation to perform them by one party, and the right acquired by the other. There can be no other standard by

It is on this principle that an action ex contractu will lie upon a judgment. Chitty Contr. (Perkins ed.) 87. But this fiction cannot convert a transaction wanting the assent of parties into one which necessarily implies it. Judgments for torts are usually the result of violent contests and, as observed by the court below, are imposed upon the losing party by a higher authority against his will and protest. The prohibition of the Federal Constitution was intended to secure the observance of good faith in the stipulation of parties against any state action. Where a transaction is not based upon any assent of parties, it cannot be said that any faith is pledged with respect to it; and no case arises from the operation of the prohibition"); Garrison v. New York City, 21 Wall. which to ascertain the extent of either, than that which the terms of the contract indicate, according to the settled legal meaning; when it becomes consummated, the law defines the duty and the right; compels one party to perform the thing contracted for, and gives the other a right to enforce the performance by the remedies then in force.[25] The constitution refers to and preserves the legal not the moral obligation of a contract.[26]

4. The Law Impairing the Obligation — a. In General. If any subsequent law affect to diminish the duty or to impair the right which the law defines upon the consummation of a contract it necessarily bears on the obligation of the contract, in favor of one party, to the injury of the other; hence any law which in its operation amounts to a denial or obstruction of the rights accruing by the contract, although professing to act only on the remedy, is directly obnoxious to the prohibition of the constitution.[27]

25. McCracken v. Hayward, 2 How. (U. S.) 608, 11 L. ed. 397. "The 'obligation' of a contract . . . is the law which binds the parties to perform their agreement. The law, then, which has this binding obligation, must govern and control the contract in every shape in which it is intended to bear upon it, whether it affect its validity, construction, or discharge. . . . It is, then, the municipal law of the state, whether that be written or unwritten, which is emphatically the law of the contract made within the state, and must govern it throughout, wherever its performance is sought to be enforced." b. Constitutions and Constitutional Amendments. A state constitution is a "law" within the meaning of the federal constitution prohibiting laws impairing the obligation of contracts;[28] so too is a constitutional amendment.[29]

c. Existing Statutes. The provision of the federal constitution as to the impairment of the obligation of contracts does not apply to laws enacted prior to the making of the contract, the obligation of which is claimed to be impaired.[30]

d. Judicial Decisions. Where parties have entered into a contract valid at the time under the laws of the state it is not competent for the courts of the state to impair the obligation of that contract.[31] The law, however, as declared by a decision of the highest court of the state, when such decision is not a construction of a statute, does not enter into contracts made thereafter, and the subsequent reversal of the decision therefore does not impair the obligation of contracts.[32]

5. Attributes of Sovereignty — a. In General. In accordance with the well-established general principle that a state cannot barter away or in any manner abridge or weaken any of the essential attributes of sovereignty,[33] one state legislature cannot by any agreement bind itself or its successors not to exercise the police power of the state[34] or the right of eminent domain.[35] A state may, however, agree that certain property, rights, or franchises shall be exempt from taxation or be taxed at a certain agreed rate, and such an agreement, based on a consideration, is a contract protected by the federal constitution;[36] but it has

Miller, J., in his dissenting opinion, in Washington University v. Rouse, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 439, 19 L. ed. 498, speaking for Mr. Chief Justice Chase, Mr. Justice Field, and himself, said: "We do not believe that any legislative body, sitting under a State Constitution of the usual character, has a right to sell, to give, or to bargain away forever the taxing power of the State. This is a power which in modern political societies, is absolutely necessary to the continued existence of every such society. While under such forms of government, the ancient chiefs or heads of the government might carry it on by revenues owned by them personally, and by the exaction of personal service from their subjects, no civilized government has ever existed that did not depend upon taxation in some form for the continuance of that existence. To hold, then, that any one of the annual Legislatures can, by contract, deprive the State forever of the power of taxation, is to hold that they can destroy the government which they are appointed to serve, and that their action in that regard is strictly lawful."

ment hitherto obtained on account of an act done in the prosecution of war in accordance with civilized usages shall be enforced does not impair obligations of contracts.[38]

c. Making Debtor Liable For Taxes on Debt. Acts requiring corporations to pay taxes on their bonds and authorizing them to deduct the amount thereof in accounting with the bondholders do not violate the obligation of contracts.[39] A state law, however, requiring a corporation to retain for the non-payment of taxes a certain portion of the interest due on the bonds made and payable out of the state to non-residents impairs the obligation of the contract evidenced by the bonds.[40] It has been held that a state constitutional provision making a mortgagee primarily liable for taxes assessed against the property and providing that if the mortgagor pays all the taxes he may deduct from the debt the amount assessed against the mortgagee does not impair an obligation executed prior thereto, containing no express provision that the mortgagee should pay the taxes.[41]

d. Slave Contracts. A clause in a state constitution to the effect that no court shall have jurisdiction to try, give judgment on, or enforce any debt, the consideration of which was a slave or the hire thereof, is void as to debts contracted previous to its adoption, which were valid when adopted.[42]

J., said: "That the taxing power is of vital importance; that it is essential to the existence of government; are truths which it cannot be necessary to reaffirm. They are acknowledged and asserted by all. It would seem that the relinquishment of such a power is never to be assumed. We will not say that a State may not relinquish it; that a consideration sufficiently valuable to induce a partial release of it may not exist; but as the whole community is interested in retaining it undiminished, that community has a right to insist that its abandonment ought not to be presumed in a case in which the deliberate purpose of the State to abandon it does not appear."

For Printing. It being a well-established general principle that a contract entered into between the state and an individual is as fully protected by the constitutional prohibition against states impairing the obligation of contracts as a contract between two individuals,[44] it is necessary to examine into the effect of that prohibition on the particular contracts of the states. For example contracts for state printing are protected by the constitutional prohibition against the impairment of contracts.[45]

h. Purchases at Tax-Sale. State laws which merely regulate the remedy by changing the rules of evidence in connection with tax-titles and do not take away any right do not impair the obligations of a contract.[56]

2. LEGISLATIVE CONTROL OF MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — a. In General. Municipal corporations, such as counties, cities, and towns, being mere creatures and agents of the state, stand in their governmental or public character in no contract relations with the state, and so are not within the provision that renders laws impairing the obligation of contracts unconstitutional; but at the pleasure of the state their charters may be amended, changed, or revoked, subject only to the restraints of special constitutional provisions.[59] So in general the imposition by the state the payment of taxes by coupons cut from the state bonds a subsequent repealing act impairs the obligation of the contract. People v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 11; State v. Young, 29 Minn. 474, 9 N. The fact that additional county expenses are to be met out of the fund available when the debt was contracted does not impair the obligation of contracts entered into when the expenses chargeable to the fund arising from taxation were less. U. S. v. Knox County, 51 Fed. 880.

The fact that improper assessments were made cannot impair a creditor's right to be paid by a valid exercise of existing taxing power. Favrot v. East Baton Rouge Parish, 34 La. Ann. 491; People v. Lansing, 27 Mich. 131.

A judgment founded on a tort is not a contract; so the state may later reduce the power of the city, against which the judgment was obtained, to levy taxes to pay it. Allowing taxpayers to set off municipal obligations which they have bought in in payment of their taxes is constitutional as to municipal creditors. Amy v. Shelby County Taxing Dist., 114 U. S. 387, 5 S. Ct. 895, 29 L. ed. 172.

The division of a county which had pledged all its taxable property for the payment of debts is not unconstitutional if it is provided that the separated portions shall pay their proportional parts of the original debts. Savings, etc., Assoc. v. Alturas County, 65 Fed. 677.

Exempting taxpayers from an obligation to pay a fee prescribed by a former act for the services of the attorney conducting tax-sales is valid. People v. Lee, 28 Hun (N. Y.) 469.

Diverting fund created for particular purposes.— Money collected to pay the interest on bonds, levied, collected, and set apart according to the provisions of an act, is a trust fund for that purpose, and the municipal corporation may be enjoined from using it for any other purpose without the consent of the bondholders. Maenhaut v. New Orleans, 2 Woods (U. S.) 108, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 8,939. And where bonds were issued to build a municipal market-house, and by their terms the market revenue was to be applied on the interest and to form a sinking-fund, such revenue could not be diverted. Fazende v. Houston, 34 Fed. 95. So where a sinking-fund was created, a depositary chosen, and an appropriation of funds was made to pay certain debts, the creditors acquired vested rights under the contract of pledge. Imposition of conditions precedent to payment of municipal indebtedness.—Reasonable conditions precedent may be imposed by the legislature, the limitation being that no substantial right shall be invaded. Lincoln v. Grant, 38 Nebr. 369, 56 N. W. 995 (sustaining a requirement that claims for unliquidated damages against a city be presented within three months); Parker v. Buckner, 67 Tex. 20, 2 S. W. 746 (requirement that claims be presented within six months, sustained); Louisiana v. New Orleans, 102 U. S. 203, 26 L. ed. 132 (holding valid a requirement that judgments against the city be registered, as a condition precedent to payment). But when the conditions imposed are a substantial interference with the contract rights of creditors they are unconstitutional. McCracken v. Moody, 33 Ark. 81 (holding invalid a requirement that holders of obligations present them within ninety days); Rose v. Estudillo, 39 Cal. 270; Robinson v. Magee, 9 Cal. 81, 70 Am. Dec. 638 (holding invalid a requirement for the presentation of claims for registry); Priestly v. Watkins, 62 Miss. 798 (holding invalid a requirement for presentation for registration and an affidavit as to holder's claim of title).

Provisions made prior to an issue of bonds that no later bonds should be issued except to meet such bonds is a part of the contract of loan which cannot be impaired. Smith v. Appleton, 19 Wis. 468.

C.) 587, holding that a master in chancery appointed under the constitution of 1778 could not be deprived of his office after the adoption of a new constitution; since he had a freehold in his office, holding his commission during good behavior.

In so far as the constitution protects the office, any act of the legislature abolishing such office or abridging its scope impairs an obligation of contract between the incumbent and the state (Hays v. Harley, 1 Mill (S. C.) 267); but where the office is created by the constitution and the terms and compensation are fixed by statute, such tenure and compensation are entirely subject to legislative control, except that the office cannot be virtually abolished by the legislature by a reduction of the compensation or by taking away compensation altogether (Conner v. New York, 5 N. Y. 285 [affirming 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 355]; Bailey v. Caldwell, 68 N. C. 472).

Where by the constitution an office is elective, a statute providing that henceforth a certain other officer upon election shall become ex officio the holder of the first-mentioned office is constitutional as to elections held after the expiration of the present incumbent's term; but it cannot operate to divest the present incumbent of the office to which he has been elected under the constitution, and substitute therefor a person not elected to such office. Mills v. Sargent, 36 Cal. 379.

A constitutional provision that no person who now is, or hereafter shall be, a collector of public moneys, shall be eligible to any office until he has paid over all sums for which he is liable, does not defeat any vested rights of a previously elected officer who was in default of public moneys. Taylor v. Governor, 1 Ark. 21.

In territories of the United States acts of congress are of course superior to territorial legislation, and hence an act of the territorial legislature altering fees fixed for certain services by act of congress is void (People v. Pyper, 6 Utah 160, 21 Pac. 722); but in the absence of any congressional legislation on the subject such an act would be valid (Harwood v. Perrin, (Ariz. 1900) 60 Pac. 891).

6. Bailey v. State, 56 Miss. 637.

Where the constitution forbids the diminution of the salary of a judge during his term of office, an act directing that one half of his salary be deducted for such time as a special judge is required to sit in his absence is unconstitutional. White v. State, 123 Ala. 577, 26 So. 343.

Contra, King v. Hunter, 65 N. C. 603, 6 Am. Rep. 754, holding that where a statute makes it a part of the duty of the sheriff to collect taxes a contract arises between him and the state which cannot be impaired by a subsequent act for the appointment of a separate tax-collector. And see State v. Jumel, 30 La. Ann. 861; People v. Burrows, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 89, 16 How. Pr. (N. M. Charlt. (Ga.) 443); judges, by abolishing the court (Perkins v. Corbin, 45 Ala. 103, 6 Am. Rep. 698; Russell v. Howe, 12 Gray (Mass.) 147); mayor and aldermen of a city (Com. v. Moir, 199 Pa. St. 534, 49 Atl. 351, 8 Am. St. Rep. 801, 53 L. R. A. 837, 46 Pittsb. Leg. J. (Pa.) 385; Alexander v. McKenzie, 2 S. C. 81); notary public (State v. Hermann, 11 Mo. App. 43); pomologist in a state university (Vincenheller v. Reagan, 69 Ark. 460, 64 S. W. 278); register of probate court (Opinion of Justices, 117 Mass. 603); registrar clerk of orphans' court (French v. Com., 78 Pa. St. 339); state printer (Walker v. Peelle, 18 Ind. 264; Walker v. Dunham, 17 Ind. 483; Ellis v. State, 4 Ind. 1; Reed v. Francis, 22 Kan. 510; Wilcox v. Rodman, 46 Mo. 322; Jones v. Hobbs, 4 Baxt. (Tenn.) 113); tax-collector (Hiestand v. New Orleans, 14 La. Ann. 330); teacher in state university (Head v. Missouri University, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 526, 22 L. ed. 160 [affirming 47 Mo. 220]); and trustees of a town (Frisbie v. Fogg, 78 Ind. 269).

Offices which cannot be abolished.— It has been held that the following offices could not be abolished: city engineer by the city (Chase v. Lowell, 7 Gray (Mass.) 33); judge (State v. Jumel, 30 La. Ann. 861; People v. Burrows, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 89, 16 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 27); master in chancery (In re Gibbes, 1 Desauss. (S. C.) 587); office which the incumbent holds during good behavior (In re Gibbes, 1 Desauss. (S. C.) 587; Allen v. McKean, 1 Sumn. (U. S.) 276, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 229); and ordinary (Hayes v. Harley, 1 Mill (S. C.) 267).

What operates to abolish offices.—Acts consolidating two offices into one (Hall v. Burks, 96 Ga. 622, 24 S. E. 349); authorizing the governor to appoint new officers for full terms (Bailey v. State, 56 Miss. 637); establishing a new form of city government (State v. Dolan, 93 Mo. 467, 6 S. W. 366; People v. Feitner, 30 N. Y. App. Div. 241, 51 N. Y. Suppl. 1094), amending a city's charter (Alexander v. McKenzie, 2 S. C. 81), or the adoption by a city of a general law for the incorporation of municipalities (People v. Blair, 82 Ill. App. 570) have all been held to abolish the offices affected by them, unless the acts in question especially provide to the contrary (People v. Feitnor, 30 N. Y. App. Div. 241, 51 N. Y. Suppl. 1094; Com. v. Ricketts, 9 Kulp (Pa.) 361).

While the office is continued and not abolished the legislature cannot oust an incumbent during the term for which he was chosen (Cotton v. Ellis, 52 N. C. 545), nor fill the office except in the prescribed manner (Demarest v. New York, 11 Hun (N. Y.) 19; Demarest v. Wickham, 4 Hun (N. Y.) 627); and therefore an act declaring his office vacant (Hayes v. Harley, 1 Mill (S. C.) 267), transferring the office to another (Hoke v. Henderson, 15 N. C. 1, 25 Am. Dec. 677), so amending the act which established the office as to deprive the incumbent of his office, without abolishing the same (State v. Griffin, 125 N. C. 332, 34 S. E. 429; State v. Webb, 125 N. C. 243, 34 S. E. 430), or abolishing the office to take effect in the future, and then before the act takes effect recreating the office by a second act and appointing a new incumbent (Silvey v. Boyle, 20 Utah 265, 57 Pac. 880), is unconstitutional.

The governor of a state has no power to revoke the commission of an officer not re- abridge,[10] or extend,[11] the terms, change the duties,[12] and increase [13] or reduce [14] the movable at his pleasure, whether the appointing power be in the governor or elsewhere; and where the appointing power is not in the governor he must commission the person duly elected or appointed by the proper authorities. Ewing v. Thompson, 43 Pa. St. 372.

An administrator's claim to fees allowed by statute is not a contract within the constitutional provision against impairment of the obligation of contract. In re Dewar, 10 Mont. 426, 25 Pac. 1026.

The legislature may substitute a salary for fees; and it may continue the fees, but direct them to be paid into the public treasury (Conner v. New York, 5 N. Y. 285 [affirming 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 355]), or it may deprive the office of the fees by transferring the duties by which they are earned to another office (Stephens v. Williamson, 4 Ky. L. Rep. 985).

Recovery of illegal fees exacted by an officer may be constitutionally authorized by statute, although such statute changes the common-law rule in force at the time the officer took his office. Benson v. Christian, 129 Ind. 535, 29 N. E. 26.

