To

more than to any other man is due the existence of the Cyclopedia of Law and Procedure. His was the idea; his was the plan; and his has been the business ability and energetic management, as organizer and president of The American Law Book Company, which have made possible the successful publication of these volumes, which are therefore respectfully dedicated to him.

Vermont.— Jones v. Spear, 21 Vt. 426.

Wisconsin.— Dart v. Sherwood, 7 Wis. 523, 76 Am. Dec. 228.

And cases cited supra, this section.

A cash draft accepted may be given in evidence under a count for money had and received in an action by the payee against the accepter. Wells v. Brigham, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 6, 52 Am. Dec. 750.

A non-negotiable note in which no consideration appears on its face cannot be given in evidence under the money counts. Saxton v. Johnson, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 418. See also Avery v. Latimer, 1 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 46, 1 West. L. J. 310, where it seems that a sealed note cannot be offered in evidence under the money counts. But in Michigan a non-negotiable note, given for a valuable consideration, when it has become absolutely payable, may be sued for by the payee under the common counts, How. Anno. Stat. §§ 7335, 7336, which provide for declaring with common counts and a copy of the paper, not being confined to negotiable paper. Port Huron, etc., R. Co. v. Potter, 55 Mich. 627, 22 N. W. 70. And in Massachusetts assumpsit has been held to lie on a note signed with a scroll, although where it was made the scroll was a lawful seal. McClees v. Burt, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 198.

Bank checks may be declared on as such or given in evidence under the money counts. Cruger v. Armstrong, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 5, 2 Am. Dec. 126. See also Woods v. Schroeder, 4 Harr. & J. (Md.) 276, holding that the money counts are proved prima facie by a bank check payable to bearer.

8. Alabama.— Henry v. Gamble, Minor (Ala.) 15, a note payable in money or merchandise.

Arkansas.— Bentley v. Dickson, 1 Ark. 165.

West Virginia.— Regnault v. Hunter, 4 W. Va. 257.

United States.— Raborg v. Peyton, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 385, 4 L. ed. 268; French v. Tunstall, Hempst. (U. S.) 204, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 5,104*a*.

England.— Bishop v. Young, 2 B. & P. 78.

Debt will not lie on a lost note, inasmuch as oyer in this action may be demanded. Edwards v. McKee, 1 Mo. 123, 13 Am. Dec. 474.

The note must show upon its face when it becomes due, as this form of action does not permit of an averment to show the right thereof. Middleton v. Atkins, 7 Mo. 184; Curle v. McNutt, 6 Mo. 495.

9. Alabama.— Carroll v. Meeks, 3 Port. (Ala.) 226, holding that debt lies by the bearer against the maker of a promissory note payable to bearer and that it is not ground for reversal of judgment in such action that it is entered as in assumpsit, it being for the proper sum.

Indiana.— Taylor v. Meek, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 388.

North Carolina.— Gardner v. Clark, 5 N. C. 283.

"The argument against allowing indebitatus assumpsit or debt to be brought upon bills of exchange or promissory notes, except between the immediate parties between whom a consideration passed, is, that there be for value received;[12] or by the payee,[13] the drawee,[14] or a remote indorsee striking out intermediate indorsements,[15] against the drawer of such a bill. Debt cannot be brought on a note payable in instalments until the whole has become due;[16] on a collateral undertaking to pay a debt of another person;[17] against the accepter of a bill in favor of the payee[18] or of an indorsee;[19] or by an indorsee against the indorser of a promissory note,[20] although it may be maintained by an indorsee against the maker and indorsers jointly.[21]

(II) Summary Proceedings—(A) In General. Summary proceedings for the collection of bills and notes have been provided both in Great Britain[22] and various American states.[23]

(B) Petition and Summons. In some of the states statutes have been enacted providing more or less summary proceedings for the collection of bills and notes and other evidences of debt by a process styled petition and summons.[24] Such is no privity of contract existing between the parties, and no debt due or consideration passing between them, and that the liability depends upon the custom of merchants, independently of contract or consideration. The courts in England, in the time of Lord Holt, who considered bills of exchange and promissory notes, especially the latter, with their negotiable properties, innovations upon the common law, began by holding that the action of indebitatus assumpsit or debt could not be sustained upon them. . . . By a gradual relaxation of the rule as cases have arisen, these actions will now be sustained in these courts by the payee against the maker, on a note expressed to be for value received by the endorsee against the endorser, and on a bill by the payee against the drawer, and drawee against the acceptor, expressed to be for value received, and endorsee against endorser. . . . In these cases, however, the soundness of the above distinctions is still attempted to be sustained, or rather apparently acquiesced in, and some refinement is necessary to reconcile the one with the other." summary remedies will, it has been said, receive a liberal construction from the courts.[25]

b. Accrual of Right — (i) In General. Before a bill or note matures[26] no action can in general be brought upon it;[27] but as a general rule a plea to the merits is a waiver of the objection that the suit was brought too soon.[28]

(ii) Against Indorser. The indorser's liability, being conditioned by the law merchant on notice of dishonor properly given, has been said not to commence until such notice is given, where there is no excuse or waiver to dispense with it; but action may be begun against the indorser immediately after mailing the notice of dishonor to him,[29] on the very day the note becomes due and is dishonored.[30] It has been held, however, and seems to be the rule in England, that

Issue of writ. — In Massachusetts it has been held that a writ may be issued against the maker on the day of maturity if it is not delivered to the sheriff until the next day (Butler v. Kimball, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 94), although it would be premature to serve such writ even after dusk on the last day of grace (Estes v. Tower, 102 Mass. 65, 3 Am. Antedated note. — Where an antedated note containing a provision that it shall be payable on thirty days' notice to the maker is delivered by the latter after a notice to pay has been given him, suit thereon may be brought on the expiration of thirty days from the service of the notice, although the note had not been delivered for that length of time. no action can be begun against the indorser until a reasonable time has passed for him to receive the notice[31] and that it is too soon to bring suit on the day the note falls due after protesting it and sending notice to him by mail.[32]

(III) Against Drawee or Indorser For Non-Acceptance. Where a bill is dishonored by the drawee's refusal to accept it an action lies on it at once, without waiting for the day named in it for payment, against the drawer[33] or indorser.[34]

(IV) Against Drawer — (A) In Favor of Accepter. The accepter of a draft or bill of exchange cannot maintain an action for its recovery until he has paid the same or done some act equivalent to payment.[35]

Dec. 153), but he may begin an action against the drawer on the day of maturity, although the bill has been taken

(B) In Favor of Holder For Non-Acceptance. Upon the dishonor of a bill a right of action on the part of the holder at once arises against the drawer, without waiting for it to mature;[36] and such right is not defeated or in any way affected by a subsequent presentment for payment.[37]

(V) Against Assignor. If an assignment of a note is made before maturity the assignor is liable to an action as soon as that event happens and the makers fail to discharge it; if after maturity, then he is bound to discharge it, at least within a reasonable time.[38]

c. Conditions Precedent — (I) Payment of Debt of Maker Assumed by Payee. A payee who has taken up and paid a note of a third person by one of his own is not obliged to pay off the note so given before suing such person on a note given him in consideration of his assumption of the original debt.[39]

(II) Return of Collateral. An offer to return collateral held as security for the payment of a bill or note is not a condition precedent to an action on the bill or note.[40]

(III) Return of Goods or Money Received in Compromise. A holder can retain and enforce a note given in compromise of a doubtful claim without returning, or offering to return, goods or money received under a previous compromise of the same claim.[41]

(IV) Return of Part Payment. It is not necessary before maintaining an action to return or tender money received on account of the instrument put in suit,[42] but where a promissory note is by its terms subject to a credit the holder cannot recover thereon, unless he shows that the credit has been made or that something has transpired to excuse him from making the contemplated deduction.[43]

(V) Statutory Conditions. No action can be maintained on a bill or note without a substantial compliance with all conditions precedent created by statute.[44]

d. Number of Actions. The holder of a bill or note may have as many actions as there are parties prior to him,[45] and a note to either of two payees gives up by him before it matured, since the drawer's liability arises at once upon payment by such accepter at any hour on the day of maturity (Whitwell v. Brigham, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 117).

e. What Law Governs. The manner of enforcing payment of negotiable paper is governed by the law of the place where the remedy is sought to be enforced.[47]

2. For Refusal to Cancel Note. No action lies in favor of the maker against the holder for refusing to surrender or cancel a note after it has been paid.[48]