State reporter.— A statute limiting the price to be charged by the reporter of a state court for copies of his reports sold to the public is constitutional, as a regulation of the compensation of a public official. Black v. Merrill, 51 Ind. 32.

A statute giving a part of the fines for compensation of persons already in office.[15] The legislature may also create new disqualifications for holding office,[16] new causes for removal from offices already existing,[17] and new tribunals or modes of procedure to try title to office or removal therefrom.[18]

(III) Power of Municipalities. Although in some jurisdictions it has been held that cities and towns have not the same power as the legislature over city and town offices,[19] yet the rule generally adopted accords them a like power.[20]

b. Intervening Rights of Third Persons. Contract rights incident to the holding of public office, in which third parties have an interest, may arise; and these cannot be violated by the legislature.[21] certain offenses to the prosecuting officer (Cushman v. Hale, 68 Vt. 444, 35 Atl. 382) or to an educational institution (Watson Seminary v. Pike County Ct., 149 Mo. 57, 50 S. W. 880, 45 L. R. A. 675) may be repealed without impairing the obligation of a contract.

Where the constitution fixes the salary of a public officer, the legislature cannot reduce it during the term of an incumbent, even if the constitution provides that the salary shall be as fixed "until otherwise provided" (State v. Jumel, 31 La. Ann. 142); but the adoption of a new constitution gives the legislature power to reduce a salary fixed by the former constitution (People v. Burrows, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 89, 16 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 27.

While an attorney's right to compensation for services rendered under a statute has been held to be in the nature of a contract, and hence not affected by subsequent legislation (Files v. Fuller, 44 Ark. 273), yet the statutory compensation of a city solicitor may be reduced by a subsequent constitutional provision limiting the amount to be raised by taxation (Seale v. Madison Parish, 34 La. Ann. 365; State v. Police Jury, 34 La. Ann. 41).

15. The mode of trying title to an office may be changed by act of legislature, while proceedings under the old form are pending; and the legislature may confirm irregularities in the election of one of the contestants. Lovejoy v. Benson, 121 Ala. 605, 25 So. 599.

Ct. 385, 34 L. ed. 1012), and the jurisdiction of the United States supreme court extends only to an examination of the power of state courts to proceed at all (Boyd v. Nebraska, 134 U. S. 135, 12 S. Ct. 375, 36 L. ed. 103) and not of mere errors or irregularities in their proceedings (Foster v. Kansas, 112 U. S. 210, 5 S. Ct. 897, 28 L. ed. 629; Kennard v. Louisiana, 92 U. See also Chase v. Lowell, 7 Gray (Mass.) 33, holding that cities and towns, in the absence of express statutory authority, have not the same power as the legislature in regard to the abolition, etc., of city and town offices, since the election or appointment for a definite time of a city officer or agent (here the city engineer) entitled to compensation, and the acceptance by him of such office, constitute a contract between the city and the officer, which cannot be dissolved by the act of the city alone.

c. Right to Compensation For Services Rendered. While a public officer has no rights of any sort to compensation for his services before he has earned it,[22] even if prevented from performing such services by legislative action,[23] yet after services have been rendered, a contract is implied which cannot be impaired, to pay for them at the statutory rate.[24]

5. Legislative Control of Private Corporations — a. In General — (i) Nature of Corporate Charters — (a) Generally. The charter of a corporation created by the state is a contract and is in all particulars inviolable, unless in the charter itself or in some general or special law subject to which it was taken, there is a power reserved to the legislature to alter, amend, or repeal.[25] A state, the master and wardens of the port of New York could not, as a corporation, be deprived of their right to earn the compensation granted to them by the legislature.

The leading case on this subject is Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 518, 4 L. ed. 629, 638, 643. This was an action of trover brought by the trustees of Dartmouth College to recover the books of record, corporate seal, and other corporate property to which the plaintiffs alleged they were entitled. In 1769 the king granted a charter to Dartmouth College for the purpose of educating Indian and English youth. It was provided in that charter that the college should be managed by a board of trustees, "the whole number of said trustees consisting, and hereafter forever to consist, of twelve and no more." The charter expressly stated that the corporation was to have perpetual succession and continuance forever. In 1816 the legislature of New Hampshire passed an act amending the charter of Dartmouth College, increasing the number of trustees from twelve to twenty-one and appointing a board of overseers consisting of twenty-five. This new act, which completely changed Dartmouth College, the old trustees refused to accept. The court held that the original charter was a contract, the obligation of which could not be impaired without violating the constitution of the United States. Chief Justice Marshall, in giving the opinion, after holding that the college was a private eleemosynary corporation, said: "The benefit to the public is considered as an ample compensation for the faculty it confers, and the corporation is created. If the advantages to the public constitute a full compensation for the faculty it gives, there can be no reason for exacting a further compensation, by claiming a right to exercise over this artificial being a power which changes its nature, and touches the fund, for the security and application of which it was created. There can be no reason for implying in a charter, given for a valuable consideration, a power which is not only not expressed, but is in direct contradiction to its express stipulations. From the fact, then, that a charter of incorporation has been granted, nothing can be inferred which changes the character of the institution, or transfers to the government any new power over it. The character of civil institutions does not grow out of their incorporation, but out of the manner in which they are formed, and the objects for which they are created. The right to change them is not founded on their being incorporated, but on their being the instruments of government, created for its purposes. . . . This is plainly a contract to which the donors, the trustees, and the crown (to whose rights and obligations New Hampshire succeeds), were the original parties. It is a contract made on a valuable consideration. It is a contract for the security and disposition of property. It is a contract, on the faith of which real and personal estate has been conveyed to the corporation. It is then a contract within the letter of the constitution, and within its spirit also."

A statutory right embraced in the charter of a corporation must be reduced to possession to secure the constitutional protection against alteration or repeal. San Joaquin, etc., Canal, etc., Co. v. Stanislaus County, 113 Fed. 930.

26. Massachusetts.— Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 115 Mass. 153, 155. In this case the claimant was created a corporation to manufacture malt liquors under a charter which the legislature had no power to alter, amend, or repeal. The legislature later passed an act which prohibited the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. The court said: "The authority of the legislature over the property or the use of the property of a corporation is not lost because no power is reserved to repeal or amend its charter. Any laws the sovereign power may find it necessary or salutary to enact, regulating, controlling, restricting or prohibiting intention of the legislature to grant an exclusive privilege must be clearly shown,[27] and no rights can be taken from the public by implication beyond those which the words of the charter clearly purport to convey.[28] The revoking of a mere license previously granted by a legislature is not an impairment of the obligation of a contract.[29]

(B) To Operate a Lottery. Some courts have held that a right conferred on a corporation to dispose of its property by means of lottery tickets is not a contract between the state and the corporation, and is revokable at the will of the the sale of a particular kind of property for the general benefit, apply as well to the property of corporations, like the claimant, as to individuals. Such laws are in the nature of police regulations, and individuals and corporations are alike subject to them. . . . They are presumed to be passed for the common good, and to be necessary for the protection of the public, and cannot be said to impair any right, or the obligation of any contract, or to do any injury in the proper and legal sense of these terms."

Extent and limits of doctrine.— Although a public service, such as supplying gas or water for public or private uses in a city, is a matter within the control of the state, which it may perform itself, or may delegate to appropriate agencies, and although even after it has granted an exclusive franchise for the performance of such service it may, in the exercise of its police power, retain control and regulation thereof so far as it affects public health, safety, and morals, yet such a grant, after a due compliance with the conditions on which it is made, becomes a contract, the obligation of which is within the protection of the constitution of the United States. Louisville Gas Co. v. Citizens' Gaslight Co., 115 U. S. 683, 6 S. Ct. 265, 29 L. ed. 510; New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. Rivers, 115 U. S. 674, 6 S. But one case has been found which dissents from this practically universal doctrine. This is the case of the Toledo Bank v. Bond, 1 Ohio St. 622. This case takes the ground that the charter of a private corporation is in form and in its inherent terms and nature a law, and does not possess the essential elements of a contract, to wit, two competent contracting parties, a proper subject-matter, a legal consideration, and a mutuality of obligation; and therefore does not come within the purview and true intent of the clause of the constitution of the United States which prohibits a state from passing any law impairing the obligation of a contract. The case of State v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 12 Gill & J. (Md.) 399, 38 Am. Dec. 319, held that the proviso in Md. Acts (1835), c. 395, § 5, "that if the said Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company shall not locate the said road in the manner provided for in this Act, then and in that case they shall forfeit one million of dollars to the State of Maryland, for the use of Washington County," although assented to by the company, does not constitute a case of contract but a case of penalty, subject as to its enforcement to the will and pleasure of the legislature. In St. Clair County Turnpike Co. v. Illinois, 97 U. S. 63, 24 L. ed. 651, it was held that the act of Feb. 16, 1861, supplemental to the charter of a turnpike company, authorizing said company to extend its road over a dike and bridge in consideration of keeping the same in repair, did not amount to a contract, and therefore the state, by resuming control of the bridge and dike after the expiration of the charter of the company, did not impair the obligation of any contract.

Jur. 188, it was held that a constitutional provision that the charters of railroad corporations may be altered or repealed by the legislature at any time after their passage is to be read into all subsequent railroad charters and into all contracts and mortgages made by such railroad companies, so that every creditor and mortgagee is affected with notice thereof.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Constitutional Law," § 367.

As the power to alter or repeal the charter of the Northern Central Railway Company was reserved to the state under the constitution of 1850, as fully as if such reservation had been set forth in express terms in the act of incorporation, the right to exercise this power could not in any manner be affected by the adoption of the constitutions of 1864 and 1867. Said charter must be construed as if the right to alter, amend, or repeal it had been reserved to the legislature by the express language of the charter itself. It was not within the power of the legislature, under the constitution of the state, to grant to the company immunity from taxation or any other corporate privilege, beyond the power of repeal or revocation by a subsequent legislature. (c) Extent of Power. The power of a legislature "to alter, amend, or repeal" is unlimited, provided that such amendment does not go beyond the regulation, supervision, and control of the corporation.[36] The state can take from the corporation nothing more than it has granted to it;[37] but power to withdraw an entire franchise includes power to modify or restrict its exercise.[38] If the corporation refuses to accept statutory modification it must cease to transact business in a corporate capacity.[39]

(d) Consent of Corporation. With the consent of the corporation, the legislature may make any change in the charter.[40] This consent may be shown by the corporation asking for the amendment,[41] by expressly accepting one made without request,[42] or by acting upon or acquiescing in one enacted without request.[43]

road company, did not expressly exempt it from the provisions of the act of Dec. 17, 1841, which declares that all charters of corporations thereafter granted shall be "subject to amendment, alteration or repeal by the legislative authority," but conferred upon the company all the rights, privileges, and immunities granted to a certain other company which had been incorporated in 1845 with an express exemption from taxation for the period of thirty-six years, and from the operation of said act of Dec. 17, 1841. The act of 1856 was amended in 1868. It was held that the provisions of the act of 1841 are applicable to the act of 1856, and that the latter act must be read as if it declared that the capital stock of the company and its real estate should be exempt from taxation for thirty-six years, unless the legislature should in the meantime withdraw the exemption; that if an exemption from future legislative control had been originally acquired it ceased when the company in 1868 obtained an amendment to its charter. Before the organization was completed a new constitution was adopted in which was a provision for the alteration or repealing of charters granted by the legislature. Inasmuch as the organization was not completed until after the adoption of the constitution, the court held the power of alteration and repeal were thereby ingrafted on the contract created by the charter. St. 478, 8 Atl. 233, where a bridge company which under certain incorporating acts had the right to charge tolls for street-cars going over th bridge subsequently accepted an act authorizing it to rebuild its bridge, which repealed its right to charge tolls on street-cars. It was held that in view of this acceptance an act prior thereto authorizing the street-railway company to apply to the court of quarter sessions to fix tolls, in the event of disagreement with the bridge company, could not be considered as impairing the contract obligations of the original incorporating acts.

Consolidation.— A railroad company obtained the privilege of having county subscriptions made to it without the sanction of a popular vote, and did not avail itself of the privilege. It then became consolidated with another company after the constitution of 1865, which required a vote of the people to sanction such a subscription, took effect. It was held that the consolidated company could not make use of said privilege. Wagner v. Meety, 69 Mo. 150. The statutory code of a state contained a provision enacting that certain private corporations were subject to be changed, modified, or destroyed at the will of the creator, except so far as forbidden by law, and that in all cases of private charters thereafter granted the state reserved the right to withdraw the franchise, unless such right was expressly negatived in the charter. Some time after this code took effect two railroad corporations, created prior to that date, each of which enjoyed by its charter a limited exemption from taxation, were consolidated by virtue of an act of the state legislature, which authorized a consolidation of the stocks of the two companies, conferred upon the consolidated company full corporate powers, and continued to it the franchises, privileges, and immunities which the companies had held by their original charters. It was held that a subsequent legislative act, taxing the property of the new corporation so formed by consolidation as other property in the state was taxed, was not prohibited by that provision of the constitution of the United States that declares that no state shall pass a law impairing the obligation of contracts. (III) Distinction Between Public and Private Corporations. The inviolability of charters applies only to private corporations,[47] and therefore if a corporation is a public one, established for the general good, the legislature may modify its charter at will.[48]

b. Nature and Extent of Corporate Rights and Privileges — (I) Right to Exclusive Exercise of Franchise. Where a legislature grants to a private corporation a franchise not in its terms exclusive, there is no constitutional obligation on the legislature not to grant to another corporation a similar franchise, even though the latter greatly impairs or destroys the value of the former.[49] Accordingly it is not necessary for the legislature to reserve in its first grant a right to make a second grant;[50] and no compensation need be made to the first corporation for the consequential injury.[51] The intention of the legislature to grant an exclusive privilege must be clear, else the grant of a similar franchise to a second corporation would not be unconstitutional.[52] The number of cases in

The act of 1834 was accepted by the society. It was held that the act of 1834 was no violation of that provision of the constitution of the United States which prohibits a state from passing any law impairing the obligation of contracts. Ct. 252, 29 L. ed. 516. In Citizens' Water Co. v. Bridgeport Hydraulic Co., supra, it was held that when the legislature of a state has ratified by its gift of a charter the grant by a city of a monopoly of supplying it with water, and the grantee of the monopoly so incorporated has expended large amounts of money in establishing its "plant," the legislature cannot, by a subsequent similar charter to another corporation, authorize

(II) Right to Regulate Charges and Tolls. The right of a legislature to regulate and control charges and tolls depends largely on the power reserved by the legislature to alter, amend, or repeal the charter of the corporation which is authorized to collect such charges and tolls. The decisions are not altogether in accord on this point, but the weight of authority seems to be that a simple grant to a corporation to take tolls does not prevent the legislature from fixing a maximum toll or from regulating and limiting the amount which can be charged.[61] The matter of regulating tolls has frequently arisen in regard to bridges;[62] in regard to ferries;[63] in regard to floating logs;[64] and in regard to railroads.[65]

it to appropriate, by the exercise of the right of eminent domain, the property and water rights of the first corporation, so long as that corporation continues to fulfil the conditions of the monopoly. And in St. Tammany Water-Works Co. v. New Orleans Water Works Co., supra, it was held that the constitution of Louisiana of 1879, which abrogates the monopoly features of existing corporations, is inoperative to affect the obligation of contract incurred by the state in granting to the New Orleans Water Works Company the exclusive privilege of using the streets of New Orleans to lay water-pipes; and another company which by virtue of the state constitution attempts to lay pipes cannot justify its action, under the police power of the state to regulate the public supply of water, by simply showing that it will supply purer and more suitable water than the New Orleans Water Works Company, neither the legislature nor the city having taken any steps in the matter.

Where a city is empowered by the laws of the state to contract for a water-supply, and to grant an exclusive franchise to use its streets for such purpose to the person contracted with during the term of the contract, it acts under such power in a legislative, and not an administrative, capacity, and its enactments thereunder are laws of the state, within the meaning of the contract clause of the federal constitution. Ct. 47, 32 L. ed. 377, the court held that a railroad charter giving an exclusive right to transfer persons and property, "provided, that the charge of transportation or conveyance shall not exceed" certain specified rates, does not preclude subsequent legislation establishing a commission to regulate railroad tariffs. In Stone v. New Orleans, etc., R. Co., 116 U. S. 352, 6 S. Ct. 349, 29 L. ed. 651, the court held that a charter authorizing a railroad company to receive "such tolls and charges as shall be from time to time established, fixed and regulated by the directors, . . . provided, that nothing contained in the charter shall be so construed as to prevent the Legislature from regulating the rate of transportation for passage and freight over the same in this State" does not amount to a surrender of legislative control. In Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. Stone, 20 Fed. 270, the court held that the right to fix and regulate tolls to be charged and received for the transportation of persons and property does not fall within the police power of the state.