3. On Original Consideration — a. In General — (i) Rule Stated. Where a bill or note of a debtor is taken,[49] which is not accepted or paid at maturity, the creditor's right of action on the original consideration revives,[50] and where discounted through fraud the holder may rescind and sue on the original consideration.[51] At common law too no suit could be maintained against the drawer or maker of an order or check on the order or check itself, and the payee could only sue on the original liability,[52] or the drawee for money paid.[53]

(ii) Necessity of Producing Paper. Where the seller of property takes a negotiable note for the price he cannot sue on the original consideration, unless the note be produced and canceled, and the necessity for producing the note is not done away with by a release from liability on the note to the maker by the payee;[54] but if goods are obtained on a note by fraud and sold to a party with notice, the vendor may bring an action of trover against such party for the goods without first returning the note to the maker.[55]

(III) Effect of Renewal. Merely taking a renewal will not bar a recovery on the original consideration,[56] but where a renewal is secured by a bond and warrant to confess judgment, and the amount is subsequently paid, except the costs of the judgment, the creditor cannot sue upon the original bill for such unpaid costs.[57]

b. Right of Assignee. An assignee of a bill or note has not as such a right to sue the assignor,[58] the maker, or the drawer[59] upon the original consideration, but if at the time of the assignment the original debt is also assigned the assignee may sue on the original demand in the name of his assignor, notwithstanding the indorsement to himself.[60]

B. Defenses — 1. In General — a. By Whom Available. Defenses to the original transaction which are personal to the obligor, and may either be set up or waived by him, cannot be set up by a stranger thereto.[61] Thus an accommodation indorser cannot set up a breach of warranty as to the quality of the articles for which the note was given.[62] So too usury is a defense personal to the borrower,[63] but a surety or accommodation indorser may himself plead any defense not personal to the maker of which the latter could take advantage.[64]

b. Against Whom Available. Defenses available against the real party in interest may be set up, although the action be brought by a nominal party.[65] A defense against a firm may be urged against an indorsee partner,[66] and as knowledge of one partner is knowledge of all, a defense against a partner is available against his copartner.[67]

c. By What Law Governed. As defenses which may be urged by an obligor to limit or defeat his liability may be assumed to have been in the minds of the parties at the time of assuming the obligation, the law of the place where the obligation in suit is incurred governs;[68] although the law of the forum has been held to govern with regard to matters of set-off.[69] So too a defense permitted by a certain statute will be presumed to have been contemplated by the parties at the time of the execution of the instrument and will be permitted after the repeal of such statute.[70]

2. Nature and Kinds — a. In General. The availability of matter as defense to actions on promissory notes is governed largely by the general law of contracts.[71] The defense must, however, be relevant and conform to the issue,[72] be confined to the contract sued upon,[73] and intended as an avoidance of the matter declared on.[74] So too defendant can plead only such equities as operate in his own favor.[75] In some jurisdictions it would seem that a defense in an action between the original parties must in some manner be connected with the consideration of the note or with its negotiation;[76] and this rule is more broadly applied where the action is by an indorsee, although he takes the same after maturity or with notice.[77]

b. Legal or Equitable. Not every just objection to the enforcement of the note can, in the absence of statute,[78] be made in an action at law. If the defense puts in issue intricate matters, partly foreign to the subject-matter of the suit, the determination of which is peculiarly the province of a court of equity, it cannot be urged in a purely legal action on the note;[79] and where a defense is clearly available at law equity will not interpose.[80]

c. Special or Particular Defenses — (I) In General. Inasmuch as each case depends largely upon the particular facts involved, an attempt to specifically designate every available defense would be impracticable; it may, however, be said that an erroneous interpretation of an unambiguous instrument is no defense,[81]

The word "defense," as used in a statute providing that in any action upon a promissory note, payable on demand, by an indorsee against the promisor, any matters might be deemed a legal defense which would be a legal defense to a suit on the same note if brought by the promisee, means an equitable defense, such as payment, set-off, etc., and does not refer to the disability to sue. Thayer v. Buffum, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 398. So too a statute providing that upon proof of the signature which is denied by defendant, such defendant might not set up other defenses, applies only to the personal signature of defendant and not to a denial of the signature of a partner. nor can it be legally urged that the holder purchased the note and instituted an action thereon with a design to harass and oppress the maker.[82] While a plea of non est factum or illegal or immoral consideration or fraud in the inception of the instrument[83] may in some instances constitute a defense regardless of the status of the holder,[84] yet as a general rule all defenses and equities which would operate to defeat the action between the original parties or their privies are not available against a bona fide indorsee for value;[85] and the mere fact that the suit is brought in equity does not vary the rule.[86] So too it is held that non-compliance with a statute regulating the method by which certain corporate bodies shall do business is not available as a defense in an action between the indorsee of such bodies and the maker of the instrument, where there is a valid and bona fide transfer to such holders of the instrument.[87] In some cases, however, an indorsee taking an instrument as collateral security for a debt, although often designated a bona fide holder by the courts, is subject to defenses existing between the original parties as against a surplus between the amount of his debt thus secured and the value of the note;[88] and where the equity existing between the original parties is want of consideration or fraud, the rule has been held to apply where the indorsee purchased the instrument for less than its face value, either by payment of cash or property.[89] Other cases hold that a so-called bona fide indorsee taking as collateral security may recover the whole amount of the instrument taken regardless of the amount of his debt secured thereby[90] or regardless of the amount he may have paid for the instrument; such defenses being in no way available.[91]

Change of payee.—Where a note had been altered by erasing the word "order" and inserting the word "bearer" without the knowledge or consent of the makers an innocent purchaser, without indorsement, after the alteration, cannot sue upon it in his own name. Burch v. Daniel, 101 Ga. 228, 28 S. E. 622.

The extension or change of time of payment of a note by the holder, in an indorsement thereon, without the knowledge or consent of the maker, is a material alteration and renders it unenforceable. Time of payment.—Where a memorandum giving the maker the privilege of paying before maturity is appended to the note before its delivery to a bona fide holder, although it may have been appended after the making of the note and its indorsement. an indorser is not discharged from liability. Bowie v. Hume, 13 App. Cas. (D. C.) 286.

Erasure of the place of payment of a note by an unauthorized person is an immaterial alteration as to the maker. Major v. Hansen, 2 Biss. (U. S.) 195, 16 Fed. Cas. No. 8,982.

Addition of surety.— A note cannot be defeated in the hands of a bona fide holder for value on the ground that a surety signed it without the consent of the maker. Miller v. Finley, 26 Mich. 249, 12 Am. Rep. 306.

If an altered note is restored before acquisition by an innocent holder the alteration is not a defense to the maker. Shepard v. Whetstone, 51 Iowa 457, 1 N. W. 753, 33 Am. Rep. 143.

The unauthorized act of an agent of a surety in affixing seals to the signatures will be treated as a nullity and the instrument may be enforced to the extent contemplated. Fullerton v. Sturges, 4 Ohio St. 529. See also Cunnington v. Peterson, 29 Ont. 346 [distinguishing Reid v. Humphrey, 6 Ont. App. 403].

95. Dinsmore v. Duncan, 57 N. Y. 573, 15 Am. Rep. 534 [reversing 4 Daly (N. Y.) 199].

Alteration by a stranger without the holder's knowledge will not defeat the note in the latter's hands. Paterson v. Higgins, 58 Ill. App. 268.

96. Alteration distinguished from filling of blank.— Some cases distinguish between an altered note, that is, one changed after it has been once legally drawn up and delivered, and one signed in blank which carries with it the implied power of filling up the blanks in proper amounts and figures. Harris v. Berger, 15 N. Y. St. 389.

The execution of printed notes with the blanks unfilled seems to be regarded as a letter of credit for an indefinite sum, and it will not do to allow a person who does this to escape the consequences of his act to the prejudice of the public. Tennessee.—Grissom v. Fite, 1 Head (Tenn.) 332, where a plea by an indorser for accommodation that the maker had exceeded the might be detached or removed without indicating that fact, so as to leave a perfect negotiable instrument.[98] But in order to constitute a blank piece of paper upon which a name is written a note in blank, it is absolutely necessary that it should have been intended for use as a contractual obligation.[99]

(III) DURESS. It is not a defense to a note in the hands of a bona fide holder that it was obtained by duress,[1] but otherwise where the transferrer had notice of the facts.[2]

(IV) FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION — (A) In General. As between original parties to a bill or note the consideration thereof may always, in the absence of an estoppel,[3] be inquired into; and a want or failure of the same constitutes a amount agreed upon was held bad, because it did not negative that the parties were bona fide holders for value.

Limitation of doctrine.— The doctrine has no application in a suit by the assignee of paper which is not negotiable. Smith v. Holzhauer, 67 N. J. L. 202, 50 Atl. 683.

Where an interest blank is left vacant by the maker its subsequent filling in a way not to attract attention will not defeat it in the hands of a bona fide purchaser. Rainbolt v. Eddy, 34 Iowa 440, 11 Am. Rep. 152. See also Desseure v. Weaver, 99 Ill. App. 375 [citing Merritt v. Boyden, 191 Ill. 136, 60 N. E. 907, 85 Am. St. Rep. 246]; Iron Mountain Bank v. Murdock, 62 Mo. 70.

If the alteration is plainly apparent the maker is not liable. Alexander v. Buckwalter, 8 Del. Co. (Pa.) 74, 17 Lanc. L. Rev. 366.

Where the maker of a note indorsed for his accommodation alters it to a larger sum, by taking advantage of vacant space left in the printed form, the holder may recover the true amount of the indorser. Worrall v. Gheen, 39 Pa. St. 388.

There is no duty incumbent upon the accepter of a bill of exchange toward the public or subsequent holders of the bill to see that the bill is in such a form as to prevent the possibility of fraudulent alteration after it has left his hands. Scholfield v. Londesborough, [1896] App. Cas. 514, 65 L. J. Q. B. 593, 75 L. T. Rep. N. S. 254, 45 Wkly. Rep. 124.

99. Thus it is a clear defense against a bona fide holder of an alleged note that the note was written in over an autograph given in blank for mere purpose of identification. Caulkins v. Whisler, 29 Iowa 495, 4 Am. Rep. 236. See also Grand Haven First Nat. Bank v. Zeims, 93 Iowa 140, 61 N. W. 483. Or where a name was signed on a piece of paper with no intention of making a note in blank and carelessly left on a table and a note was written in over it, the person so signing has a clear defense. Nance v. Lary, 5 Ala. 370.

Implied power to fill blanks see supra, I, C, 2, a, (I), (A) [7 Cyc. 619].

The distinction is that in one case he intended to enter into a contract obligation, and that the blank should be filled up, and consequently he is held liable, although the blanks were filled in differently than he intended; while in the other the person signing never intended to enter into any obligation and the law cannot create one for him. acter of paper does not defeat the bona fide character of a holder,[15] it follows that this cannot be urged as a defense against such holder for value and in due course, even though he knew of the character of the paper at the time he acquired the same.[16]

(B) Partial Failure. With regard to the right to urge a partial failure of consideration as a defense in an action between the original parties the courts are at a variance.[17] The English doctrine, which is followed in some American cases, holds that a failure, to be available as a defense in an action at law, must be total, and that for a partial failure, unless the consideration be clearly and easily divisible,[18] a defendant must resort to chancery or to a cross action for damages.[19] This circuity of action has, however, in many instances been discountenanced and condemned; in some cases by virtue of statutory enactment, in others by judicial enunciation, and a partial failure has been allowed to be shown as a defense pro

The good faith of the holder of a forged note gives him no equities as against the person whose name is forged. Camp v. Carpenter, 52 Mich. 375, 18 N. W. 113.

Draft issued for forged check.— In an action on a draft by one who discounted it in the regular course of business it is no defense to the bank which issued the draft that a check for which it was issued was forged. Anderson v. Dundee State Bank, 66 Hun (N. Y.) 613, 21 N. Y. Suppl. 925, 50 N. Y. St. 918 [reversing 20 N. Y. Suppl. 511, 47 N. Y. St. 447].

Unauthorized indorsement.— The holder of a note on which the name of the payee has been indorsed without authorization, although a holder for value before maturity and without notice of any defense, holds subject to defenses existing between the original parties. Gilbert v. Sharp, 2 Lans. (N. Y.) 412. The holder of a bill of exchange cannot recover against the accepter where the bill was transferred and the payee's indorsement made without their authority. lently convert a note is no defense to an action thereon,[30] it may be said that as a rule all fraudulent representations or practices connected with the execution or negotiation of a bill may be set up as a defense between the original parties or those having no greater rights or immunities,[31] but do not destroy the immunity accorded such instruments in the hands of a bona fide holder.[32]

(B) As to Consideration. While artifice or fraudulent representations affecting the value of the consideration for which the instrument was given may of course be shown, in an action between the original parties such fraud is not as a rule a defense against a bona fide holder for value.[33]

(C) In Procurement of Execution or Indorsement — (1) RULE. While fraud in procuring the execution of an instrument may of course be shown between the original parties, or parties with notice,[34] it is a rule adopted for the protection of negotiable instruments in general[35] that the maker, indorser, or accepter of a negotiable instrument procured through fraud may be held liable to a purchaser for value before maturity without notice; and he will not be allowed to set up the defense of fraud to relieve himself of such liability.[36]

Application of rule.— In Heist v. Hart, 73 Pa. St. 286, defendant gave to A a negotiable note, in payment for a patent which defendant alleged was a fraud. A parol agreement was made at the time that A would not negotiate the note and would renew it. This agreement having been broken, defendant advised the would-be purchaser of such parol agreement and counseled him not to buy, without saying anything, however, about fraud in the transaction. It was held that these facts constituted no defense, although A had really committed a fraud on defendant.

And the interest of the whole country demands, that the rule be strictly adhered to. It is much better to suffer a few individuals to be defrauded out of their property, than to relax this salutary rule, and let the whole country suffer. It is feared that some courts, in their earnest desire to protect the citizen from the frauds of venders of patents, have unwittingly struck the law-merchant a fearful blow, and at the same time visited the sin of the defrauder upon the innocent holders of the very paper, which by their trust and overweening confidence in these same dishonest adventurers they have placed upon the market."

not, however, relate to the quality, quantity, value, or character of the consideration of the contract, but must constitute such a trick or device as induces the giving of one character under the belief that it is another of a different character.[40]

(b) Necessity of Freedom From Negligence. It is absolutely essential, however, that an obligor, to invoke this immunity, must exercise prudent diligence, and in no way negligently contribute to the imposition.[41] Negligence on the part of the maker or accepter will defeat any right that he may claim or attempt to set up in defense of such note in the hands of a bona fide purchaser, even though he may establish a claim of actual fraud practised upon him in the procurement of the instrument.[42] Hence one in possession of his faculties, who has the opportunity for examination and relies upon the representations of persons with whom he is dealing, cannot claim exemption for his act if the instrument which he signed should prove other than he had been led to believe.[43] ilar instrument, to be held liable, in case a negotiable note of that date, of which he had no notice or intimation, should have been mysteriously lurking in the depths of the instrument so signed, and should afterward turn up with his signature attached to it); Walker v. Ebert, 29 Wis. 194, 197, 9 Am. Rep. 548 (where the court said: "Negotiability in such cases pre-supposes the existence of the instrument as having been made by the party whose name is subscribed; for, until it has been so made and has such actual legal existence, it is absurd to talk about a negotiation, or transfer, or bona fide holder of it, within the meaning of the law merchant. That which, in contemplation of law, never existed as a negotiable instrument, cannot be held to be such; and to say that it is, and has the qualities of negotiability, because it assumes the form of that kind of paper, and thus to shut out all inquiry into its existence, or whether it is really and truly what it purports to be, is petitio principii — begging the question altogether").