The Illinois constitution of 1870, and the general corporation act, reserve power in the state to regulate within reasonable limits the rates to be charged by gas companies incorporated under such act, in the absence of explicit contracts created by ordinance, fixing such rates. The Illinois act of June 5, 1897, authorizes gas companies in the same city to consolidate into a single corporation, but provides that the consolidated corporation shall be subject to the legal obligations arising on each of the constituent companies. Complainant, a gas company, was incorporated in 1855 by special act, which, as subsequently amended, gave the city a right to regulate its charges, but provided that it should not have authority to compel the company to furnish gas at a less rate than three dollars per thousand feet. Subsequently complainant acquired, by consolidation under the Illinois act of 1897, the lines of other companies organized after 1870, and later instituted suit in a federal court against the city to enjoin the enforcement against it of an ordinance limiting the charge to be made for gas to seventy-five cents per thousand feet. It was held that in the absence of allegations showing that the rate fixed by the ordinance was unreasonable, complainant was not entitled to relief on the ground that such ordinance was unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of the contract made by its charter. person, is subject to remedial legislation and amenable to general laws.[78] A decision of a court is not a "law" within the United States constitution forbidding states from passing any law impairing the obligation of any contract, and therefore overruling a decision, on reliance of which contracts have been made, is not an impairment.[79] The implied powers of a corporation are as much beyond the control of subsequent legislation as powers expressly granted.[80] A charter secures to a corporation immunity from changes of rights not from changes of remedy.[81] No fundamental change can be made in a charter without the consent of the stock-holders.[82]

(B) Where State Is Interested. The fact that the state owns some shares of stock in a corporation does not affect the right of the state to pass laws regulating the charter of such company.[83]

change would be void as impairing the obligation of a contract.[21] If the power to alter, amend, or repeal is reserved, such alteration or modification cannot change the object of the incorporation or substitute another for it;[22] but the grant of an additional franchise not affecting or impairing those before granted does not alter or modify the charter, if it does not compel the corporation to exercise such franchise;[23] and such grant can be made whether the right to alter and modify be reserved or not;[24] but in neither case can the corporation be compelled to accept the grant without the consent of all the members.[25]

After the defendants had constructed their road and built bridges over the same within the city to the acceptance of the city, an act was passed empowering the common council to order them widened in such a manner as public convenience might require and to enforce the order. It was held that the act was not unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of contracts.

An act which provides for the appointment of commissioners to fix the compensation which shall be paid by one railroad corporation for the drawing of its passengers, merchandise, and cars over the railroad of another company does not infringe upon any rights which the latter company may have under its charter to regulate tolls on its own road. Vermont, etc., R. Co. v. Fitchburg R. Co., 9 Cush. (Mass.) 369.

The right of one railroad corporation to cross another's tracks in constructing and operating its road is derived by grant of the franchise so to do from the state, the first road having no vested exclusive right to such a crossing as against the right of the public; for it is contrary to public policy to grant exclusive public franchises. In New York, etc., R. Co. v. Board of Railroad Com'rs, 162 Mass. 81, 38 N. E. 27, it was held that N. Y. Laws (1892), c. 171, p. 1, providing that where one is cut off from access to his land by construction of a railroad, commissioners may order the railroad to maintain crossings, is constitutional, it being merely a regulation of the right to a way of necessity previously existing in such case, and no new burden being thereby placed upon a railroad company. And in Norwood v. New York, etc., R. Co., 161 Mass. 259, 37 N. E. 199, it was held that Mass. Laws (1890), c. 428, providing for the abolition of grade crossings, and requiring the cost of changes made to be paid by the town, the railroad company, and the state, in proportions fixed, without reference to the value of the property owned by them or the benefits which they severally receive is valid, as being an exercise of legislative power to enact laws to prevent accidents. In Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Nelson, 149 U. S. 368, 13 S. Ct. 871, 37 L. ed. 772; Minneapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Emmons, 149 U. S. 364, 13 S. Ct. 870, 37 L. ed. 769, it was held that a state statute requiring railroad companies to fence their right of way through the lands of private persons is not in violation of the company's chartered right to buy and hold lands for specified purposes.

(VI) Creation and Change of Remedy to Enforce Corporate Liability. A legislature may provide remedies more effectually to compel a corporation which it has chartered to perform its duties and liabilities, and may prescribe the mode, time when, and court where such remedy shall be enforced.[42] The mode of serving process on a corporation may be changed.[43] Railroads and other corporations may be made liable to employees or their contractors for wages,[44] even though the contracts were made previous to the passage of the law;[45] and liens for labor may be given to them.[46] So too the jurisdiction in which a suit against the corporation may be brought may be changed.[47]

An act which authorizes the auditor of state to wind up and dissolve insurance companies by suit in equity whenever he is of the opinion, upon examination of the affairs of a company, that its condition is such as to render its further continuance in business hazardous to the insured is not unconstitutional, as impairing the obligation of a contract. Statutes declaring a liability of directors

tion.[52] The remedy for enforcing a forfeiture may be changed by the legislature after the granting of a charter, but new causes for forfeiture cannot be created;[53] and a subsequent act declaring a total forfeiture for that which under the original act was only a partial forfeiture is void.[54] The legislature may remit forfeiture of the charter of a corporation either in whole or in part;[55] but if forfeiture proceedings are commenced and later discontinued on condition that the corporation do certain things, the proceedings can be resumed only on breach of the condition.[56]

(B) Charter to Operate Lottery. The legislature has power to repeal the grant of a lottery franchise, even though rights have been acquired and liabilities incurred upon the faith of the grant, such grant being within the governmental and not the contractual powers of the state.[57]

(VIII) PROVIDING FOR SETTLEMENT OF AFFAIRS OF INSOLVENT CORPORATION. The legislature can at all times make provision for the settlement of the affairs of an insolvent corporation, in order to distribute its assets among its creditors, and without impairing the obligation of any contract,[58] even if there was no such provision in the original charter.[59]

C. Contracts of Private Corporations — 1. IN GENERAL. Questions concerning impairment of the obligation of contracts of private corporations are of two classes: (1) Those which arise in connection with the peculiar attributes and incidents of corporate existence; and (2) those which are also raised in a consideration of the impairment of contracts of individuals.[60] Contracts are made by private corporations with the state, by means of charters and franchises.[61]

2. Stock-Holders' Contracts — a. Effect on Minority Stock-Holder of Change in Corporate Powers or Purposes. The state cannot bind a non-assenting minority stock-holder by any alteration of the charter which materially or essentially changes the powers, organization, or purposes of the corporation,[64] unless it has reserved the power to alter or amend the charter.[65] If the alteration works no such fundamental change, but takes the form of a grant of additional powers and privileges or a more adequate means of effectuating the corporate objects it is constitutional.[66]

b. Rule Applied — (I) Marriage. The most important of these contentions is the assertion that the marriage relation constitutes a contract which the legislature is forbidden to impair. Cases to that effect can indeed be found;[89] but the almost unanimous authority is to the contrary,[90] with its necessary corollaries, that the state may regulate the marriage status, together with the rights and duties involved in it,[91] and that the obligation of no contract is impaired by even the most stringent divorce legislation.[92]

(II) Judgments. So also as to judgments. As they derive none of their strength from the acts of individuals, they are not contracts that must be kept inviolate, although the remedy for their enforcement be ex contractu. It has been held therefore that no law touching judgments is invalid,[93] unless it affects injuriously a contract upon which the judgment is founded, which it may conceivably do.[94]

(III) Invalid Agreements. If the parties intend a contract, but the law for one reason or another affixes no resulting obligation, no question of impairment can arise, there being no contract to impair.[95]

2. Impairment of Obligation — a. In General. It may be said in general that a law which does not strike at the vitality of a contract either by altering its terms or preventing its preservation and enforcement does not impair its obligation.[96]

b. Annulment of Valid Contract. The most palpable and direct form of legislative impairment is in a law which effectually abrogates a valid contract. Such laws are undoubtedly unconstitutional.[97]

c. Material Alteration. Legislation that materially alters the character of the obligation is certainly bad.[98] Thus laws may be invalid that change the dimensions of the liability, as for example the amount of the liability[99] or the length of its existence.[1]

d. Added Conditions or Duties. Whether the state may impose added conditions or duties upon individuals with regard to their contracts depends upon the nature of such requirements; if they amount to a change of the obligation itself they are of course ineffectual;[2] but an obligation cannot be said to be impaired by a statute which merely imposes an additional duty on the owner in order that he may preserve it; therefore recording acts and acts of kindred nature are constitutional.[3]

e. Changing Nature of Estates. The nature of an estate may, it seems, be vitally altered without any transgression of the constitutional prohibition under consideration, so far at least as the owner of it is concerned.[4]

f. Matters of Discharge. A most important aspect of an executory contract is the matter of its discharge. A change in the place of performance is vital, when the obligation is thus made more onerous[5] or the value of its fulfilment lessened;[6] otherwise it is permissible.[7] The time for performance is generally not subject to alteration.[8] Of more difficulty are matters relating to the manner of discharge. If the parties expressly designate the medium of payment this must be regarded.[9] While the cases do not deny the inviolability of an implied agreement, they assume that when parties do not specify a medium, they intend the debt to be solvable in whatever may be legal tender under the law at the time of performance;[10] but there can be no implication that parties agree to accept an unusual and insufficient medium of payment.[11]

g. Alteration of Remedy. The statement is common that the state may regulate at will the remedy for the enforcement of an existing contract. Decisions prove the correctness of the assertion so far as regards the formal details of remedy.[12] Mere changes in the rules of evidence are unobjectionable.[13] Statutes of limitation are valid if they leave a reasonable time for the assertion of the right before it shall become barred.[14] And the added efficiency of a new remedy cannot be combated.[15] But the mere fact that legislation has a remedial complexion will not save it, when its effect is the impairment of the obligation of a contract. This is very evident, but it is necessary to be stated as a limiting proviso to the stereotyped formula that remedies are always subject to alteration. A legal obligation which cannot be enforced is worthless; therefore a statute, the practical effect of which is to prevent enforcement, is invalid.[16] And if a law makes a material subtraction from the efficiency of the remedy in force it may work an impairment,[17] as for instance where the security upon which a creditor places legal reliance is sensibly diminished.[18] It is evident too that the character of the contract itself may be materially changed by a law professing to act upon the remedy.[19]

h. Interest. The obligation to pay interest on money due by contract, be it express or implied from the presumed intention of the parties (in view of the law upon the subject when the contract was made), is apparently a part of the obligation of the contract. State laws therefore cannot change the rate of interest[20] or remit it altogether.[21] But the allowance of interest upon a judgment as well as the rate of it is probably within the control of the legislature, even with regard to past contracts.[22]

i. Governmental Regulations. It is observable that individuals must necessarily contract with full knowledge that the legislature may draw at any time from the vast reservoir of power, defined and undefined, intrusted to it.[23] Legislation which can properly be referred to this great fund of authority, however nearly it may affect the contract in question, is not invalid. But to describe the legitimate scope for the exercise of such governmental power would be to set forth the various subject-matter of the numerous cases illustrating the fact.[24]

j. Law in Force. It is remarkable that courts have been called upon to affirm the obvious truth that a law in force at a time when a contract is made cannot impair the obligation of that contract.[25]

k. Validating Invalid Agreement. Only less remarkable is the frequent necessity for deciding that a law is valid which gives binding force to a voluntary agreement void[26] or unenforceable[27] when made. An act validating usurious to be ineffectual where a reduction in the rate of interest after judgment had been entered.

23. Valid exercise of police power.— The fact that defendant had entered into a contract for the construction of his tenement-house before the taking effect of the Tenement-House Act (Laws (1901), c. 334), regulating their erection, did not relieve him from liability to its provisions, on the ground that the act impaired the obligation of his contract, it being a valid exercise of police power. l. Enforcing a Moral Duty. Finally statutes are constitutional which come to the aid of an equitable principle, enforcing a moral duty for the assertion of which there is no legal provision; as for instance statutes providing for the reimbursement of taxes in certain cases,[30] or betterment laws, allowing for the value of improvements made in good faith by certain occupants of land.[31]

E. Remedies on Contracts of Individuals and Private Corporations — 1. Legislative Contract in General — a. As to Subsequent Contracts. Legislation as to remedies is constitutional as regards contracts subsequently entered into.[32]

b. As to Prior Contracts. There is a distinction between laws affecting the contract itself[33] and laws affecting the remedy thereon.[34] The legislature has the power to change the remedy on an existing contract,[35] if in so doing it does not go too far. Therefore a statute regulating matters of procedure and the mode of pursuing an existing remedy with relation to past as well as future contracts is constitutional, provided that no new burdens and restrictions which would mate-

34. The remedies which the law provides to enforce a contract do not constitute a part of the contract itself, and are within the control of the legislature. Kendall v. Fader, 99 Ill. App. 104 [affirmed in 196 Ill. 221, 65 N. E. 318, 89 Am. St. Rep. 317].

35. A good example of this is the abolition of imprisonment for debt. Statutes tak-rially impair the value and benefit of the contract are imposed,[36] and in general a statute not operating directly on the contract but merely modifying the nature and extent of the remedy for its enforcement is not unconstitutional.[37] But although such laws are generally held not to be unconstitutional they may become so if they impair or destroy a right.[38] Therefore an alteration by law of an existing legal remedy for the enforcement of a contract to such an extent as materially to affect the rights which the parties had at the time the contract was entered into is unconstitutional.[39] And it is essential that whatever changes are made a remedy be left as substantial as that in existence when the contract was made, for the remedy being necessarily inseparable from the obligation, any law which clogs it with conditions and restrictions which materially impair its efficiency, and which did not exist when the contract was made, impairs the obligation.[40]

2. DEPRIVATION OF REMEDIES. It follows a fortiori from what has been said that in general the legislature cannot extinguish the remedy altogether.[41] Thus for instance statutes providing that persons aiding the Rebellion should be barred from the collection of their debts are held to impair the obligation of contracts.[42]

3. CUMULATIVE REMEDIES. The creation of an additional remedy to enforce existing contracts does not impair the obligation of contracts, and a statute providing for such an additional remedy is almost uniformly held constitutional.[43]

Remedy on contract against sound morals. —A remedy on a contract which is against sound morals, natural justice, and right, may exist by virtue of the positive law under which the contract was made; but such remedy can only be enforced so long as that law remains in effect. As such remedy derives all its support from the statute, it cannot, for any purpose, survive its repeal. Buckner v. Street, 1 Dill. (U. S.) 248, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 2,098, 13 Int. Rev. Rec. 114, 7 Nat. Statutes forbidding the maintenance of actions for liquors.— The general language of the act of 1851, "for the suppression of drinking houses and tippling shops," must be so limited as to forbid the maintenance of any action for the recovery or possession of such liquors, or their value, as were liable to seizure and forfeiture, or intended for sale in violation of the provisions of the act. If it forbade the maintenance of any action for liquors or their value, the act would be unconstitutional. Preston v. Drew, 33 Me. 558, 54 Am. Dec. 639. An act providing that no action shall be maintained in any court in the state for liquors sold in any other state with intent to enable any person to violate the act is not unconstitutional, as impairing the obligation of a contract, although the sale may have been valid under the laws of such other state. Subrogation.— It has been held in Maine that a statute limiting the liability of railroad corporations for fire communicated from a locomotive, to the excess of the injury of the property-owner over the net amount of insurance recovered, and which provides that if the insurance is not so recovered the policy shall be assigned to the railroad corporation which may sue thereon does not impair the obligation of a contract of insurance previously made because the liability of the railroad corporation was theretofore a statutory liability and could therefore be limited by statute and a contract between others could not keep it alive. The rights which a property-owner whose property was damaged by fire had against the railroad were not contractual rights, and could therefore be varied by statute, and the insurance company could not stand in a better position than such owner. 4. Remedies to Enforce Particular Contracts — a. Bonds. The obligors on a bond have no vested right in the state of law existing at the date of the bond. A new rule of law affecting the remedy on such bonds will apply to bonds existing at the date of its passage.[44]

b. Leases. Statutes giving a more efficient or speedy remedy for the enforcement of leases are not unconstitutional;[45] nor are legislative enactments restricting the remedy in existence at the time the lease was made, provided a sufficient remedy is left to the parties.[46]

c. Liens and Mortgages — (i) In General. The legislature may by statute modify the existing law as to mechanics' liens and the manner of their enforcement.[47] And minor details of the law relating to the remedy of mortgagees by foreclosure may be changed,[48] as for instance the length of time required by law for advertising mortgagees' sales;[49] but no substantial rights of the mortgagee to N. J. Acts (1880), p. 255, providing that in foreclosure proceedings thereafter commenced no personal decree for deficiency shall be taken, applies to mortgages given before the date of its passage, and is not, so far as cases in which there is a remedy at law are concerned, unconstitutional, as depriving a party of any remedy for enforcing a contract which existed when the contract was made, because a more efficacious remedy of the same sort at law remains; and the legislature may, without infringing the prohibition of the constitution, take away one of two or more equally efficacious remedies of the same sort. Newark Sav. Inst. v. Forman, 33 N. J. Eq. 436.