(c) As Affected by Illiteracy. The fact that a party whose signature is obtained by a fraudulent representation that the instrument is of a different character from the one that he believes he is signing is an illiterate person is material when such fraud is pleaded as a defense in an action against a bona fide purchaser.[44] The maker or accepter must, however, have been guilty of no negligence and have taken advantage of such reasonable means as lay at his hand.[45]

The question as to what will constitute negligence in such cases is one that has not met with a uniform decision among the several courts of this country, some applying the rule in the strictest acceptation of the term (Parkersburg First Nat. Bank v. Johns, 22 W. Va. 520, 535, 46 Am. Rep. 506, where the court said: "We think we may safely lay down this general rule, that, when a purchaser of a negotiable promissory note takes it for value before maturity without notice of any fraud in its execution, unless at the time it was so purchased by him, it was absolutely void, he will recover on such note against the maker, although the maker was induced by fraud to sign it, not intending to sign such note, but a paper of an entirely different character, and in such case the question of negligence in the maker forms no legitimate subject of enquiry." See also Rowland v. Fowler, 47 Conn. 347; Cline v. Guthrie, 42 Ind. 227, 13 Am. Rep. 357 [where the maker of a note was induced by fraud and circumvention to sign his name when he honestly supposed and believed that he was writing his name on a blank piece of paper to enable the payee to see how his name was spelled or written. The note was never voluntarily delivered but was wrongfully and forcibly taken possession of by the payees and by them carried away against the consent and over the objection of the maker. Under such circumstances it was held that the maker was no more bound by his signature than if it were a total forgery, although the person to whom it was negotiated was a bona fide holder for value]; Daniel Neg. Instr. § 850), while others have adopted a more lenient view on account of the hardships resulting to ignorant and unsuspecting victims (Putnam v. Sullivan, 4 Mass. 45, 3 Am. In passing upon his liability the court said: "It would seem to be a self-evident proposition that where a party to an instrument undertakes to read it over in the presence and hearing of the other party thereto, in order that he may understand its contents before signing it, the party reading is both legally and morally bound to read it correctly, and that the other interested party has a right to rely upon its being so read and need not examine it himself. These papers were compared in the usual and customary manner, and ordinarily no negligence can be attributed to one who signs papers, after having so heard them compared, without any farther or other examination."

out authority to negotiate it, where the holder has bought it in good faith and before maturity.[46]

(b) APPLICATION OF RULE — aa. In Fraud of Creditors. It is no defense to an action by a bona fide holder that the instrument in suit was executed or transferred in fraud of creditors,[47] nor can the maker of a note defend against the indorsee or assignee thereof on the ground that the transfer was with intent to defraud the creditors of the assignor.[48]

bb. By Partner. The fact that a partner executes or indorses a note in the firm-name, without authority, or for his individual debt, or in fraud of his firm, is no defense to the firm in an action against it by a bona fide holder for value without notice,[49] and it is immaterial that the partner's action is expressly prohibited

Purchase from one of two trustees.— Where a purchaser of real estate at a trustee's sale passed to one of the two trustees a negotiable note of another, payable to the purchaser's order and indorsed by him in blank, and afterward said trustee, without the consent or knowledge of his co-trustee, sold said note before its maturity to one who took it in good faith, for full value, and without notice that it belonged to a trust estate, such purchaser acquired a valid title to the note. Participation in fraud.— Where one sells property with the view of defrauding his creditors and the purchaser, participating in such fraudulent intent, executes notes for the value of the property, these notes are transferred by the vendor to a bona fide holder, and notice of such transfer is given to the maker, he will not only be liable to pay such notes to the holder, but may also be charged as trustee of the vendor by reason of his participation in the fraudulent sale. Gregory v. Harrington, 33 Vt. 241.

Transfer by insolvent corporation.—By the New York statute to avoid the transfer of a note by an insolvent corporation in the hands of a bona fide holder, it must appear that the transfer was made, not only when the corporation was insolvent or contemplating insolvency, but also with intent to give a preference to a particular creditor. New York Mar. Bank v. Clements, 31 N. Y. 33.

Partial defense.— If an indorsement by one partner is in fraud of the firm and not within the scope of its business one who had paid but part of the consideration is but a bona fide purchaser pro tanto. Driggs v. Driggs, 11 N. Y. St. 256.

by the articles of copartnership.[50] But partners who have not participated in the transaction may defend by showing knowledge on the part of the holder that the transaction was not within the scope of the firm's business or that the circumstances were such as to demand such inquiry by him as would acquaint him with that fact and that he failed to make such inquiry.[51]

(2) DIVERSION. That negotiable paper was diverted from the purpose for which it was drawn, made, accepted, or indorsed, or that the person intrusted with it for a specific purpose misapplied or misappropriated it or its proceeds, in fraud of the maker or indorser is not available as a defense in an action upon the instrument by a bona fide holder for value without notice.[52] On the same principle one who has intrusted such an instrument to another cannot reclaim it from a bona fide holder[53] or recover the amount thereof from the maker or a bona fide purchaser to whom the maker paid it.[54] The purchaser will, however, be protected only to the extent of the consideration paid by him.[55]

(VII) ILLEGALITY—(A) As Between Original Parties. As between the original parties or persons having only their rights the illegality of the instrument is a good defense.[56] Thus it is available against one who gave no valuable consideration for the instrument,[57] who purchased after maturity,[58] or who took the instrument with knowledge of its illegality.[59]

(B) As Against Bona Fide Holders—(1) IN GENERAL. Illegality is not as a rule a defense to commercial paper in an action thereon by a bona fide holder thereof, to whom it was transferred for value before maturity without notice.[60]

The misconduct of a trustee named in a deed of trust given to indemnify the maker of a note for a claim against the indemnitor is no defense to the maker as against the assignee of the note. Barry v. Holderman, 6 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 471.

(c) Instruments Made on Sunday. That a note was executed or a bill drawn on Sunday is not a defense against a bona fide holder for value and without notice, where there is nothing on the face of the instrument to indicate that fact;[62] but this rule does not apply where the contract by which the instrument was acquired was itself made on Sunday.[63]

(d) Usurious Instruments — (1) In General. In some jurisdictions promissory notes embracing usurious interest are held to be void, even in the hands of a bona fide purchaser,[64] but where the note is valid in its inception, although there are decisions to the contrary,[65] the general rule is that the maker or indorser

Pro tanto defense.—Under Mass. Rev. Stat. c. 35, § 2, and Mass. Stat. (1846), c. 199, usury between the payee and maker of a promissory note is a good defense for the latter pro tanto to the note in the hands of a bona fide indorsee, to whom it was indorsed before maturity for full value and without notice of the usury. Kendall v. Robertson, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 156. See also Miles v. Kelley, 16 Tex Civ. App. 147, 40 S. cannot defend on the ground that the note was subsequently transferred usuriously.[66]

(2) Accommodation Paper. In respect to accommodation notes sold or negotiated at a greater rate of discount than legal interest the authorities are not uniform. Thus there are decisions to the effect that the purchaser of such paper from the payee who pays less than the face of the instrument stands in the same situation in respect to the defense of usury as if he were the payee named, and although he has no knowledge of the accommodation.[67] On the other hand it is held that the defense is unavailable against such a purchaser unless he had knowledge of the character of the paper.[68]

(3) Corporate Notes. Where by statute a corporation cannot interpose the defense of usury to a note, the indorsers of the instrument or sureties thereon are likewise precluded.[69]

False representations.— If a third party takes a note which never had a legal inception at a deduction greater than legal interest, under a deceitful representation made by the agent of the maker that it has been put into the market for value in the regular course of business, the latter cannot set up the falsity of the agent's statements to defend the action. (4) Renewed or Substituted Instrument. A second bill or note which is merely a renewal or substitution for the first is subject to the defense of usury which existed as to the original;[70] but if commercial paper void for usury is renewed by a bona fide holder without notice, at the instance of the maker or other parties thereto, the defense of usury cannot be set up in an action on the new instrument.[71]

(viii) Incapacity or Want of Authority of Parties—(a) Legal or Mental Condition. Defenses going to show that no valid contract was ever made because of the parties' legal incapacity are admissible against all holders, if not waived or barred.[72] Thus even as against a bona fide holder it may be shown that the maker or indorser of the instrument in suit was a married woman, without statutory authority to bind herself at the time of such execution or indorsement;[73]

Married woman as surety.—Under the Indiana statute (Ind. Rev. Stat. indorser,[79] the maker's intoxication cannot be interposed against a bona fide holder for value.[80]

(B) From Fiduciary Relationship — (1) AGENTS. That a maker or indorser of commercial paper, purporting to act in the capacity of agent, had no authority, either real or apparent, to so act, is a defense, regardless of the status of the holder.[81] So too where the limitation of the agent's authority is made to appear upon the face of the instrument or otherwise, the principal will not be bound beyond the authority given to such agent.[82] But the fact that an agent exceeds his authority in executing or transferring negotiable paper will not constitute a defense to an innocent holder, where he acts within the apparent scope of his authority.[83]

(2) Corporate Officers — (a) Without Color of Authority. That negotiable paper is executed or indorsed in the name of a corporation by one of its officers without any apparent legal authority is a good defense, even against a bona fide holder.[84] This is especially true where such paper does not concern any business of the corporation, and there is no by-law or resolution authorizing its officers to execute or indorse negotiable paper or proof of a recognized course of business by which such officers have been held out to the world as possessing such power.[85]

(b) Authority For Specific Purposes. The better doctrine seems to be that when a corporation has the power under any circumstances to issue negotiable securities a bona fide holder has the right to presume that they were issued under

Banking and other business corporations differentiated.— In Mather v. Union L. & T. Co., 7 N. Y. Suppl. 213, 214, 26 N. Y. St. 58, the court said: "The defendant not being a banking corporation, the acceptance was not within the apparent authority with which the agent was invested; and it is for the plaintiff to prove that it was authorized by the charter, by-laws, or some resolutions of the corporation, or, as in Olcott v. Tioga R. Co., 27 N. Y. 546, 84 Am. Dec. 298, by its recognition of similar acts of the same official, or by proof that the corporation ratified circumstances which give the requisite authority, and their irregular issue constitutes no defense.[86] This rule has been adhered to, even in the case of accommodation paper,[87] but does not apply to paper issued by a municipal corporation.[88]

(c) Irregular Exercise of Authority. Where the power to issue negotiable securities is granted a corporation by law, irregularity in its exercise, or mere non-compliance with a by-law as to the manner of execution, cannot be set up as a defense.[89]

the act performed by accepting some benefit by its performance. The substantial difference between the acts of an officer of a banking and business corporation in regard to commercial paper is only in the proof of authority required. The acts of an officer of a bank, in respect to commercial paper, as a rule carry with them the presumption of authority implied from the very nature of the corporate business, and from the apparent authority with which the officer must be assumed to have been clothed with respect thereto in the proper carrying on of that business; but when it comes to a corporation whose business does not necessarily require the giving or indorsement of notes, or the acceptance of bills, the law exacts proof that the act has corporate sanction in some form."

(IX) INSTITUTION OF RELATIVE LEGAL PROCEEDINGS. It is not a defense in a suit at law upon a note that proceedings in chancery have been instituted by other parties to restrain the payment of the same,[90] or that equity has been invoked to enforce a lien for which the instrument was given;[91] nor, until after the expiration of the right of redemption, is it a good defense that a mortgagee has entered to foreclose a mortgage amply securing a note.[92]

(X) IRREGULARITY IN EXECUTION OR NEGOTIATION — (A) In General. Inasmuch as a bona fide holder is entitled to rely upon the recitals of the note as a true exposition of the contract between the original parties, it is no defense as against him that the note was not executed at the place where it bears date,[93] that the note is wrongly dated,[94] or that it is made to read payable in specie instead of depreciated currency for which it was given.[95] Nor is it a defense against such holder that the note was post-stamped.[96]

(B) Non-Delivery. While a delivery is necessary to complete the negotiable character of an instrument,[97] the defense of want of delivery cannot be urged against a bona fide holder for value where the note gets into circulation through the act, fault, or neglect of defendant.[98]

(C) Breach of Collateral Agreements — (1) BETWEEN PRIMARY OBLIGORS. As between the original parties or those having only their rights, it is a good defense that a collateral agreement, which was made as a condition of the liability on the note, has not been performed,[99] or that there is a breach of the warranty as

The court held that a good defense existed on the ground of fraud against the maker.

(2) As Against Bona Fide Holder. loss or theft is an available defense to the rightful owner or person entitled to its possession.[8]

(XII) MISTAKE. A mistake in determining the amount for which a note should be given,[9] or in determining the identity of the payee of a check,[10] cannot be taken advantage of against a bona fide holder; but such mistakes in determining the amount or in the intended payee are available against the original payee or indorsee with notice.[11]

(XIII) PAYMENT OR DISCHARGE. A plea of payment or satisfaction is of course a good defense between the original parties to a note or between parties having only their rights;[12] but as it is the duty of a party paying a note or making a partial payment thereon to take up the paper or have the payment made indorsed thereon,[13] it follows that a defense of payment, when these precautions have not been observed, cannot be urged as against a bona fide holder.[14]

8. United States treasury note.— Where a United States treasury note, indorsed, "Pay to the secretary of the treasury for conversion," signed by the cashier of the owner, was stolen from a carrier to whom it was intrusted for transportation to the treasury, the indorsement erased, and the note sold to an innocent purchaser, it was held that the purchaser acquired no title. (XIV) RETENTION OF COLLATERAL SECURITY. The fact that plaintiff holds collateral security for the note in suit,[15] or that he has been so negligent in disposing of such collateral that the maker would have a cause of action against him therefor,[16] is not a good defense to an action at law, nor is it a defense against an indorser that plaintiff, by attaching the property of the maker, has thereby obtained a sufficient security to pay the note.[17] Nor would it be a defense that collateral delivered to a third party at the instance of plaintiff had been in the absence of authority from plaintiff collected by such party.[18]

(XV) WANT OF TITLE OR INTEREST — (A) Of Authority to Prosecute. It is a good defense that plaintiff is without authority to prosecute the action.[19]

(B) Denial of Title or Ownership — (1) IN GENERAL. There are decisions that a denial of ownership or an assertion that plaintiff was not the owner of the instrument at the time of the institution of the action, without more, presents a good defense;[20] and that defendant may contest plaintiff's title so far as it may be necessary to ascertain that a recovery by him will preclude further liability;[21] but if plaintiff is vested with the legal title he may maintain the action without regard to equities existing between himself and his assignor or indorser, and it is no defense that another is the equitable owner or beneficiary,[22] except where plaintiff's possession is mala fides and may work some prejudice to defendant.[23] Hence it is no defense that plaintiff is a mere pledgee.[24] But some cases permit the person sought to be charged to defend on the ground that plaintiff is not the real party in interest or that another is,[25] so as to let in a defense or permit a set-off against such other.[26] Thus it may be shown that the note in suit was transferred to the holder to avoid a defense which would be available but for the transfer, and that the transferrer is the real owner.[27]

(2) TRANSFER BY PLAINTIFF. That plaintiff has transferred the note in action or has parted with his interest therein presents a good defense.[28]

Where in an action by the beneficiary, the holder appears, admits plaintiff's ownership, and disclaims title in himself, a defense that plaintiff is not the owner is of no avail. Simon v. Wildt, 84 Ky. 157.

Acquiescence of real owner.— Where the person claimed by defendant to be the real owner had full knowledge of the action and asserted no right to interfere, it was held that payment of the judgment to plaintiff, if permitted by the real owner of the note, would be a sufficient protection to defendant. Hackett v. Kendall, 23 Vt. 275.

Substitute note given to widow of payee of original.— It is no defense that the note in suit was given to plaintiff, the widow of the payee, in lieu of other notes given to the latter, since she might be acting either as executrix in her own wrong or might be entitled to the note as heir. Riley v. Loughrey, 22 Ill. 97.

23. Wells v. Schoonover, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 805.

Fraud of creditors.— That the payee filed his petition in bankruptcy, and failed to include therein the note in suit, which he had assigned to plaintiff to collect for his benefit so as to enable him to defraud his creditors, does not show mala fides, so as to enable the maker to defeat the action on the ground that plaintiff has no title. Wells v. Schoonover, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 805.

24. Unauthorized pledge.— The maker or accepter of a bill of exchange cannot set up that it was the property of a bank, and was pledged to plaintiff as security for a loan by the cashier, who had no authority so to pledge it. New Haven City Bank v. Perkins, 29 N. Y. 554, 86 Am. Dec. 332.

Pledge by administrator of notes of estate.— If an administrator transfers to his sureties, as security, notes belonging to the estate, the maker cannot dispute the pledgee's title, especially where, after the transfer, the sureties advanced money to pay a judgment against the estate. Rogers v. Squires, 98 N. Y. 49.

25. Wood v. Wellington, 30 N. Y. 218; Eaton v. Alger, 57 Barb. (N. Y.) 179.

Holder trustee for indorser.— An indorser may defend on the ground that the note was paid and that plaintiff holds it as a trustee for him. Maynard v. Nekervis, 9 Pa. St. 81.

Transfer of note of decedent by administrator.— It is a good defense that the note in suit belonged to the estate of a deceased person, and that plaintiff received it of the administrator in payment of an individual debt by the latter or in exchange for other property, with full knowledge of the facts. Prosser v. Leatherman, 4 How. (Miss.) 237, 34 Am. Dec. 121.