49. Thus the period of advertising mortgagees' sales may be reduced. The law in the enforcement of his security can be taken away,[50] as by laws which delay the foreclosure proceedings on which the mortgagee relied in taking the mortgage,[51] subject the mortgagee's estate to new conditions of redemption,[52] or deprive the mortgagee of the right to take possession of his security at the agreed time.[53]

(II) Requiring Enforcement of Security Before Action on Debt Secured. A statute requiring the holder of a mortgage to foreclose the mortgage before suing on the note secured has been held unconstitutional.[54]

5. Rights of Action and Defenses. It is competent for a state legislature to give a right of action on contracts which were prohibited at the time they were made; and such a statute does not impair the obligation of contracts, but merely gives a right of action.[55] Except, however, in certain instances it is not force at the time of the execution of a mortgage to the school fund required the county auditor to give sixty days' notice of sales for the non-payment of the principal or interest of the loans. In Thompson v. Cobb, 95 Tex. 140, 65 S. W. 1090, it was held that a statute requiring sales under deeds of trust to be made on a certain day of the month was unconstitutional as applied to a deed executed before its passage, and providing for a sale "at any time" after default.

6. Insolvency Laws[57] — a. In General. A state bankrupt or insolvent law which discharges a debt contracted subsequently to the passage of the law is constitutional and effective as to citizens of that state.[58] Such a law, however, purporting to discharge a debtor from all liability for any debt contracted before such law was passed on his surrendering his property in the manner it prescribes is void, as it impairs the obligation of the contract;[59] and this latter proposition is true, even though there was a similar law in force at the time the contract was entered into, provided the new law renders it substantially easier for the debtor to obtain his discharge.[60] If, however, the new law makes it harder for the debtor to get a discharge it is not unconstitutional and is applicable to contracts entered into before its passage.[61] And if an insolvency law is altogether repealed, the rights of an insolvent are not impaired within the meaning of the constitu-

The provision of an insolvent law which does not grant a discharge of the debtor on surrender of all his property to an assignee or a receiver, but merely gives a priority to creditors who will release the debtor over those who stand back and do not accept the conditions under which his property passes to the assignee or the receiver, and who alone can receive dividends from the estate, is not in conflict with the constitution of the state or of the United States. The law, by giving this priority, does not impair the obligation of contracts. Mather v. Nesbit, 4 McCrary (U. S.) 505, 13 Fed. 872.

Statute limiting time afforded for proof.— It is competent for the legislature to pass a law requiring a creditor of an insolvent estate to prove his claim before the commissioners within the time and according to the method prescribed by the act, or be forever barred, unless he shall find property of the intestate not accounted for by the administrator before distribution; the act not taking away all remedy from the creditor, but confining him to a specific one. Lightfoot v. Cole, 1 Wis. 26.

65. Requiring creditors to express dissent from proceedings.— The legislature has the power to require a creditor of an embarrassed corporation or individual to indicate his dissent from measures deemed essential to the common welfare of all concerned, or to suffer the penalty of being held to an assent, as such requirement does not impair the obligation of the contract between the debtor and creditor. 67. The insolvent act of 1853, section 19, provides that, if any creditor shall present a claim against any insolvent estate, who has a mortgage security or a lien on the property, the commissioners shall inquire into the cash value of the security, and report the same to the court, and that, unless such creditor shall elect to relinquish such security or lien, he shall be entitled to a dividend only upon the excess of such claim above the value of such security. The act of 1861 provided that the provisions of such section 19 should extend "to any and all securities by mortgage or otherwise, held by any creditor for any claim presented by him against any estate in settlement under the provisions of said act." It was held that the acts were not unconstitutional, as impairing a vested right of the creditor to a full dividend in the assigned estate. Mechanics', etc., Bank's Appeal, 31 Conn. 63. In Story v. Furman, 25 N. Y. 214, it was held that the state could regulate the manner of enforcement of stock-holders' liability to creditors of the corporation without impairing the obligation of the stock-holders' or creditors' contracts.

69. Hall v. Carey, 5 Ga. 239. In Persons v. Gardiner, 26 Misc. (N. Y.) 663, 56 N. Y. Suppl. 822, it was held that a certain act of the legislature making bank stock-holders individually liable for the debts of the bank to the extent of the par value of the stock merely gave the creditors of an insolvent bank the right to one suit against all stock-holders by one creditor for the benefit of himself and all the other creditors. A subsequent law amending the above act by providing that a suit against the stock-holders of an insolvent bank should be prosecuted only in the name of the receiver of such bank was not as against the stock-holders void, as impairing the obligation of existing contracts.

Receivership in case of mortgage.— On a bill brought by an ordinary creditor the appointing of a receiver of chattel property held by a mortgagee in possession, except in case of necessity to secure the rights of other parties, is to impair the obligations of the contract between the mortgagee and mortgagor, and is beyond the constitutional powers both of the court and of the legislature. e. Providing For Dissolution of Attachment[70] on Making Assignment For Creditors. Inasmuch as an attachment is merely a matter of remedy and not part of the contract between the parties, a law providing for the dissolution of attachments on making an assignment for creditors does not impair the obligation of contracts whether the contracts were made before[71] or after the act was passed.[72]

f. Contra.— The provision of the act of 1853, in regard to payment of debts of insolvent estates, that "all other claims or demands against said estate shall be paid pro rata," does not impair the lien of an execution placed in the hands of the sheriff in the lifetime of defendant. Kimball v. Jenkins, 11 Fla. 111, 89 Am. Dec. 237. The legislature cannot, after the creation of a debt, interfere to disturb the relation between creditor and debtor, or the relative rank of creditors inter sese. Two creditors, who stood equal originally, having an equal right to be paid, must forever remain equal, notwithstanding any legislative act apparently sanctioning a different doctrine. Atchafalaya R., etc., Co. v. Bean, 3 Rob. (La.) 414. Where there are two classes of creditors with already existing debts, a legislative act could not, by transfer or appropriation of a debtor's property, give to one class a preference, to the exclusion of the other class, to such a degree as to give to one class an immediate and annual source of payment, and postpone to the other all payment for possibly a period of forty years. It is no more in the power of law-makers than of debtors to effect an unequal distribution of the debtor's estate by making an application or transfer thereof among creditors already existing. instance a mortgage lien, cannot in general be abrogated or impaired by act of the legislature, for such an act would be within the inhibition of the constitution against the impairment of the obligation of contracts;[77] but a lien created by operation of law may be modified or abolished, for it is but a part of the remedy.[78]

b. Mechanics' and Laborers' Liens. Statutes giving to subcontractors or materialmen a lien on the property are valid as to building contracts entered into after such statutes have been enacted.[79] And where there is a contract between a landowner and a builder for the erection of a building on the owner's land, a mechanic's lien law subsequently enacted giving to subcontractors and materialmen who have sold on credit to the builder a lien on the property is generally held to be constitutional.[80] These decisions sometimes go on the theory that a lien law is

8. Appraisal Laws. Appraisal laws, or laws providing that property of the debtor shall not be sold on execution or by foreclosure for less than a certain value to be ascertained by appraisal are unconstitutional when applied to previously existing contracts. This is true whether they relate to sales under mortgages[83] or execution sales,[84] as a party to a contract has a constitutional right to execution without appraisal if no appraisal was required by the statutes in force at the time of the making of the contract. Where, however, an appraisal law is merely changed[85] or suspended[86] there is no impairment of contracts.

stead exemption is within the federal prohibition of laws impairing the obligation of contracts in so far as it relates to debts contracted before its adoption.[93] The same is true of a provision enlarging a homestead exemption;[94] but a law taking away such an exemption does not in general impair the obligation of any contract, and is therefore constitutional.[95]

c. Rents and Profits During Redemption Period. The rights for which a mortgagee has contracted cannot constitutionally be taken from him. Therefore if the law at the time the mortgage was made allowed the mortgagee to have the rents and profits during the redemption period in case the mortgagor should exercise his right to redeem, a statute providing that the mortgagor might during such period occupy the premises rent free would be void.[96] So also a statute taking from the purchaser at a subsequent foreclosure sale the right which at the time the mortgage was made he would have had to the rents and profits during the redemption period would be unconstitutional because reducing the mortgagee's security.[97] It has been held otherwise as to a statutory provision for rents and profits during the period of redemption from an execution sale.[98] the remedy merely and are not within the scope of the inhibition against laws impairing the obligation of contracts,[13] unless they entirely take away the remedy, or so encumber it with conditions as to render it impracticable;[14] and a state may therefore pass a new statute of limitations or modify a former statute.

(III) FIXING TIME FOR SUIT. Since statutes of limitations pertain to the remedy and not to the essence of contracts, an act extending the time for commencing suits is valid.[18]

(IV) REDUCING TIME FOR SUIT. So too an act shortening the period of limitations applying to both past and future contracts is not unconstitutional, where it provides for ample time for bringing actions on such past contracts.[19] But where it reduces the time for bringing suit to such an extent as to be unreasonable,[20] and a fortiori where no opportunity is left for an action to be brought,[21] it is unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of contracts.

b. Requiring Payment of Taxes as Condition Precedent to Action. It has been held that an act requiring the due payment of taxes on a debt as a condition precedent to maintaining an action thereon is unconstitutional as to prior contracts because impairing their obligation. The result of failure to pay duly might under such a statute bring about an entire deprivation of remedy.[24]

c. Jurisdiction of Courts. An act transferring the jurisdiction of one court to another is not unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of contracts, because it is merely a regulation of the tribunal to enforce the contract, not a regulation of the contract itself.[25] And statutes providing for the suspension[26] or abolition[27] of certain courts may be unobjectionable; but a provision that no court shall have jurisdiction of a certain kind of contract is of course bad.[28]

d. Prohibiting Waiver of Process. It has been held that a statute providing that acceptance of service and waiver of process should not in any action be authorized by the contract sued on does not impair the obligation of contracts made before its passage and containing stipulations for such acceptance of service and waiver of process.[29]

e. Parties. Statutes which change the rule as to parties necessary to the determination of a controversy may take effect upon prior as well as subsequent contracts, as the remedy only is affected. Acts providing that assignees of choses in action may sue in their own names come within this class, as do provisions as to the joinder of parties defendant.[30]

Modification of provisions for the confession of judgment.— In Beeson v. Beeson, 1 Harr. (Del.) 466, it was held that a statute making it the duty of a prothonotary to confess judgment did not impair the obligation of a contract providing that any attorney should appear and confess judgment.

f. Set-Offs. As a general rule a law providing for the set-off of mutual debts does not impair the obligation of contracts for the original contract remains unaffected, although the defendant is allowed to maintain in the same action his cross suit against the plaintiff.[31]

g. Evidence. A law which establishes a rule of evidence respecting certain past transactions cannot be said to impair the obligation of contracts. Laws which change the rules of evidence relate to the remedy only.[32] But a statute which, although expressed in terms of evidence, materially affects a contract by taking away a vested right is unconstitutional.[33]

h. Competency of Witness. Laws removing the disqualifications of witnesses and allowing them to testify are not unconstitutional as impairing the obligations of contracts.[34] And an act having the effect of disqualifying witnesses has been properly held to be within the power of the legislature.[35]

Washington.— In Palmer v. Laberee, 23 Wash. 409, 63 Pac. 216, it was held that the legislative intent was to deprive a judgment creditor of all remedy — either common law or statutory — in the matter of revival of judgments, and that the legislation must therefore be declared void.

fying the mode of levying whether enlarging or restricting a creditor's rights are constitutional.[37] But an act repealing the only adequate existing judgment without providing some other reasonable mode of enforcement in its place is unconstitutional.[38]

b. Stay of. An act suspending the enforcement of a judgment for a limited time is unconstitutional as applied to judgments rendered before its passage,[39] and in some cases after its passage;[40] and such a statute is not saved from unconstitutionality by the fact that a condition is annexed to the suspension, as for instance that the defendant must give bond[41] or that a certain proportion of the creditors must assent to the delay.[42]

d. Setting Aside Judgment. As no obligation is impaired by the giving of a right decision, statutes providing for the correction of a judgment by appeal, since they pertain merely to the remedy, are constitutional;[44] but in accordance with the law that a defense once perfect by virtue of the statute of limitations cannot be taken away, it is generally held that legislation giving the right to reopen a prior judgment which could not otherwise be reconsidered is unconstitutional.[45]

X. RETROSPECTIVE AND EX POST FACTO LAWS AND BILLS OF ATTAINDER.

A. Retrospective Laws — 1. DEFINITION. A retrospective law is a law which retrospects or looks back; a law which contemplates or affects an act done or a right accrued before its passage.[46] The term, however, has been technically used to indicate laws having reference to civil matters in distinction from ex post facto laws.[47]

2. VALIDITY IN ABSENCE OF CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION. There is no prohibition

the stipulated attorney's fees was a contract right, or on the ground that the mortgagee's rights are hampered by new conditions.

The Alabama statute of 1827, authorizing executions to be issued for costs against the plaintiffs in other executions, when the officer returns that the defendants in such executions have no property, is constitutional, although it apply to judgments rendered before as well as after the passing of the statute. Anonymous, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 228.

Ind. Acts (1891), p. 323, amending Ind. Acts (1889), c. 118, and providing that a contractor may maintain a suit to foreclose his lien on abutting property, and may collect therein an attorney's fee, does not impair the obligation of contracts within the prohibition of U. S. Const. art. 1, § 10, although construed to apply to an assessment levied before its passage. Dowell v. Talbot Paving Co., 138 Ind. 675, 38 N. E. 389; Lake Erie, etc., R. Co. v. Walters, 13 Ind. App. 275, 41 N. E. 465.

Iowa Laws (1880), c. 12, § 5, which limits to twenty-five dollars the amount of the attorney's fee to be taxed upon the foreclosure of school-fund mortgages, affects the remedy only, and may be construed as retroactive without being objectionable, as impairing the obligation of contracts. Appeal from decision of commissioners.— The Vermont act of 1827, in regard to the laying out of new highways, provided for a petition by a given number of freeholders, after which the road commissioners should decide whether to lay out the proposed road. In case of a decision for petitioners, the costs were to be taxed against the towns interested. The acts of the commissioners were to be final, and not subject to appeal. It was held that the Vermont act of 1828, which allowed an appeal on the part of the towns, or persons aggrieved by reason of damages, from decisions of the commissioners made before the passage of the act, but where the roads were not laid, is unconstitutional in so far as it is retroactive. 47. A statute providing that no person should be entitled to the benefit of the provisions of the habeas corpus act, for the reason that the judgment and sentence was erroneous as to time or place of imprisonment, but that in such cases it should be the duty of the court to sentence such person for the proper time and place of confinement was held not unconstitutional as retrospective, since retrospective laws relate only to civil rights and remedies. Ex p. Bethurum, 66 Mo. 545. Statutes relating to assessments for local improvements have been held valid, although retrospective, in case of a levy of a tax for a new bridge to be apportioned on the assessment of the previous year (Kelsey v. Nevada, 18 Cal. 629), and of an assessment on abutting owners for a sewer already built (Cleveland v. Tripp, 13 R. It was held that a statute afterward passed making the people of the detached territory liable to assist in paying the bonds was void.

Rep. 998, 64 S. W. 620, a statute providing that no action should be brought for recovery of land where the claimant relied alone on a patent from the commonwealth issued prior to 1820, against any person claiming such land by possession to a well-defined boundary under a title of record unless the claimant had actually paid legal taxes for at least three years prior to the suit, was held to be void so far as retroactive.

Exceptions.— But a statute providing that in suits on fire-insurance policies thereafter issued or renewed defendant should not deny that the property was at the time the policy was issued worth the full amount insured has been held valid. Daggs v. Orient Ins. Co., 136 Mo. 382, 38 S. W. 85, 58 Am. St. Rep. 638, 35 L. R. A. 227. Snider v. Brown, (Tenn. Ch. 1898) 48 S. W. 377. Also the repeal of a law granting a pension is constitutional. Chalk v. Darden, 47 Tex. 438.