Prior action by claimants of subject-matter of note.— In an action by an administrator on a note given him for land bought by defendant at administrator's sale, a plea that the heirs were alone interested in the note, and that, after the sale, they brought suit against defendant for the land, and put him to great expense in defending the suit, presents no defense. Story v. Kemp, 51 Ga. 399.

26. McClure v. Litchfield, 11 Ala. 337; Tuggle v. Adams, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 429; Lauve v. Bell, 1 La. 191; Childerston v. Hammon, 9 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 68.

Ownership in prior indorser.— To an action by the third against the second indorser, it is a sufficient defense that the payee, who is also first indorser, is the owner of the note and that the action is for his benefit. Oberle v. Schmidt, 86 Pa. St. 221.

27. See Lange v. Uhlmann, 47 Mo. App. 277; Eyre v. Yohe, 67 Pa. St. 477; Rice v. Abeles, 1 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 38; Graphic Co. v. Marcy, 12 Phila. (Pa.) 218, 34 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 248; Lee v. Ware, 3 Rich. (S. C.) 193.

Permitting set-off.— Where defendant alleged that the transfer was fraudulently made to enable the payee to avoid paying money owed by him to defendant and asked to set off his claim against the note and plaintiff demurred, it was held that as the demurrer confessed the truth of the answer plaintiff would be regarded as holding the note in trust for her husband and defendant would be allowed to make the set-off. Pledge.— That plaintiff pledged the note in suit as collateral security for a debt of which he had since tendered payment and

(3) Irregularity in Acquisition by Plaintiff. It is a good defense that plaintiff did not acquire title by transfer from the true owner,[29] that the instrument was not transferred as alleged,[30] or that the transfer was not intended to divest the transferrer of his title[31] or was illegal;[32] but if plaintiff is a holder for value the maker cannot object to the irregularity of the transfer between the parties.[33]

(4) Necessity of Defense to Instrument. The title or interest of the holder of commercial paper cannot be disputed or inquired into unless necessary for the purpose of defense, and unless a meritorious defense is presented.[34] Thus it has been held that the maker cannot, as against an indorsee holder, defend upon the ground that the holder paid no value therefor, unless he is deprived of a defense available against the original holder or has been thereby defrauded of some right;[35] nor in the absence of such circumstances can the accepter of a bill that the pledgee refused to receive it or to give up the note is no defense. Wolcott v. Boston Faucet Co., 9 Gray (Mass.) 376.

Assignment of recovery.— It is not a defense that after suit brought the claim and judgment which might be recovered was assigned without indorsement to a third person not made a party to the suit. Allen v. Newberry, 8 Iowa 65.

Necessity of showing assignee's title.—As signment of the note in suit is no defense without proof of a right to it in the assignee. Conant v. Wills, 1 McLean (U. S.) 427, 6 Fed. Cas. No. 3,087.

29. In an action against a firm on their indorsement it is a good defense that the indorser was not a member of the firm. Bank v. Castner, 9 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 273.

Indorsement by widow of decedent holder. — It is a good defense that the note belongs to the estate of a former deceased holder and that the indorsement to plaintiff was made by the widow without taking out administration or otherwise acquiring any legal title. Fraud of creditors.— That the transfer to plaintiff was in fraud of creditors is no defense. Sullivan v. Bonesteel, 79 N. Y. 631. But see Cross v. Brown, 51 N. H. 486, holding that the maker of a note, who is also administrator of the payee, may defend against the indorsee by showing that the consideration of the transfer was inadequate, and that therefore the indorsement was invalid as against the creditors of the payee, that the avails of the note are needed to pay debts of the payee, and that he, as administrator, claims the note to apply it for that purpose.

d. Set-Off — (1) In General. Actions on promissory notes form no exception to the rule that upon a proper showing a party should be allowed to counterclaim or set off certain demands which he may have against plaintiff;[37] but the doctrine of set off as applied to negotiable paper is restricted to the primary parties and their privies or parties with notice, and is not available against a bona fide holder.[38] Between original parties or those standing in their shoes the doctrine is more restricted than in some species of actions, as set-offs are not equities within the meaning of that term as used in commercial-paper phrascology;[39] and it has been held that an indorsee of an overdue note may enforce it against the maker, even though the indorsement is made for the express purpose of shutting out a set-off available against the indorser.[40] Only claims arising out of the same note or transaction connected with it can be set off in England,[41] Canada,[42] and in a number of American jurisdictions.[43] In other jurisdictions independent demands may be set off where in other respects the party is entitled to go into that defense;[44] and under a statute prohibiting the allowance of a discount when a note is made payable without defalcation or discount a maker of such note is not entitled to a set-off, although the indorsee had notice of such demand or took the note after maturity and dishonor.[45]

(II) TIME OF ACQUISITION. In some jurisdictions it would seem that a maker may set off a claim against the holder if he acquired it against the payee or transferrer before notice of the transfer.[46] But however the soundness of the reasoning on which this position is maintained may be questioned by some of our courts, it is well settled that a set-off, to be available against an indorsee, must have been acquired against the payee before the transfer;[47] and under some statutes the payee must also have had notice of the acquisition of such claim before he made the transfer.[48] Set-offs subsequently acquired, even though arising out of a previous transaction, cannot be set up;[49] but this rule does not apply to equities not constituting set-offs which grow out of the original transaction and are not discovered until after the transfer.[50]

Necessity of indorsee giving notice.— Under the procedure of Alabama it is not necessary that the assignee of a note by indorsement or delivery should himself give notice to the maker of his acquisition of the instrument to exclude set-offs acquired subsequently to the assignment. Such set-offs cannot be urged if the maker is informed of the transfer by any party who knows of the fact. Crayton v. Clark, 11 Ala. 787.

(iii) Between What Parties Available. It is also well recognized by the courts that a claim, to be available as a set-off, must arise between other than intermediate parties. If the instrument has been indorsed several times the maker cannot, in an action by the holder, set off a claim which he may have against a prior indorsee,[51] although transferred to plaintiff after maturity,[52] unless so allowed by a contract between the parties founded on some new consideration.[53]

3. Right to Assert — a. Necessity of Rescission. Where a party seeks to defend on the ground of fraud or failure of consideration, he must, if he has received anything of value for the note, return the same or make a tender thereof before he can defeat the instrument as a cause of action, by offering such defenses as an absolute bar to the action,[54] unless by lapse of time or other circumstance the thing received has lost validity before the fraud is discovered;[55] but where the thing received as consideration is absolutely void or of no value no return is necessary.[56]

b. Estoppel to Assert. The principle of estoppel either by deed or in pais, as applied to negotiable paper, being intended to give credit and circulation to such security and to protect the honest holder thereof,[57] it follows that parties thereto are often estopped from asserting defenses which might otherwise have been available, but which, in the light of their previous acts or representations, are unfair, fraudulent, or prejudicial to plaintiff.[58] Thus an obligor may be

A maker who forged the indorsement of the payee and put the note in circulation is estopped as to a bona fide holder to deny the genuineness of the indorsement. Meacher v. Fort, 3 Hill (S. C.) 287, 30 Am. Dec. 364.

A surety who signs a note after the forged signatures of others cannot defend against an innocent holder. Selser v. Brock, 3 Ohio St. 302.

If a party has at any time paid other forged bills and notes of the same party, under similar circumstances to the ones presented in question, he is estopped thereby from affirming such forgery (Morris v. Bethell, L. R. 5 C. P. 47, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 323, 18 Wkly. Rep. 137; Barber v. Gingell, 3 Esp. 60); but mere silence for a fortnight from the time when a party has learned of the forgery, during which the position of the holder is in no way altered or prejudiced, does not constitute an estoppel (McKenzie v. British Linen Co., 6 App. Cas. 82, 44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 43, 29 Wkly. Rep. 477 [approved in Freeman v. Cooke, 2 Exch. 654, 12 Jur. 777, 18 L. J. Exch. 114]).

An administrator de bonis non who has never been in possession of a note given by the debtor of the intestate to a prior administrator cannot recover on the note. Brooks v. Mastin, 69 Mo. 58.

Assignee of pledgee.— One who claims title to a promissory note, pledged as collateral security, as the assignee of such pledgee, cannot maintain an action thereon unless he shows that he also owns the debt to secure which it is pledged. Van Eman v. Stanchfield, 13 Minn. 75.

Independently of statute, equitable and beneficial owners can bring action only in the name of the party holding the legal title. Note in possession of pledgee.— The owner of a note may sue as indorsee although the note was, at the time of the indorsement to him, in the possession of another as pledgee of the indorser (Fisher v. Bradford, 7 Me. 28), but he cannot bring suit while the note is in the pledgee's possession (Felton v. Smith, 84 Ind. 485).