New obligations were held to render the statute void in the case of a statute passed in March to take effect previous to January providing for returns by liquor-dealers of all liquors sold by them (McCowan v. Davidson, 43 Ga. 480), of a statute authorizing the board of education of a township to pay the board of education of a special school district set off and created therein a sum equal to the equitable share due the latter from the township school fund (Hamilton County v. Rosche, 50 Ohio St. 103, 33 N. E. 408, 40 Am. St. Rep. 653, 19 L. R. A. 584; State v. Board of Education, 12 Ohio Cir. Dec. 423), and of a statute allowing the jury to determine after the fact whether a particular railroad charge was excessive (Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Tennessee Railroad Commission, 19 Fed. 679).

Marriage and divorce.— A retrospective act making certain facts equivalent to a contract of marriage is void (Dunbarton v. Franklin, 19 N. H. 257), as is a statute making facts happening before its passage cause for divorce (Clark v. Clark, 10 N. H. 380, 34 Am. Dec. 165. Contra, Jones v. Jones, 2 Overt. (Tenn.) 2, 5 Am. Dec. 645).

59. As merely regulating rights a special statute appointing a new trustee, where the former trustee had died and the court was suspended (Hindman v. Piper, 50 Mo. 292), a general retrospective act enabling foreign corporations thereafter filing certificates to enforce contracts made while the law provided that contracts made before filing should be void, although the constitution prohibited any special act in aid of corporations or individuals (Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Winne, 20 Mont. 20, 49 Pac. 446), an act authorizing the reduction of the deposit accounts of insolvent savings banks so as to divide the losses equitably among the depositors (Simpson v. City Sav. Bank, 56 N. H. 466, 22 Am. Rep. 491), a statute allowing after-acquired property to pass by a will made prior to its enactment (Loveren v. Lamprey, 22 N. H. 434), an act forming a new town from parts of two existing towns and providing that certain portions of the property of the old towns shall belong to the new town (Bristol v. New Chester, 3 N. H. 524), an act prohibiting an action on any contract by certain classes unless certain formalities are complied with (Hartzell v. Warren, 11 Ohio Cir. Ct. 269, 1 Ohio Cir. Dec. 183), and a statute affecting the liquor laws where the constitution exchanging their form are held not to be included within the constitutional prohibition.[60]

c. Laws Affecting Remedies. Constitutional prohibitions against retrospective laws are generally held not to apply to acts which affect procedure only,[61] which merely add a remedy for an already existing right,[62] or limit the time of the remedy.[63] Retrospective laws affecting remedies are invalid, however, where the pressly authorized legislation against the liquor traffic (Heck v. State, 44 Ohio St. 536, 9 N. E. 305) have all been held valid.

60. Thus a statute providing that in a suit to recover land a defendant who has bona fide possession of such under an adverse claim of title may set off the value of bona fide improvements and that if they exceed the mesne profits he may recover the excess is constitutional. Lay v. Sheppard, 112 Ga. 111, 37 S. E. 132; Mills v. Geer, 111 Ga. 275, 36 S. E. 673, 52 L. R. A. 934. So a statute providing for the settlement of old land claims which enacted that a claimant who did not make his entry within a certain time should lose claim to that particular land, but entitling him to satisfaction of his claim in land has been held valid. Huntsman v. Randolph, 5 Hayw. (Tenn.) 263. And so an act providing for the lease or sale of estates tail without the consent of the remainder-men. Gilpin v. Williams, 25 Ohio St. 283.

Statutes relating to government are valid although retrospective. Thus a statute providing that citizens of the second class shall elect a treasurer for two years, and with an emergency clause providing that it should go into effect on the first Tuesday of April was held valid, although the statute was not signed till April 17. Sipe v. People, 26 Colo. 127, 56 Pac. 571. So a statute providing that when by extension of the limits of a city a portion of the territory of any school district adjacent has been incorporated therein the inhabitants of the remaining part of the district have the right to be annexed has been upheld. Litson v. Smith, 68 Mo. App. 397. And a statute providing for the formation of a government of its own by any city of one hundred thousand inhabitants and declaring that the courts shall take judicial notice of the population in accordance with the last enumeration is constitutional. State v. Doland, 93 Mo. 467, 6 S. W. 366.

Dec. 53), a statute forbidding injunctions in case of error or irregularity in certain proceedings pending at the passage of the act and providing a special remedy (Miller v. Graham, 17 Ohio St. 1), a statute providing that when, upon an appeal from the probate court, final judgment shall be rendered against the appellant in the district court, the court may, after notice, enter judgment against the sureties on the appeal-bond (Youst v. Willis, 5 Okla. 413, 49 Pac. 1014), and a statute providing that failure to submit an issue shall not be ground for reversal unless requested in writing by the party complaining (Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Shearman, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 456, 43 S. W. 930, 1063) have all been held valid. But see In re Kennett, 24 N. H. 139, where a statute changing the ground of the action or nature of the defense was said to be unconstitutional. See also Pickering v. Pickering, 19 N. H. 389, where a statute giving plaintiff the right, independent of leave of court, to file separate replications in all cases to each of several defendants was held invalid.

Co. v. Greene County Com'rs, 31 Ohio St. 338. See also Seeley v. Thomas, 31 Ohio St. 301), a statute authorizing an administrator de bonis non to bring action on the bond of a former executor, when prior to the act such suit had to be brought by creditors, legatees, etc. (Rairden v. Holden, 15 Ohio St. 207), and a statute providing that suit by an injured party for personal injuries shall not abate by the death of the party (Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Settle, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 357, 47 S. W. 825) have all been held constitutional. But see Tucker v. Burns, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 35.

B. Curative Acts — 1. Definition. A curative act is one intended to give legal effect to some past act or transaction which is ineffective because of neglect to comply with some requirement of law.[74]

2. Validity — a. In General. In general statutes curing defects in acts done or authorizing the exercise of powers which act retrospectively are valid, provided the legislature originally had authority to confer the powers or authorize the acts.[75]

b. Acts of Executors and Other Trustees. The legislature may legalize conveyances made by executors, administrators, guardians, or persons in similar positions of trust, which are irregular because of some omission or lack of power on the part of such trustee.[76]

c. Elections of Public Officers. Statutes curing irregularities in a prior election have been held valid.[77]

d. Judicial Proceedings. The legislature may cure judicial acts which are void through irregularity in procedure,[78] or in the time or place of the sitting of the court,[79] provided a party is deprived of no substantial right thereby.[80] But

A law changing the name of an offense may be an ex post facto law. Johnson v. State, 16 Tex. App. 402.

Where an act is criminal when done, but there is no provision as to its punishment, a law which provides punishment is ex post facto as to that act. Com. v. Edwards, 9 Dana (Ky.) 447. Indeterminate sentence laws, providing that prisoners shall be sentenced to a term of not less than a minimum nor more than a maximum number of years, the length of the term between such limits to depend upon the behavior of the prisoner, have been held to be ex post facto as to offenses committed while a prior law was in force which left the length of imprisonment to the discretion of the court imposing sentence. Murphy v. Com., 172 Mass. 264, 52 N. E. 505, 70 Am. St. Rep. 266, 43 L. R. A. 154; People v. Dane, 81 Mich. 36, 45 N. W. 655. But such a law is valid as to past offenses. 8. HABITUAL CRIMINAL LAWS. A law providing that an offender who has been convicted of several previous offenses may be punished as an habitual criminal, thus receiving a more severe sentence for his latest offense than he would have received but for his previous offenses, is not an ex post facto law as to such previous offenses, since the punishment is imposed upon the later offense.[52]

Subsequently a law was passed disqualifying from practice persons convicted of crime. Defendant was prosecuted, convicted, and sentenced for violation of this latter statute, and brought the case to the supreme court of the United States, contending that the statute punished his former offense of criminal malpractice by taking away his right to practise his profession, and was therefore an ex post facto law. It was held that the statute was not an ex post facto law, as the legislature had power to debar unfit persons from the practice of medicine.

9. Punishment of Offenders — a. Immunity Under Laws Repealing Former Statutes. Where an offense is made punishable under a new statute, which repeals former laws either expressly or by implication,[53] it sometimes happens that one who committed the offense before the new law went into effect cannot be convicted under either the old law or the new, since the old law has been repealed and the new law is ex post facto and void as to that offense,[54] and therefore an offender convicted of having committed the offense before the passage of the later statute must be discharged.[55]

b. Punishment Under Saving Clause. The offender may, however, be punished if the new law provides that as to offenses committed before it goes into effect the old law shall remain in force,[56] or that the offender may choose between the new punishment and the old.[57] And where the old law is so continued in force, and upon a bill of exceptions, appeal, or habeas corpus proceedings, it appears that the only error was in the sentence, the court, if so authorized by statute, may order the prisoner to be remanded for sentence under the old law.[58]

10. Construction. Laws which would be ex post facto if applied to offenses

United States.— McDonald v. Massachusetts, 180 U. S. 311, 21 S. Ct. 389, 45 L. ed. 542.

See 10 Cent. Dig. tit. "Constitutional Law," § 575.

But where the law provided that a prisoner convicted of an offense might be sentenced to a term of imprisonment beginning at the date of the expiration of a term which he was then serving, it was held ex post facto as to an offense committed under a law that provided that the term should begin at the date of the sentence, because in the case at hand it increased the punishment. Hannahan v. State, 7 Tex. App. 664.

53. New laws changing the penalty or the nature of the offense often repeal the old law by implication. State v. McDonald, 20 Minn. 136; Lindzey v. State, 65 Miss. 542, 5 So. 99, 7 Am. St. Rep. 674; State v. Massey, 103 N. C. 356, 9 S. E. 632, 4 L. R. (Tenn.) 423; In re Medley, 134 U. S. 160, 174, 10 S. Ct. 384, 33 L. ed. 835. But where the new law applies only to future offenses the old law is not by implication repealed. Murphy v. Massachusetts, 177 U. S. 155, 20 S. Ct. 639, 44 L. ed. 711. So where a new law was in the very words of the old, except that it reduced the punishment, the new law is obviously intended to continue the old law and does not repeal it. Hair v. State, 16 Nebr. 601, 21 N. W. 464; State v. Wish, 15 Nebr. 448, 19 N. W. 686. It has also been held that unless the language describing the offense was changed the old law was not repealed by the new. Dawson v. State, 6 Tex. 347. occurring before their passage will if possible be construed as having only a prospective effect.[59]

D. Bills of Attainder — 1. Definition. A bill of attainder is a legislative act which inflicts punishment without a judicial trial.[60]

2. Constitutionality. The constitution of the United States prohibits the passage of bills of attainder either by congress[61] or by the states.[62]

3. Laws Imposing Civil Disabilities. Laws imposing civil disabilities or forfeitures as a punishment for past acts have been held to be bills of attainder, since they impose such disabilities without a judicial trial;[63] but laws which do not proceed upon the idea of punishment have been held not to be bills of attainder, although imposing disabilities upon persons without judicial trial.[64] A law which expatriates or banishes a citizen by reason of race or color is a bill of attainder.[65]

XI. PRIVILEGES OR IMMUNITIES AND CLASS LEGISLATION.

A. Prohibitory Clauses. The federal constitution secures to the citizens of each state "all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states,"[66] and prohibits any state making or enforcing any law "which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States."[67] Many of the states have similar provisions in their constitutions.[68]

B. Scope of Prohibitions — 1. Original Provison. The word "citizen" as used in the federal constitution, article 4, section 2, does not include a person held in slavery,[69] a free negro who was born of parents brought here as slaves,[70] a resident of the Indian country,[71] or any artificial persons, such as corporations.[72] The privileges and immunities referred to therein are confined to those privileges and immunities which a state grants its own citizens. In short this provision prohibits the states from denying to a citizen of another state within the territories any of the privileges and immunities enjoyed by its own citizens by virtue of their being citizens.[73]

2. Amendment. The privileges and immunities secured by the fourteenth amendment are those which belong to citizenship of the United States as such, and which arise out of the nature and essential character of the national govern-

C. Application of Prohibitions — 1. Grants of Special Privileges or Immunities — a. counties from its operation while all other counties are subject to it would be unconstitutional.[81]

c. Nature of Franchise or Privilege — (i) In General — (A) Exclusive. Where the public interest seems to make it desirable the state may, unless restrained by its constitution,[82] grant special or exclusive privileges or immunities, monopolies, and franchises to persons or corporations.[83] Accordingly it has been held that the sale of trading stamps,[84] the removal of carcasses from the street,[85] and the maintenance of a slaughter-house[86] are suitable objects for exclusive grants. And where some public service is done in return or where it is for the public interest the federal constitution does not apply. Therefore the state legislature may grant exclusive bridge privileges within a certain length of shore where the public interest is thereby furthered,[87] exclusive ferry franchises,[88] to certain lessees of ferries a right to acquire by condemnation additional facilities,[89] exclusive street-railroad franchises,[90] exclusive franchises to build conduits or subways for the use of all electrical companies,[91] exclusive telegraph privileges between certain points,[92] and exclusive gas[93] and water-supply privileges.[94] But it has been held that the legislature cannot grant an exclusive right to use the streets for the purpose of laying pipes;[95] nor under the constitution of some states can it grant a toll-road franchise to a certain designated association only.[96] The state legislature may provide a commission for the supervision of all banks;[97] but cannot confine

2. Denial of Privileges and Immunities — a. In General. By the better interpretation of article 4, section 2, of the federal constitution, the right of ingress and egress was secured to free persons of color[28] and to citizens generally,[29] but not to the importation or exportation of slaves.[30] This provision secures to the citizens of each state the right to acquire and hold property in the same manner as a citizen of the state where the property is situated.[31] A state may provide that a widow shall not be entitled to an interest in lands conveyed by the husband when a wife at the time of conveyance was a non-resident of the state;[32] but statutes making invalid a devise or bequest because the beneficiary is a citizen of another state,[33] prohibiting the holding of slaves in the territory of the Louisiana Purchase,[34] and excluding all non-resident persons from being trustees[35] are unconstitutional. The privileges and immunities within the meaning of the fourteenth amendment include the right of ingress and egress from state to state and to the national capital,[36] the right to protection by the government,[37] the right to protection on the high seas and in foreign countries,[38] the right to the enjoyment of life and liberty, to acquire and possess property of every kind, and to pursue happiness and safety,[39] the right to act as sureties on bonds regardless of the pursuit of a certain business,[40] and the right to display the national flag;[41] but they do not include the right to be secure in one's house,[42] the right to attend the public schools of the state,[43] the right to share the property belonging to the people of the state,[44] the right to trial by jury in a state court for a state offense,[45] the right to practise law,[46] or the right of suffrage;[47] nor do they include public offices or their emoluments.[48] The fourteenth amendment does not extend to the states the operation of the fourth and fifth amendments,[49] which latter amendments are limited in their operations to the federal government.[50]

b. Foreign Corporations and Non-Residents. A corporation not being a citizen within the meaning of the federal constitution[51] it follows that a state may prohibit such corporations from doing business within its boundaries or may grant such privilege on conditions it deems best.[52] So too it may require a license from non-residents for the exercise of certain privileges.[53]

c. residents,[93] between citizens of one state and citizens of another,[94] or between products of one state and those of other states.[95]

d. Exercise of Taxing Power — (I) In General. The federal constitution, article 4, section 2, secures to the citizens of every other state the same right of acquiring and holding real and personal property and the same protection of the laws that is given to the citizens of the state making the laws. This means that the property of citizens of other states shall not be liable to any taxes which the property of citizens of the enacting state is not subject to. This does not, however, prevent a state from taxing all companies doing a certain kind of business;[96] from placing on foreign corporations a different tax from that placed on similar domestic corporations;[97] from placing a different tax on corporate stock owned by a non-resident than the tax on such stock owned by a resident;[98] from taxing the right to transfer property by will;[99] because in these cases the tax is on special privileges granted by the state, not on those privileges which are common to its citizens under its constitution and laws by virtue of their citizenship. So too a state may tax property brought into a state, owned by non-residents;[1] may tax live stock brought into the state to be grazed;[2] may tax all personal property at the residence of the owner;[3] may tax non-resident persons and associations doing business within the state the same as if they were residents,[4] and may tax property benefited, to pay for the cost of street improvements.[5] But a tax payable by a domestic corporation on the stock of non-resident holders only,[6] a tax on auction sales only when carried on by non-resident auctioneers,[7] a tax on foreigners in their character as foreigners,[8] or an inheritance tax on residents which does not lie on non-residents[9] would be unconstitutional.

(II) Determination and Charge. The state may provide a special method of valuation for lands belonging to non-residents,[10] but cannot restrict to residents the right to deduct debts from the property on which personal taxes are assessed.[11] So too it may provide the manner of charging the assessment[12] and for notice to residents only in assessing omitted property.[13]

e. Personal Discrimination — (I) By Reason of Race or Color[14] — (A) By State. The fourteenth amendment of the federal constitution prohibits discrimination in the right to exercise the rights of citizens of the United States because of race or color; therefore the states may not exclude negroes on account of their race from becoming jurors;[15] nor may they prohibit colored people from using public conveyances which are other than merely local, although they may provide that negroes and white people shall travel in separate cars, provided that equal accommodations are provided for each race.[16] So too the states may provide that the white children and the black children shall be educated in separate schools, provided the rights and privileges are equal.[17] This amendment does not, however, protect the privileges and immunities guaranteed to a citizen by the laws of his state; hence the states may deny to negroes the privilege of using any public conveyance for local travel,[18] may exclude persons of color not taxed from

(B) By Individual. Inasmuch as this amendment applies only to state action, any discrimination made by an individual would not be repugnant to it.[21]

(II) By Reason of Sex. The fourteenth amendment of the federal constitution not prohibiting discrimination because of sex, a state may exclude women from the jury,[22] or deny them the right to take out a license to sell intoxicating liquors.[23]

f. Remedial Discrimination — (I) In General. The states, except as particularly restricted by the federal constitution, may regulate the remedies in their courts, but once having created a remedy or redress the right to that remedy or redress is a fundamental right protected by the federal constitution. Therefore the citizens of one state or of the United States have in the other states the same remedies as the citizens thereof, and are equally subject to the remedial laws thereof when they are found therein.[24] No state can deny the right to a citizen of another state to bring suit in any state court having jurisdiction,[25] although it is not a right, privilege, or immunity of a citizen of the United States or of a state to have a controversy in a state court prosecuted or defended by one form of action rather than by another.[26] The states may pass statutes confirming certain sales;[27] restricting to citizens of the state the right of commencing the process of foreign attachments;[28] requiring service by publication for a certain length of time;[29] giving a preference in certain proceedings to certain kinds of creditors,[30] but not to citizens or residents only of the state where a foreign corporation is being wound up;[31] restraining citizens from prosecuting certain kinds of suits begun in another state in order to evade the laws of the first state;[32] prohibiting actions between foreign corporations;[33] providing conditions for recovery

(11) Against Non-Residents. The states may, however, discriminate between residents and non-residents in the remedies granted.[38] Thus security of costs may be required of non-residents,[39] but a statute cannot make it a misdemeanor to send out of a state for purposes of collection notes given for certain things.[40]

g. h. Regulation of Crimes and Punishments. As the fourteenth amendment refers to the fundamental rights of the citizens of the United States and not to the privileges or immunities of the individual as a citizen of a state, it does not therefore apply to state statutes making certain acts crimes,[43] to modes of criminal prosecution in state courts,[44] or to modes of punishment to be inflicted by the state courts.[45]

3. Class Legislation — a. Definition and Nature. Class legislation, often called local or private legislation, consists of those laws which are limited in their operation to certain individuals or corporations or to certain districts of the territory of the state.[46] Although from its nature this species of legislation must cast extra burdens on some and relieve others from burdens, yet aside from state inhibitions it has been held to be constitutional when the line drawn between two persons or places is reasonable.[47] Most of the state constitutions, however, contain provisions prohibiting the enactment of special laws granting any special or exclusive privileges, immunities, or franchises, or the passage of any laws for the benefit of individuals inconsistent with the general laws of the land;[48] but even under these provisions laws are generally valid which make no exceptions to the persons falling within their operation.[49] So too such inhi-

XII. EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS.

A. Constitutional Guaranty — 1. In General. While slavery was abolished by the thirteenth amendment to the constitution of the United States the negro was left under all his former disabilities, and with no political rights except such as the various states might give him,[94] and with no exemption from an unfair exercise of the power of state control which might be exercised against him.[95] The fourteenth amendment, however, provides that no state shall "deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."[96]

2. Limitations and Scope. This amendment creates no new legal rights, but operates upon the legal rights existing at its adoption.[97] It applies to all instrumentalities and agencies employed by the state in the administration of its government, to its executive, legislative, and judicial departments, and to the subordinate legislative bodies of counties and cities;[98] but not to individual infringements of the rights guaranteed by it;[99] or to legislation by congress.[1] The word "person" as used therein includes a foreign subject while within the United States as well as a citizen of the United States, it being unnecessary to demand the benefit of this clause that the complainant be a citizen of the state or a resident therein.[2] So too private corporations are "persons" within the meaning of this amendment, and are entitled, so far as their property is concerned, to the equal protection of the laws;[3] but a corporation is not a "citizen" within the meaning of ing a statute giving attorney's fees in actions for killing stock invalid, as it is not a penalty and plaintiff does not have to pay them if he does not succeed in his action.

this amendment,[4] and a state may prohibit it when organized in other states of the Union from transacting business within it,[5] or may prescribe the terms on which such business may be done.[6] When, however, a foreign-formed corporation has been regularly admitted to transact business within a state it is a person "within the jurisdiction" of that state, and within this amendment.[7] The words "within its jurisdiction" as used in this amendment include only those "persons" who are physically within the territorial jurisdiction of the state, the protection of whose laws they invoke,[8] and by "equal protection of the laws" is meant equal security under them to everyone, under similar terms, in his life, his liberty, his property, and in the pursuit of happiness, and exemption from any greater burdens and charges than such as are equally imposed upon all others under like circumstances.[9] Hence a statute bearing alike on all individuals of each class or on all districts in like conditions, with uniformity, does not deny the equal protection of the laws,[10] but such classification must not be arbitrary and without reason-tax,[27] or classifying lands in a certain relation to cities, into tracts used for agricultural purposes and tracts used for other purposes[28] is a rightful exercise of the power of a state, and not repugnant to this provision.

2. ASSESSMENTS FOR LOCAL IMPROVEMENTS. A city may be given control of its streets, alleys, etc., with power to construct and reconstruct them, and to pay for such work the city may make assessments.[29] It was formerly held that the whole cost could be assessed on the owners of the land fronting on the improvement, regardless of the benefits actually received,[30] on the ground that the legislature had the power to determine who was benefited and to what extent, and such determination precluded all judicial inquiry;[31] but under the better rule an abutting landowner can be assessed only to the amount of the benefit he has received from the improvement,[32] and if there is an assessment to any substantial amount in excess of the benefits received, there is pro tanto a taking without compensation and a denial of the equal protection of the laws.[33] So too the state or its agents may designate what district is benefited by an improvement, and may direct that the assessment for such improvement be placed on that district;[34] and in pursuance of this power the assessment is usually made on the owners of the land abutting on the improvement.[35]

3. BUILDING REGULATIONS. A city may by ordinance forbid the erection,[36] alteration, or repair[37] of buildings within certain districts or boundaries without denying the equal protection of the law, as such regulations are within the police power.

4. BUSINESS, TRADE, OR PROFESSIONAL REGULATIONS — a. In General. power[39] of the legislature, which enables it to make regulations and restrictions for the health, morals, safety, and welfare of the general public. Whenever therefore any business, occupation, rights, franchises, or privileges become obnoxious to the public health, manners, or morals, they may be regulated, even to suppression, and individual rights must give way to the welfare of the public.[40] In making such regulations some discrimination is necessary, and this alone will not render the regulation unconstitutional, as being a denial of equal protection of the law. It is only when the discrimination is clearly arbitrary, unjust, and without reasonable ground that the regulation is declared by the courts to be unconstitutional.[41] Such regulations may properly be made concerning the carrying on of laundries,[42] but cannot exclude them from certain localities regardless of the structure or appliances used;[43] the maintenance of a slaughter-house and the control and supervision of the inspection of animals slaughtered for market;[44] the carrying on of the business of fat-rendering, bone-boiling, etc., within the limits of any incorporated city or within three miles from such limits;[45] the operation of public warehouses;[46] the maintenance of private markets;[47] the establishment of hospitals in the built-up portions of the cities;[48] the landing of passengers and goods within a locality infected with an infectious or contagious disease;[49] the sanitary condition of places where cows are kept;[50] the sale and use of opium

b. Employment and Payment of Laborers. The right to labor or employ labor and make contracts in respect thereto upon such terms as may be agreed upon between parties sui juris cannot be interfered with by the legislature except upon some reasonable ground;[68] but where such grounds exist the law may be limited to the dangers peculiar to a particular industry, without denying to any person the equal protection of the law.[69] Therefore a law limiting the period of daily employment of working men in certain positions,[70] the aggregate hours per week;[71] or the hours a woman or minor child may work in certain factories;[72] or prohibiting the employment by liquor-sellers of female servants in their places of business,[73] is constitutional. But a law prohibiting the employment of Chinese[74] or otherwise so regulating the right to employ labor that a discrimination is thereby made against persons within the United States[75] denies the equal protection of the laws and is unconstitutional. So too a state may pass a law requiring all corporations to pay their employees at stated intervals;[76] and a similar statute applying to individuals and partnerships would not deny the equal protection of the law to either;[77] nor is such a law made invalid by exempting religious, literary, or charitable corporations from its operation.[78] So also a statute providing for the payment by railroad corporations of their discharged employees on the day of their discharge is valid.[79] But acts providing that wages shall be paid by certain kinds of corporations only in United States money or draft or check on a bank where money is already deposited to meet the same,[80] or prohibiting the withholding of wages of an employee for imperfect work,[81] or the payment by coal-mining companies, firms, etc., of their labor in c. Rates and Charges of Quasi-Public Corporations —(i) In General. When property is affected by public interest, such as railroads,[83] corporations engaged under legislative authority in maintaining turnpike roads for the use of which tolls are exacted,[84] express companies,[85] public warehouses,[86] grain elevators not used by the owner exclusively,[87] stock-yards,[88] or telegraph and telephone companies,[89] such property becomes to the extent of such interest subject to public control and subject of course to the constitutional limitations against the deprivation of property without compensation or without due process of law, or to a denial of the equal protection of the laws.[90] Hence where the legislature has fixed a maximum charge which allows a railroad or other corporation to declare a reasonable dividend after paying its expenses there is no denial of the equal protection of the laws;[91] but where the maximum rates prescribed by the legislature are less than the cost of performing the service, they are unreasonable and confiscatory, and their enforcement would be a taking of property without due process of law and a denial of the equal protection of the laws.[92] The rates so fixed must apply not solely to corporations operating railroads but also to individuals operating railroads in like manner.[93]

(II) DETERMINATION OF. The legislature, itself or through a railroad commissioner, etc., prescribes the rates. The courts decide whether it is so unjust and unreasonable as to conflict with the constitutional guaranties. The legislature cannot say finally that a rate is just and reasonable, nor can the court revise or change the rates or say what would be a reasonable and just rate.[94]

5. INSURANCE REGULATIONS.[95] Legislation forbidding any person, partnership, or association to issue any policy of insurance against fire unless expressly so authorized by a charter of incorporation does not deny the equal protection of the laws.[96] So also the states may provide that a fire-insurance policy in case of total loss shall be a liquidated claim against the company for the full amount thereof,[97] and that any stipulation in the policy to the contrary shall be void;[98] or that no misrepresentation made in obtaining a life-insurance policy shall be material, unless actually contributing to the contingency on which the policy is to become due.[99] Similarly a statute providing that health and life insurance companies, failing to pay a loss, shall in addition thereto pay attorney's fees, does not deny the equal protection of the laws.[1]

6. LICENSES. A statute may constitutionally place a license-tax upon, or require a license from elevators and warehouses on a railroad right of way or depot grounds,[2] sugar refineries,[3] laundries,[4] stages used for the transportation of

But a statute requiring a license from all people except citizens of a certain county, who sell or take orders for goods and merchandise not the product of that county,[19] or an ordinance prohibiting the stabling of more than two horses without a permit[20] is unequal in its operation and therefore unconstitutional. The granting of such licenses may be made discretionary with a certain official or body of officials,[21] or may depend on the consent of a certain number of the nearest bona fide residents,[22] the citizenship, habits, character, sex, or age of the applicant.[23]

7. RAILROAD REGULATIONS.[24] Railroad regulations may not only prevent any unjust discrimination and any unreasonable or extortionate charges,[25] but may embrace provisions for the safety, security, and convenience of the public, such as requiring railroads to fence their tracks and put in cattle-guards, etc.,[26] to make and pay for grade crossings,[27] to keep a watchman at a certain turnpike crossing,[28] or to put in tracks connecting with other railroads,[29] regulating the moving or speed of trains within the limits of the city;[30] prohibiting the operation of the road upon certain streets of the city;[31] requiring a certain kind of heating of the cars;[32] requiring in all passenger depots where there is a telegraph office the noting of all trains which are late;[33] for establishing railroad commissioners and requiring the railroads to pay the expenses thereof.[34]

8. SALE OF GOODS. It is not necessary that a statute regulating the sale of goods shall embrace all kinds of property, either personal or real, but it is sufficient if the selection of the articles and property is based on reasonable and just grounds of difference and the prohibition comprehends all kinds of property within the relations and circumstances which constitute the distinction, extends equally to every citizen and all classes of citizens, and denies to no one a privilege which another is permitted under like circumstances to exercise or employ.[35] Accordingly statutes making it unlawful to purchase options on certain commodi-

9. Street and Highway Regulations.[41] While the right of the state to legislate with regard to its streets, highways, etc., is subject to the same limitations as its rights to legislate in respect to other public matters,[42] yet as this amendment in no way impairs the police power of a state,[43] it follows that it may make rules and regulations governing the use of its highways, streets, parks, and thoroughfares, conducive to their safety and cleanliness and to good order thereon,[44] may prohibit altogether certain acts such as bicycle riding on the sidewalk,[45] may authorize harbor-masters to station vessels and to assign to each its place,[46] or may designate the liability for damage occasioned by the doing of a certain act.[47] Where a state constitution provides that a municipality shall lay a tax for a certain purpose, such municipality cannot oblige individual people to do the act for which the tax was provided.[48]

11. Taxation[53] — a. In General. The constitution of the United States contains no provision, express or implied, that taxes must be equal and uniform, nor is there any fundamental principle of free government or natural justice requiring uniformity and equality. In fact the provisions of the constitution are inconsistent with the existence of a theory of equality in taxation, which the judicial department is empowered to define and impose on the legislative. When the power of taxation is exercised considerations of public policy must dominate;[54] and the only rule of equality in respect to taxation is that the same means and methods shall be applied impartially to all the constituents of each class, so that the law shall act equally and uniformly upon all persons in similar circumstances.[55] Therefore uniformity is necessary to the validity of a tax levied upon the persons or property of citizens, but not to the validity of a tax on a corporation as such.[56] A greater tax may be placed on a foreign corporation than on a domestic one,[57] nor does the payment of a tax on goods where shipped exempt them from taxation where they are sold.[58] A state cannot, however, discriminate between the property of citizens and that of non-residents[59] or place a tax on the employment of aliens only.[60]

b. Determination. Different methods of ascertaining value, and different methods and remedies for the collection of properly assessed taxes may be provided. For these purposes the differences in the nature and uses of property may be taken into consideration; but all questions of this character relate to methods of procedure and not to the fundamental right involved.[61] The state classes of property.[72] So also a special tax may be put on a special district for a local purpose,[73] but such local tax cannot exclude from its benefits any person on whom it falls.[74]

12. Discriminations — a. In General. The fourteenth amendment was intended to secure equality of rights to all people;[75] and this includes equal exemption with others of the same class from all charges and burdens of every kind,[76] although a law may discriminate in favor of a certain class, and if founded upon a reasonable distinction in principle it does not deny the equal protection of the laws.[77]

b. By Reason of Race or Color[78]— (I) Rule Stated. This prohibition does, however, clearly prohibit unfriendly legislation distinctly because of color[79] or race.[80] Hence a city ordinance requiring all the inhabitants of a certain race to remove from the portion of a city theretofore occupied by them to another designated portion of the city,[81] an act which prohibits or places a penalty on the employment of a person because of his race,[82] a statute excluding negroes from the benefits of a homestead act,[83] or a statute which sets aside any race of foreigners as special objects of taxation and taxing them in their character as foreigners[84] is unconstitutional.