3. Woodsum v. Cole, 69 Cal. 142, 10 Pac. 331.

The payee may recover on a check procured by another in his name for money due him and paid to such other person on his forging an indorsement of the payee's name. Dodge v. National Exch. Bank, 20 Ohio St. 234, 30 Ohio St. 1.

The pledgee of a note may sue upon it while still in the pledgor's possession, the recovery being as trustee for the pledgor for all excess above the amount due to the pledgee. Stones v. Butt, 2 Cr. & M. 416.

The tender to B of a note made by A, under the payee's agreement with B for goods purchased, makes it B's property and will support an action by B against A, although it was refused by B, and after being held some time for him was sold by the payee to C conditionally, and afterward destroyed by fire while still in the payee's possession. United States.— Vanarsdale v. Hax, 107 Fed. 878, 47 C. C. A. 31. But see Foss v. Nutting, 14 Gray (Mass.) 484, holding that the New York statute, requiring actions to be "prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest" will not govern an action brought in Massachusetts on such a transfer made in New York.

See 7 Cent. Dig. tit. "Bills and Notes," § 1387.

Action by individual partner to whom note given.— Under the New York code the payee of a note is entitled to maintain an action thereon in his own name, although the note may have been given to him as one of several copartners in a partnership transaction. Mynderse v. Snook, 1 Lans. (N. Y.) 488.

Note owned by voluntary association.—

title is.[11] If, however, the action is commenced by the real party in interest it will be sufficient, although the interest subsequently passes to another.[12]

(b) WHO IS REAL PARTY IN INTEREST. The real party in interest is the person beneficially entitled to the proceeds of the bill or note.[13] As a rule the holder is presumptively [14] the owner, and as such is the real party in interest and entitled to bring suit.[15]

Where it appears that a note belongs to a voluntary association of individuals and that plaintiff, although the note was given to him personally, has no real interest therein, an action cannot be maintained by him. Nightingale v. Barney, 4 Greene (Iowa) 106.

Note payable to use of county.— A note payable to another for the use of a county must be sued by the county, as by an individual in the same circumstances, in the name of the person who is the legal owner. Linn County v. Holland, 12 Mo. 127.

Successor in office.— Where a note was made to a designated person, agent of a county named, or his successor in office, etc., it was held that such person's successor could not sue upon the note in his own name, since a county agent is not a quasi-corporation. Upton v. Starr, 3 Ind. 508.

Beneficial and fiduciary interest.— In Madison Square Bank v. Pierce, 137 N. Y. 444, 32 N. E. 557, 51 N. Y. St. 175, 33 Am. St. Rep. 751, 20 L. R. A. 335 [affirming 62 Hun (N. Y.) 493, 17 N. Y. Suppl. 270, 42 N. Y. St. 832], defendant made his note payable to his own order and indorsed it to another who indorsed it to plaintiff. The receiver of the first indorsee paid part of the amount due on the note to plaintiff. It was held that plaintiff was entitled to recover the full amount of the note partly in his own right and partly as trustee for the receiver.

Washington.—Yakima Nat. Bank v. Knipe, 6 Wash. 348, 33 Pac. 834.

An indorsee for collection may sue upon the bill or note as the real party in interest. Lehman v. Press, 106 Iowa 389, 76 N. W. 818; Abell Note Brokerage, etc., Bond Co. v. Hurd, 85 Iowa 559, 52 N. W. 488; Elmquist v. Markoe, 45 Minn. 305, 47 N. W. 70; Eaton v. Alger, 47 N. Y. 345. But see Iselin v. Rowlands, 30 Hun (N. Y.) 488; Bell v. Tilden, 16 Hun (N. Y.) 346, in which latter case it was held that one having no other interest in a bill of exchange than that of collecting agent is not a real party in interest who can maintain an action thereon in his own name.

Receiver.— Where the members of a partnership have been enjoined from collecting a note and the maker has been enjoined from paying it to them a receiver appointed by such court and ordered to collect the note is the party really interested, within the meaning of Ala. Code, § 2129. Leonard v. Storrs, 31 Ala. 488.

Holder of note as collateral see infra, XIV, C, 1, a, (III), note 25.

Non-negotiable note.—In Missouri and New York the real owner of a promissory note not negotiable may maintain an action thereon in his own name (Bennett v. Pound, 28 Mo. 598; Allgoever v. Edmunds, 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 579), and where the payee sues on a non-negotiable note which is lost he will be pre-

(B) Payee. Suit upon unindorsed negotiable paper can be brought only by the payee or his personal representative, and in general the party entitled to sue is to be looked for in the instrument as the designated payee.[16] The payee cannot, however, maintain an action where an indorsee is the owner, without the latter's direction or consent,[17] and a plea that plaintiff has assigned the note sued on to another before suit is good,[18] but if the payee after assignment or indorsement has been obliged to take up the paper, his right of action thereon revives.[19]

(C) Transferee — (1) OF NEGOTIABLE PAPER — (A) IN GENERAL. In the absence of statute the holder of paper indorsed in full must sue in his own name,[20] and paper made payable to order must be indorsed by the payee to enable another party to sue upon it in his own name.[21] Hence where paper was improperly sumed to be the owner (Price v. Dunlap, 5 Cal. 483).

If the transfer is made with defendant's consent and with a power of attorney to the plaintiff for the use of his transferee,[44] that the transferee may, in the discretion of the court, be substituted in the place of the transferrer,[45] or that he may be joined in the action as a party plaintiff,[46] provided in all cases that the rights of defendant are as fully protected as if no transfer had been made.[47] On the other hand an indorsee without notice of any pending suit may bring a fresh action in his own name,[48] although it has been held that an indorsee with notice could not do so.[49]

bb. To Plaintiff. An action on a promissory note cannot be supported by a title acquired subsequently to the commencement of the suit, but plaintiff must show that he had title when suit was commenced.[50] It is sufficient, however, if the note is indorsed or formally assigned to the real owner after the commencement of the action,[51] and, conversely, it has been held that in an action on a note brought in the name of the payee by the holder, the rights of the owner were in no wise diminished by his taking an indorsement of the note after suit brought.[52]

(c) Under Blank Indorsement. While the holder under a blank indorsement may bring suit in his own name,[53] it is necessary in some jurisdictions that he fill

(d) Where Indorser May Not Sue. An indorsee may sometimes sue, although his indorser could not, as in a case where the indorser is himself one of the makers,[57] but it has been held that the assignee of such note without indorsement can sue the makers only in equity.[58]

(II) Action in Individual or Representative Capacity — (A) Agents. The party holding the legal title to a bill or note may sue on it, although he is merely an agent and liable to account to another for the proceeds of the recovery, but the suit is open in such case to any defense which exists against the party beneficially interested.[85] Where the drawer of a bill knows of the agency of the payee, the principal may maintain an action thereon in his own name.[86]

(B) Corporate Officers — (1) In General. A bill or note made payable to a corporate officer may be sued on by the corporation as the real party in interest,[87] although in some cases an action by the officer in his own name has been sustained, his designation as officer being regarded as merely descriptio personæ,[88] and in case the company is not incorporated suit must be brought in the name of the payees, even though they have been succeeded in office by others.[89]

(2) Bank Cashiers. Where a bill or note is indorsed to the cashier of a bank he may maintain an action thereon in his own name,[90] or the bank as the real party in interest may maintain the action.[91]

(C) Guardians. Where a note is made to one as guardian he may sue upon it the testator and put into a bank for collection, and comes after his death into the hands of the executor, he may bring suit upon it in his own name under the blank indorsement as bearer.[99]

(E) Public Officers. A distinction is made between private agents[1] and public officers, and as a rule it is held that public officers cannot sue in their individual capacity on a bill or note made payable to them in their representative capacity;[2] but if a note is made payable to a public officer as agent of the beneficial owner he may himself sue thereon.[3] On the other hand the government may bring suit in its own name on a bill or note belonging to it, although it is made payable to the treasurer of the United States or other public officer.[4] This is true also of a state;[5] and even, it has been held, of a county,[6] but a note to the treasurer of a parish may be sued by him, although a subsequent indorsement by his successor in office appears on the paper.[7] If, however, a note for taxes is

fraud of the plaintiff's agent,[19] and an accepter may defeat the action of the nominal payee by showing that he was really a trustee for the drawer and that the drawer has been satisfied.[20] In like manner if notes are transferred by a corporation to a particular person to secure creditors, he may sue as "trustee of an express trust" under the statute.[21] Similarly if plaintiff holds a note payable to bearer under a bequest to him in trust to another he has a right of action in himself;[22] and this is true under an agreement with a third person entitling the holder to half the proceeds.[23]