(II) Application of Rule— (A) Competency of Witnesses.[85] The fourteenth amendment does not apply so as to prevent congress from regulating the competency of witnesses in the United States court[86] or the state legislature as to their competency in state courts,[87] except where congress has provided that persons of those races shall have equal rights with white people to give evidence.[88]

(B) Constitution of Juries.[89] A citizen cannot be excluded from acting on a jury merely because of his race or color;[90] but this does not mean that a jury higher rate of taxation on the estates of larger value than on the estates of smaller value denies the equal protection of the laws as declared in the Bill of Rights, § 2.

must be composed of persons of each race in proportion to their respective numbers as citizens;[91] nor has any one a right to demand that a jury shall be composed of persons of both races.[92] So too this amendment applies only to race or color, and does not prevent exclusion because of lack of some reasonable qualification.[93]

(c) Intermarriage. The courts do not treat marriage as a mere contract between the parties, but as a status or institution;[94] and a statute prohibiting the marriage relation between white persons and persons of African descent in no way impairs their legal rights or denies to them equal protection of the laws.[95] But where the state constitution provides that the social status of the citizen shall never be the subject of legislation, the legislature cannot repeal former laws prohibiting marriages between white and colored persons nor enact new laws concerning such marriages.[96]

(d) Public Conveyances, Schools, and Places of Amusement, Etc.[97] Equality before the law means that all people shall have equal rights and share equal burdens, but not that every person shall have the identical rights and burdens which his neighbor has. Where the accommodations or privileges granted the colored race are equal to those granted the white race there is no denial of the equal protection of the laws. is made a crime for one person must be made a crime equally if done by any person coming within the same description as the first, or the equal protection of the laws will be denied to the former.[10] With this distinction in view, however, the legislature has a wide discretion in declaring certain acts to be crimes. Thus it may so declare with regard to the enticing away of a servant under a written contract,[11] playing on musical instruments or having women present in public drinking saloons after midnight,[12] obtaining board or lodging in any hotel by means of any trick or deception,[13] counterfeiting the labels of working-men's unions,[14] receiving money by a banker or broker for deposit with knowledge that he is unsafe or insolvent,[15] and refusing to disclose when convicted of intoxication, where and from whom the liquor was procured.[16]

e. In Criminal Punishment. The punishment for the same offense must be the same for all persons in the same class.[17] This does not prevent the legislature from providing a special punishment for a special class of offenders[18] or increase the punishment of previous offenders,[19] although it does prevent it from prescribing for an escaped prisoner a term equal to his original term.[20]

13. Creation or Discharge of Liability — a. In General. In the exercise of the police power the legislature, if they think it is for the public good, may in many instances place certain liabilities on certain parties, and discharge certain liabilities from other parties, without denying the equal protection of the laws. Thus a statute may give a right to security fees,[21] a certain lien for a certain kind of work,[22] but a statute may not constitutionally give a lien to certain persons named therein;[23] may allow attorney's fees as part of the judgment in particular classes of actions,[24] and such allowance may be made to depend on the nature of

b. As to Counties. Statutes making counties liable for injuries caused by defects in highways or bridges are valid.[33]

c. As to Railways. In the United States the strict rule of the common law of England absolving a railroad from liability for accidental fires, without proof of negligence on its part,[34] has not been generally adopted; but the matter has been regulated in many of the states by statute; and a statute making railroad corporations liable in damages for fire caused by locomotive sparks without proof of negligence on the part of the corporation or its employees is usually held to be a valid exercise of the police power and not a denial of the equal protection of the law.[35] So too the legislature may pass a statute making railroad companies liable for stock injured or killed because of the want of a fence along the track, when the duty of building and maintaining this fence has already been placed on the com-indebtedness within fifteen days, as against Tex. Const. art. 10, § 2); Jolliffe v. Brown, 14 Wash. 155, 44 Pac. 149, 53 Am. St. Rep. 868.

B. General Nature and Principles. The term "due process of law" is synonymous with "law of the land."[63] The constitution contains no description of those processes which it was intended to allow or forbid, and it does not even declare what principles are to be applied to ascertain whether it be due process. But clearly it was not left to the legislative power to enact any process which might be devised.[64] "Due process of law" does not mean the general body of the law, common and statute, as it was at the time the constitution took effect. It means certain fundamental rights, which our system of jurisprudence has always recognized.[65] The constitutional provisions that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law[66] extend to every governmental proceeding which may interfere with personal or property rights, whether the proceeding be legislative, judicial, administrative, or executive,[67] and

Although the phrase "law of the land" as originally used referred to trial by wager of battle or by ordeal, as distinguished from trial by one's peers, it has long been settled in England and in America that under modern law and institutions this phrase and "due process of law" are identical in meaning. No freeman shall be taken, or imprisoned, or disseized, or outlawed, or in any other manner injured, nor will we proceed against him, unless by the lawful judgment of his peers, or by the law of the land.

relate to that class of rights the protection of which is peculiarly within the province of the judicial branch of the government.[68] The term "due process of law," when applied to judicial proceedings, means that there must be a competent tribunal to pass on the subject-matter; notice actual or constructive, an opportunity to appear and produce evidence, to be heard in person or by counsel; and if the subject-matter involves the determination of tne personal liability of defendant he must be brought within the jurisdiction by service of process within the state, or by his voluntary appearance. And there must be a course of legal proceedings according to those rules and principles which have been established by our jurisprudence for the protection and enforcement of private rights.[69] But the forms of procedure and practice may be changed; and the constitution is satisfied if the substance of the right is not affected and if an opportunity is afforded to invoke the equal protection of the law by judicial proceedings appropriate and adequate.[70] Although due process of law implies generally the course of judicial proceedings established at the time the constitution was framed, due process is not limited to such, but refers also to many measures of a summary nature.[71] The fifth amendment of the federal constitution is a restriction only upon the federal government, and not upon the states.[72] The fourteenth amendment is a restriction upon the states;[73] it adds nothing to the right of one citizen against another, but simply furnishes a guaranty against any encroachment by the state upon the fundamental rights which belong to every citizen.[74]

C. Persons Protected. The constitutional right to be secured against deprivation of liberty or property without due process of law extends to all natural persons within the jurisdiction of the United States, independently of any treaty stipulations with the nations to whom such persons may owe allegiance,[75] and protects alien enemies.[76] The weight of authority holds that private corporations are "persons" within the fourteenth amendment, prohibiting the state from depriving any "person" of property without due process of law,[77] and prior to the adoption of the fourteenth amendment it was held that the property and franchises of a private corporation were property which was entitled to the same constitutional protection as the property of individuals.[78] Except where constitutional restriction, state or national, is imposed, the corporate existence, duties, and powers of counties, cities, and towns are subject to legislative control.[79] Municipal corporations cannot sustain their privileges or their existence upon anything like a contract between themselves and the legislature; and the constant practice is to so enlarge or diminish their territory as to reapportion their property.[80] The contracts made by municipal corporations are also to a considerable degree subject to legislative control;[81] but it is unconstitutional to provide that a city shall be discharged from contractual obligations already incurred in favor of an individual.[82] Legislative power over municipal corporations in their public or governmental character is far more extensive than over them in their private character; in the latter aspect their rights are analogous to those of private corporations.[83]

D. Deprivation of Life or Liberty — 1. IN GENERAL. The words "life" and "liberty" are used in the fourteenth amendment in a broad sense, and have received liberal construction, the idea being that the constitutional safeguards to life and liberty embrace far more than the preservation of existence, and protection from arbitrary physical punishment — although the provisions of criminal law cover an important aspect of personal rights — and secure the broader rights, such as freedom to live, work, and enjoy life untrammeled, except so far as restraints upon individual action appear, according to the fundamental and established principles of law, to be necessary for the preservation and promotion of the public health, comfort, morals, safety, and welfare.[84]

2. Contempt Proceedings. The power to commit or fine for a contempt committed in the presence of the court may be exercised in a summary manner;[85] but in case of a contempt not committed in the presence of the court, due process of law requires that the accused shall have a day in court.[86]

b. Creation or Definition of Offenses. As in the formation of the federal constitution the existing police powers of the states were not granted to the federal government they have the right, by virtue of their inherent sovereignty, to insure the protection of all property and of the lives, health, comfort, and safety of all persons within their jurisdiction, by reasonable criminal provisions for the crea-

But when a person accused of crime within a state is subjected, like all other persons in the state, to the law in its regular course of administration in courts of justice, the judgment so arrived at cannot be held to be such an unrestrained and arbitrary exercise of power as to be unconstitutional; and if so convicted he cannot be released on habeas corpus under the fourteenth amendment. Ex p. Converse, 137 U. ture, in creating offenses, is not confined to a definition of specific acts or omissions;[92] need not define the offense as a felony or misdemeanor, but may provide punishment in the alternative;[93] and may authorize a jury under an indictment for a graver offense to punish for a lesser offense.[94]

c. Jurisdiction and Venue. The established principles of law must be adhered to in all matters affecting jurisdiction and venue, and departure from them is a violation of the constitution.[95]

d. Former Jeopardy. Within the meaning of the fourteenth amendment, the trial and commitment, either in state or federal courts, of one who has already been tried and acquitted of the same offense is depriving him of his liberty without due process of law.[96]

e. Preliminary Complaint. A complaint running against no person in particular, and not containing a charge of the substantive facts necessary to constitute the offense, is not due process.[97]

f. Warrant and Arrest. Statutes authorizing an arrest without a warrant in certain cases do not deprive the person arrested of liberty without due process of law.[98] The arrest, however, must have been made in pursuance of some method

Persons illegally brought within jurisdiction.— As the phrase "due process of law" refers to the state's own process, a lawful arrest under authority of a state court of one unlawfully brought into the state by private persons is not a violation of the constitutional safeguard. In re Mahon, 34 Fed. 525. See also In re Von Der Ahe, 85 Fed. 959. And the mere fact that a criminal is illegally carried, against his will, into the United States from a foreign country, with no reference to extradition treaties, does not render his sub-warranted by the established principles of law in the jurisdiction where it was made.[99]

g. Preliminary Examination. It is valid to provide that informations may be filed without preliminary examination, whenever the prosecuting attorney is satisfied that an offense has been committed in his county.[1]

h. Indictment or Information. The privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States do not include the right to be exempt from any trial in a state court for a state offense, unless upon presentment by a grand jury; but a proceeding by information instead of an indictment by a grand jury is sufficient to constitute due process of law.[2]

i. Rules of Evidence. A state may establish and alter the rules of evidence as to what constitutes proof of an offense, provided the accused is given a fair opportunity to explain and contest the charge, and the rule is not arbitrary in character.[3] So a state may prescribe what shall be considered presumptive evi-sequent trial and conviction, based upon jurisdiction regularly acquired by his presence in the country, invalid. Ker v. Illinois, 119 U. S. 436, 7 S. Ct. 225, 30 L. ed. 421. See also ARREST, 3 Cyc. 874.

dence of guilt.[4] This principle has been frequently tested in legislation, aimed at regulation or suppression of the liquor traffic, and statutes establishing presumptions of guilt from certain evidence have been generally sustained,[5] although their arbitrary character at times has rendered them invalid.[6] Rules made for the enforcement of food regulations have also been generally sustained.[7]

j. Course and Conduct of Trial. A state may constitutionally provide for a speedy trial, without postponement.[8] It is also constitutional to provide that in certain criminal cases the people shall have a certain number of peremptory challenges.[9] So a prisoner in a prosecution for murder is not deprived of a trial by due process of law because the prosecuting attorney was represented by another counsel with the court's assent.[10] And a statute authorizing the state in effect to contradict its own witness, and to ask him if he has made other statements, does not violate the fourteenth amendment.[11] It is not, however, within the province of the legislature to prescribe what instructions a court shall give in a murder case, unless the legislature has first embodied such instructions in an act as the law of the land.[12]

ments, leaving the choice of penalty in the courts.[16] The legislature may also provide for punishment of death by electrocution, since such is not a cruel and unusual punishment in the sense forbidden by the fourteenth amendment.[17] So to constitute due process it is not necessary that the mode of confinement or of execution of sentence shall be defined with such certainty that the accused may know all details.[18] And generally it is for the states, by their courts or otherwise, to determine the interpretation of their processes, and the question whether, under their own procedure, execution of sentence may be had;[19] but arbitrary action is an unconstitutional deprivation of liberty.[20]

as can be resorted to directly as of right by the one confined,[30] and are not constitutional if such as to leave the liberty of the person confined to the pleasure of officials, such as prison inspectors.[31]

d. Paupers and Vagrants. By virtue of their inherent sovereignty, both the state and federal governments may control the lives and property of all persons within their jurisdictions who from incompetence or unfitness endanger the welfare of the community; and so may cause to be committed all paupers, vagrants, and idle persons, not having any visible means of support and living without employment.[32]

e. Persons Endangering the Public Health. All persons infected with, or exposed to, dangerous or contagious diseases may be arrested and confined in certain hospitals or other designated places.[33]

E. Deprivation of Property — 1. In General. The term "property"[34] is used in a broad sense in the constitutional guaranty forbidding the deprivation of property without due process of law, and has received a liberal construction analogous in spirit to that applied to "life" and "liberty."[35] All rights to the use, title, and possession of private property are held subject to the right of the legislature to control them, according to the established principles of our jurisprudence, so far as may be necessary for the public welfare, the only limitations upon the legislative power being found in specific and applicable constitutional restrictions.[36]

2. CIVIL PROCEEDINGS AND REMEDIES — a. In General. While forms of procedure and practice may be altered, due process requires that the substance of property rights be preserved, and that an opportunity remain to invoke the equal protection of the law by some judicial proceedings adequate and appropriate.[37] The fourteenth amendment does not undertake to control the power of a state to determine by what process legal rights may be asserted or legal obligations be enforced, provided the method of procedure adopted for these purposes gives reasonable notice and affords fair opportunity to be heard before the issues are decided.[38]

b. Particular Requirements. Due process requires in all cases an impartial tribunal, competent by the law of its creation to pass upon the subject-matter of investigation and adjudication.[49] But congress may determine what property of the public enemy shall be confiscated.[50]

4. Creation of Liability — a. For Negligence of Servant.[51] The state may enlarge the liability of a master for the negligence of a servant, provided the master is given a fair opportunity to contest.[52]

b. For Injuries From Defective Highway.[53] Municipal corporations may be made liable for defects in highways, as highways are for public and not for local use, and the fact that the officials charged with the duty of maintaining the highways are not agents of the municipality is immaterial.[54]

c. For Property Destroyed by Mob. The people of the local divisions of a state may be required to pay for any damages done to property within such local divisions, and such an act is not a taking of property without due process of law.[55]

d. For Damages by Animals.[56] The owner of animals may be charged with liability for damage done by them, but he is entitled to a judicial determination of the extent of liability.[57]

f. Of Owner For Acts of Another. As an owner of property may under the police power be absolutely prohibited from allowing his property to be used in a manner harmful to the public comfort and health, the state may prescribe reasonable conditions upon him in permitting his use for such purposes, and so one leasing his property for the sale of intoxicating liquor may be made directly liable for all injuries caused by such sales[60] or may be held secondarily responsible for

g. Of Railroads[63] — (i) For Failure to Fence Right of Way. In consideration of the valuable franchises granted to railroads and by virtue of its police power, the state may require railroads to construct and maintain without compensation fences along their right of way, and may provide for allowance of damages from diminution in value of farms resulting from failure to fence;[64] may hold a railroad company liable for damages occasioned by or resulting from an accident or collision, unless the company shows that the statutory requirements have been performed by it;[65] and may provide that where a railroad fails to keep its way fenced as specified by law, it shall be liable for the amount of all damages resulting from injuries to stock getting upon the tracks because of defects in the fences.[66]

(ii) For Fire Set by Locomotive. The state may provide that every railroad company operating within the state shall be liable, irrespective of negligence, for damages caused by fire from its locomotives.[67]

(iii) For Injury to Passenger and Employee. Railroads may be made liable for injuries to passengers except where the injury arises from the criminal negligence of the person injured or when the injury complained of results from violation of some expressed rule or regulation of said road actually brought to the passenger's notice,[68] and may be made liable to their employees for all damages occasioned by negligence or mismanagement of their agents.[69]

So the Illinois act of 1885, making railroad companies liable for all expenses of a coroner and his inquest and the burial of all persons who may die on its cars or who may be killed by collision, or other accident occurring to such cars or otherwise, is unconstitutional and void, so far as it attempts to make such companies liable in cases where they have violated no law and have been guilty of no negligence. h. Right of Action of Parent For Injury to Child.[74] A parent may be authorized to maintain an action in his own name for injury to his minor child, and such right does not, either as to the child or the defendant, take property without due process of law.[75]

i. Penalties.[76] The state may impose penalties as a means of enforcing its right of control over business affected with a public interest. It may so punish for exceeding legal charges for transportation[77] or for delay in the transportation of goods;[78] may authorize recovery against a railroad company of double damages for stock killed by its negligence or breach of statutory duty;[79] or may penalize insurance companies for failure to pay losses promptly.[80] Penalties may be used to assist in executing license and revenue laws[81] and in general to enforce police regulations.[82]

5. Discharge of Liability — a. In General. The fourteenth amendment protects every species of property alike, except such as in its nature and origin is subject to legislative control; so vested rights cannot be impaired without compensation, although the state may affect remedies.[85] Ordinarily an existing right of action or a judgment cannot be destroyed or substantially impaired,[86] nor can a person be adversely affected by substitution of parties.[87] But liabilities of municipal corporations may in some cases be validly placed in abeyance by restricting the

b. For Acts Done Under Military Authority. The principle of law exists independently of constitutional or statutory provisions that for acts done in accordance with the usages of civilized warfare there is no personal liability, so legislation providing for discharge from any supposed liability of such a nature is valid.[90]

6. Destruction of Property to Prevent Conflagration. When there is reasonable ground to believe it necessary, it is lawful to destroy property to prevent conflagration.[91]

7. Impairment of Value of Grants and Franchises. Property rights legally vested under grants or franchises cannot be controlled or destroyed by any subsequent statute, unless power for that purpose be reserved to the legislature;[92] and this principle applies not only to natural persons but to private corporations.[93] But the legislature cannot by any grant or franchise deprive itself of the power of making any needful police regulations, the police power being inalienable even by express grant.[94] Even municipal corporations, although their charters are in no sense contracts, are protected by the constitution in the property which they rightfully acquire for local purposes, and the state cannot despoil them of it.[95] Since the decision in the Dartmouth College case,[96] it has become customary for legislatures to reserve to themselves the power to alter, amend, or repeal cor-

tution only when founded upon special and peculiar benefits to the property from the expenditure on account of which the tax is laid, and then only to an amount not exceeding such special and peculiar benefits.[22]

b. Levy and Collection of Assessments — (I) In General. Taxation for a local purpose cannot be sustained if the law authorizing it be unconstitutional, even though the tax be voted by a majority;[23] and the sale of land to satisfy a void assessment which the legislature has unconditionally attempted to validate is a taking of property without due process of law.[24] A municipality authorized by statute to assess expense of local improvements upon persons benefited may legally cause apportionment of such persons to be made by commissioners;[25] and a municipality may be authorized to create liens upon land upon which valid taxes are unpaid.[26] The state has full power over the creation of taxing districts, which may be made for certain purposes small portions of cities, and may provide that the total expense of local improvements within such districts shall be assessed upon residents therein.[27]

(II) Notice or Opportunity to Be Heard — (A) Necessity. Before special taxes or assessments can become a fixed and permanent charge on the property of individuals they must have had notice of the assessment or some opportunity to be heard and to contest the validity and fairness of such.[28] Pro-

71. The leading exposition of this right to regulate is found in the case of Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77 [affirming 69 Ill. 80], which established that when an owner of property devotes it to a use in which the public has an interest, he in effect grants to the public an interest in its use, and must, to the extent of that interest, submit to be controlled by the public, for the common good, so long as he maintains the use. He may withdraw his grant by discontinuing the use. The court holding that an act to regulate public warehouses, etc., was not repugnant to the constitution of the United States, that where warehouses are situated and business is carried on exclusively within the state it may as a matter of domestic concern prescribe regulations for them, notwithstanding that they are used by those engaged in interstate commerce, as well as state commerce; and that until congress acts in reference to their interstate relations, such regulations can be enforced, even though they may indirectly operate upon commerce beyond her immediate jurisdiction, also remarked that in the exercise of its general power it had been customary from the earliest times for the legislature to regulate ferries, common carriers, hackmen, bakers, millers, wharfingers, innkeepers, and other similar employments, and in so doing to fix a maximum of charge to be made for services rendered, accommodations furnished, and articles sold. lege taxes. Persons engaged in a noxious business may be required to obtain licenses or pay privilege taxes.[88] The state may control business "clothed with a public interest" by requiring persons engaged therein to procure licenses or to pay license-taxes.[89] And in many cases the state imposes license regulations or exacts privilege taxes when the business is not one closely concerning the public health, morals, or safety, if clothed in a strict sense with a public interest, the main or sole idea oftentimes being to gain revenue. So general business corporations,[90] foreign corporations doing business within the state,[91] as well as general commercial or professional business not done by corporations,[92] are subject to these rights of the state.

d. Railroads. Although railroads are private corporations, their uses are clothed with a public interest, and are therefore subject to legislative control in all respects necessary to protect the public against danger, injustice, and oppres-

Amount of license charge.—Where police regulation alone is the object of a license, there is a conflict among the authorities as to the rule governing the amount which may be charged for such license. The nature of the occupation, trade, or profession has of necessity much to do with it. In the case of such as are useful and beneficial to the community, the license charged should not ordinarily be so great as in the case of those not so, especially when immoral in their nature or tendency. The weight of authority is that the amount exacted for a license, although designed for regulation and not for revenue, is not to be confined to the expense of issuing it, but that a reasonable compensation may be charged for the additional expense of supervision over the particular business or vocation at the place where it is licensed. For this purpose the services of officers may be required, and incidental expenses may be otherwise incurred in the faithful enforcement of such police inspection or superintendence. Water-rates.—A waterworks company sup-may regulate ferries, hackmen, and other common carriers, telephone companies, bakers, millers, wharfingers, warehousemen, innkeepers, and other similar employments, and in so doing fix a maximum of charge to be made for services rendered, accommodations furnished, and articles sold.[8] A state may establish railroad and warehouse commissions, charged with the duty of supervising those businesses and authorized to fix maximum rates,[9] and may provide that the maximum rate made by the commission shall be prima facie evidence of its reasonableness;[10] but railroads and others have a right to require that rates fixed shall be just and reasonable, and an arbitrary provision is a deprivation of property without due process of law.[11] And while the determination of rates is primarily for the legislature, plying a city with water may be required to supply water at a price fixed annually by municipal authorities, without giving the corporation a voice in the matter. The weight of authority is that the courts cannot take cognizance of added burdens through taxation upon lands added to municipalities, imposition of such being a question wholly of legislative discretion. Taggart v. Claypool, 145 Ind. 590, 44 N. E. 18, 32 L. R. A. 586; New Orleans v. Michoud, 10 La. Drainage.— Upon this subject there have been much legislation and widely varying views of different courts. Legislation providing for laying of drains through private lands for the benefit of the owners has been held invalid as taking property without due process. Fleming v. Hull, 73 Iowa 598, 35 N. W. 673; McQuillen v. Hatton, 42 Ohio St. 202. But see Chronic v. Pugh, 136 Ill. 539, 27 N. E. 415, constitutional provision. Drainage acts to promote the public health have been sustained under the police power. Donnelly v. Decker, 58 Wis. 461, 17 N. W. 389, 46 Am. Rep. 637. But see Cheesebrough's Case, 78 N. Y. 232, requiring compensation. The state may authorize companies to construct drains on private lands for reclamation purposes (O'Reiley v. Kankakee Valley Draining Co., 32 Ind. 169); but an act is invalid where its effect is merely to promote a private scheme at the expense of landowners (Kean v. Driggs Drainage Co., 45 N. J. L. 91). And see Jewel v. Green Island Draining Co., 12 Nebr. 163, 10 N. W. 547.

Lighthouse purposes.— It is not within the scope of state power to provide for condemnation of land by the governor for conveyance to the United States for lighthouse purposes. People v. Humphrey, 23 Mich. 471, 9 Am. Rep. 94.

Mills and mill-dams.— The fourteenth amendment is not violated by a mill act authorizing dams on non-navigable streams, and providing for flowage damages after judicial inquiry, although a perpetual right to flow is granted. Great Falls Mfg. Co. v. Fernald, 47 N. H. 444; Head v. Amoskeag Mfg. Co., 113 U. S. 9, 5 S. Ct. 441, 28 L. ed. 889. The right of compensation for such flowage is essential. Newcomb v. Smith, 2 Pinn. (Wis.) 131, 1 Chandl. (Wis.) 71.

Owners abutting on a street ordered paved may be required to construct at their own expense sewer, water, and gas connections or if the city has to put these in the cost may be assessed upon such abutting owners. Gleason v. Waukesha County, 103 Wis. 225, 79 N. W. 249.

Y.) 511; Yesler v. Harbor Line Com'rs, 146 U. S. 646, 13 S. Ct. 190, 36 L. ed. 1119), yet the filling in in front of a wharf entitles the wharf-owner to damages (Kingsland v. New York, 35 Hun (N. Y.) 458). And the owner of a dam in a navigable stream, maintained by legislative sanction, must be compensated for removal by an act declaring the stream navigable. Glover v. Powell, 10 N. J. Eq. 211. The right of a riparian owner to drive piles cannot be arbitrarily forbidden without compensation. Janesville v. Carpenter, 77 Wis. 288, 46 N. W. 128, 20 Am. St. Rep. 123, 8 L. R. A. 808. b. Procedure. An enactment of the legislature is not of itself enough to constitute due process, but the owner must be afforded an opportunity to contest the validity of the proceedings and to have the amount of compensation determined by some impartial tribunal.[58] But an owner who has had a full and fair trial in the courts of his own state, under general provisions of law applicable to all persons in his situation, is deprived of no property rights under the fourteenth amendment.[59] It is not essential to due process that the damages in condemnation proceedings be assessed by a jury.[60] No provisions of general applicability exist as to the necessity of notice to the owner of the taking or proceedings to take.[61]

seizure of water-power apparatus to enable officials to ascertain partition rights in water power is not an invalid interference with private property.[64] So provision for reversion to the owner of land taken by a railroad for a right of way, which has done no construction for eight years, is not a taking of private property, since the easement itself is coexistent only with the use for which it was acquired.[65] its authority within the scope of the provision of the fourteenth amendment relating to due process of law, the act should be so clearly an illegal encroachment upon private rights as to leave no doubt that such taxation, by its necessary operation, is really spoliation under the guise of exerting the power to tax.[80] The power to tax extends to all persons and property within the jurisdiction, and the legislature is the sole judge of the necessity of taxation, and of the sorts of property to be taken;[81] but due process requires that taxation be only upon persons,

Compensation not a test of due process. Taxation, unlike eminent domain, is not affected by the existence of exact compensation for property taken, beyond the benefit which each citizen derives from the application of the tax to the purpose for which it was levied. Taxation on collateral inheritances was held to be according to due process of law in State v. Hamlin, 86 Me. 495, 30 Atl. 76, 41 Am. St. Rep. 569, 25 L. R. A. 632.

The New York transfer tax law (N. Y. Laws (1897), c. 284) which is construed as subjecting to taxation remainders created by a will before the precedent estates terminate and the remainders vest in possession does not violate the fourteenth amendment. Orr v. Gilman, 183 U. S. 278, 22 S. Ct. 213, 46 L. ed. 196.

Invalidity from pecuniary interest of officials.— Where a state auditor was charged with the duty of discovering property withheld from tax-lists, and received a commission upon all property so found, it was held that proceedings taken under such powers were not due process of law, as the pecuniary interest of the auditor rendered him unfit for his judicial functions of investigation. business, or other property within the jurisdiction.[82] If no express constitutional limitation exists, the rate of taxation, however great, is solely for legislative determination.[83] Due process also implies that taxation shall be according to some rule of apportionment, so as to secure uniformity among those subject to the particular tax.[84]

b. Manner of Enforcement. As the general power of taxation lies in the legislature, it may, subject to express constitutional restrictions, adopt any measures of enforcement, which it sees fit, upon persons and property within its jurisdiction.[85] So it has been held that a summary mode of collecting taxes is due

The constitutional guaranty of due process of law, derived from Magna Charta, in substance declares that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property except by the judgment of his peers or the law of the land. In taxation proceedings, from very ancient times, the determination of the legislature has been in itself considered the "law of the land" when within the constitutional limitations of legislative authority. C. 204, 207, the court said that "the mode of levying, as well as the right of imposing taxes, is completely and exclusively within the legislative power, which, it is to be presumed, will always be exercised with an equal regard to the security of the publick and individual rights and convenience. The existence of government, depending on the prompt and regular collection of the revenue, must, as an object of primary importance, be insured in such a way as the wisdom of the Legislature may prescribe. . . . But to pursue every delinquent liable to pay taxes, through the forms of process and a Jury trial, would materially impede, if not wholly obstruct, the collection of the revenue."

Pope v. Macon, 23 Ark. 644. The claimant may be required to pay all taxes paid by the occupant under a defective tax-title which were a valid charge upon the land, such being in substance only a transfer of the lien of the state to the person originally paying the tax. A redeeming owner may be required to pay a penalty of thirty per cent on all subsequent taxes paid by the tax purchaser within a certain time (Mulligan v. Hintrager, 18 Iowa 171); and an owner recovering his land on account of a formal defect in a tax deed may be required to pay for the adverse claimant's use all subsequent taxes plus twenty-five per cent interest thereon (Wisconsin Cent. ## XIV. REMEDIES FOR INJURIES.

A. Constitutional Guaranties — 1. IN GENERAL. The constitutions of the different states usually guarantee to each individual a prompt and certain remedy by due course of law for injuries which he may receive in his person, property, or reputation, and provide that he may obtain such remedy freely without being obliged to purchase it.[98]

2. LIMITATION AND SCOPE. These guaranties relate exclusively to the judicial and not to the legislative department of government;[99] they open to every subject equal access to courts established by the state;[1] but they do not authorize a person to invoke the jurisdiction of all the courts of the state in a given case.[2] The constitutional guaranty of a "certain" remedy at law precludes the leaving to a jury to determine the constitutionality of a law;[3] but a constitutional provision requiring that all courts shall be at all times open for the transaction of business, except for trial of issues of fact requiring a jury, does not invalidate a judgment signed and entered after the expiration of the term.[4] Protection is not guaranteed for property illegally in one's possession or used for illegal purposes;[5] nor is a remedy guaranteed for injuries suffered either on account of bad or unwise legislation, when the legislature acts within its powers[6] or on account of taxation, where the same is for a legitimate purpose.[7] Nor do these guaran-spectively, what it could not originally have authorized, and so no unconstitutional taxation can be confirmed or any that wants any essential element of taxation. The unauthorized acts of individuals can confer no power upon the state. Cleveland Nat. Bank v. Iola, 9 Kan. 689, per Dillon, J. Where a sheriff's power to sell land for taxes is given on condition that it be exercised within a certain time, the state cannot by a private act give him power to sell after the time allowed by law. Taylor v. Allen, 67 N. C. 346.

Application to non-residents.— A statute providing that a foreign corporation may be sued by any resident of the state for any cause of action, and by a non-resident only when the cause of action shall be situated within the state, does not conflict with a constitutional provision that "all courts shall be public; and every person, for any injury that he may receive in his lands, goods, person, or reputation, shall have remedy, by due course of law," as the object of that section of the constitution was not to open the courts of the state to all persons, to demand redress for injuries received anywhere, but simply to secure to the inhabitants of the particular state access to the courts for redress of injuries which they may have received. ties authorize an appeal to the courts in matters properly within the province of ecclesiastical bodies.[8]

B. Violations and Infringements of the Guaranties — 1. In General. The lawful use of private property cannot be restricted without provision for just compensation,[9] and such compensation must be just and fair without discrimination between different persons or different classes.[10]

2. Conditions and Restrictions on Enforcement of Liabilities — a. In General. The legislature may impose reasonable conditions and limitations which will be binding upon those seeking a legal remedy,[11] and may make reasonable regulations defining the method of fixing the liability of a city,[12] or the method of enforcing a claim against the same.[13]

b. Conditions Precedent. Statutes or charters which impose conditions which must be fulfilled before a suit can be maintained are constitutional,[14] except where they work an unreasonable abridgment of the right to obtain redress for injuries.[15]

3. Particular Guaranties — a. Free Justice — (i) In General. Constitutional provisions declaring that every person is entitled to obtain justice freely, completely, and without denial do not guarantee to a citizen the right to litigate entirely without expense.[16]

(ii) Damages For Frivolous or Groundless Appeal. Inasmuch as the rights of individuals are always limited by a corresponding duty not to abuse such rights, it has been held that an allowance of damages for a frivolous appeal is not unconstitutional.[17]

Ch. 427, 433, where it is said: "In Latin, constringo and restringo mean the same thing — to bind; constringo, to bind with — that is, together; restringo, to bind again — that is, tightly. Any Latin dictionary will show us that one translation given to both is 'to restrain.' In classical and legal terminology this sense seems to be the favorite one for constringo. Thus, Cicero uses it in two of his noted phrases: 'Constringere orbem novis legibus,' and 'constringere fraudem supplicio.' Any English and French dictionary will show us that the English words 'constraint' and 'restraint' are translated into French by contrainte, and, e converso, the latter word has the meaning of both the English words given to it."