(III) Where Paper Held as Collateral. Where negotiable paper is transferred as collateral security the holder may maintain action thereon in his own name,[24] save where by statute it is required that action shall be brought in the name of the real party in interest.[25] With the consent of the pledgee an action may be maintained by the pledgor.[26]

(IV) Where Paper Held For Collection. An indorsee or assignee[27] of a bill or note for purposes of collection merely can maintain an action thereon in his own name,[28] but mere delivery without indorsement does not authorize an

a holder, who is neither the payee nor his transferee, without proof of some privity between them.[36]

(VI) WHERE PAPER PAYABLE TO BEARER — (A) In General. Possession of a bill or note carries with it presumption of title in the holder, whether it is payable on its face to bearer or is deemed to be so payable in law,[37] and an action may be maintained by the holder in the name of any party consenting to the use of his name,[38] and even in the name of a person having no knowledge of or interest in the note, if he afterward ratifies such act and gives permission that it may be prosecuted in his name;[39] or on the other hand by another than the real owner with the consent of the latter.[40] So too an action may be maintained on a note indorsed in blank in the name of the payee for the use of the holder, although the holder has paid a valuable consideration at the time of indorsement.[41] This presumption from possession arises whether the bill is acquired before or after maturity,[42] but plaintiff must be in possession before suit brought by him,[43]

Where holder is mere trustee.— Where a negotiable note is payable to bearer or is indorsed in blank, an action may be maintained by the holder in his own name, although the note be held by him in fact as trustee and although there be no allegation as to the nature of his possession. although it is held to be unnecessary for him to fill the indorsement specially to himself.[44]

(B) Fictitious Payee. If paper is payable to a fictitious payee the holder cannot bring suit upon it as bearer against a party having no notice of the fictitious character of the payee,[45] but any holder may sue as bearer of a note made payable to order without designating any payee,[46] and the fact that a note is in terms payable to a certain bank does not prevent a holder who has furnished the consideration from treating the bank as a fictitious payee and suing thereon as upon a note payable to bearer.[47]

(C) Note Payable to Maker. A note made payable to the maker thereof and indorsed by him in blank can be recovered on by the holder without proof of indorsement and delivery, the production of the note by the holder with the indorsement thereon prima facie entitling him to recover.[48]

(D) Note Payable or Indorsed to a Particular Person "or Bearer." A note payable or indorsed to a particular person "or bearer" is in effect payable to bearer and may be sued upon by any holder in possession,[49] although the holder of such a note was formerly required at common law to prove his title.[50] He may bring suit either in his own name or in that of the nominal payee.[51]

extend to an action brought by the payee of the paper in the name and right of another.[58]

b. Joinder of Plaintiffs — (I) In General. It has been held that all parties having an interest in the subject-matter may be joined in the same suit,[59] but a person having merely an equitable interest in a portion of the proceeds of a bill or note should not be joined as a party plaintiff with the holder of the whole legal title.[60]

(II) Indorsers. To enable indorsers to join in demanding a repayment from prior parties of a note paid by them to subsequent indorsees, the payment must have been made out of a joint fund.[61]

(III) Payee and Transferee. Where a note has been transferred by parol the payee is a necessary party to a suit by the assignee,[62] but a nominal payee is not necessary to an action by the holder, although he has received the note by delivery merely.[63] The payee may also be joined with the transferee in case of an action by the indorsee of a non-negotiable promissory note in which the payee is made a co-plaintiff for the use of the indorsee,[64] or in an action by an assignee of a note, where a statute requires suit to be brought in the name of the real party in interest.[65] The payee and transferee should not be joined as parties plaintiff where no unity of interests subsists between them.[66]

(IV) Transferrer and Transferee. As a general rule there is no necessity of making the assignor or indorser of a bill or note a party to an action brought by the assignee or indorsee.[67] In the case of an equitable assignment, however, the assignor must be joined as a party plaintiff with the assignee,[68] and where, owing to the non-negotiability of a note, the assignor retains the legal title he is, in the absence of statutory authority to the contrary, a necessary party, if objection is made,[69] although in such case amendment is freely allowed.[70]

Filing blank indorsements.— If on the trial several blank indorsements, including that of plaintiff, appear on the note, plaintiff may strike out his own and fill up the others to correspond with the allegations in his declaration. Pickett v. Stewart, 12 Ala. 202.

persons or is indorsed or assigned to several they are joint holders and must sue jointly as such.[71] A note payable to alternative payees is evidence of a joint contract, and neither can sue alone on it,[72] although they may bring a joint action.[73]

(B) Where One Party Dies. If a note is payable to several jointly action may be brought by the survivors on the death of one.[74] In case of the death of one of several indorsees or assignees, the right of action survives to the survivors, and the successor or representative of the deceased party cannot be joined with them in an action on the note.[75]

(C) Where Transferred by One Party. By the weight of authority the transfer of a bill or note by one of several payees or holders to the other or others will not be sufficient to support an action by the latter.[76] If, however, the original indorsement is to several as trustees, and one transfers his interest to the other two, they may bring suit without joining him;[77] and if a note is indorsed to three persons, one of whom indorses to the other two who indorse to plaintiff, it has been held sufficient to sustain an action by him.[78] If the note is payable to "our, and each of our, order," the indorsee of either payee may bring suit upon it.[79]

(VI) WHERE PART INTEREST IN PAPER ASSIGNED. A part interest in a promissory note may be assigned, and the assignee being the real party in interest can join the owner of the other interest in an action upon the note.[80]

App. 1895) 34 S. W. 325). In general, however, the assignee of a partial interest in commercial paper may maintain a suit in equity, although not at law (Hutchinson v. Simon, 57 Miss. 628), and if a fractional interest in a note is assigned to one of the payee's next of kin and the maker settles with the other parties interested and thereby severs their joint interest the assignee may bring suit alone for his share (Pratt v. Pratt, 22 Minn. 148).

2. Parties Defendant — a. In General. Only parties to a bill or note are necessary or proper parties defendant in an action thereon.[81]

b. Joint, or Joint and Several, Makers or Accepters — (I) In General. Where a note is joint, all the makers are as a rule necessary parties unless some have been legally discharged,[82] but the holder may sue the makers and indorsers at the same time and recover costs and damages separately against each.[83] Where a note is joint and several the holder may bring separate actions against the several makers without proving a joint liability,[84] but he must proceed against all jointly on their joint contract or against the several makers separately.[85]

The action may be maintained against the other maker. Willis v. Neal, 39 Ala. 464. But where a note was made by two parties, payable to one of them and a third party, in a suit by the latter against both makers, in which he abated as to the one, who was also a payee, and took judgment against the other, it was held that the note was in effect the joint note of the two makers to the third party payee, that he had the right to sue both or either of them, and that the judgment should not be reversed because he was allowed to abate as to one and take judgment against the other. Administrator of survivor.— A declaration in one of the short forms authorized by the Georgia code against the administrator of A did not expressly state that he was sued as administrator, but alleged that he was indebted to plaintiff on a promissory note, a copy of which was annexed, and the copy annexed was that of a joint note signed by A and B. It was held that, although the non-joinder of B, if alive and within the jurisdiction, would be a matter for plea in abatement, yet after judgment it would be presumed that A survived B, in which case the proper defendant of the action is A's administrator alone. Jennings v. Wright, 54 Ga. 537.

Mississippi statute construed.— The provisions of Miss. Code (1857), p. 357, art. 11, which require all the parties to bills of exchange and promissory notes resident in the state to be sued in one action, apply only to bills of exchange and indorsed notes, when there are parties secondarily liable. They do not embrace the case of joint makers of a promissory note, even though one be a surety. In such a case all are makers and the action may be brought in the county where any of the makers reside. Moore v. Knox, 46 Miss. 602.

Simultaneous actions against non-residents and residents.—The holder of a note executed by several persons may prosecute his action by attachment against non-residents and by summons against those who can be served personally with process at the same time, Tenn. Acts (1812), c. 67, which prohibits the prosecution of several actions against parties jointly and severally liable on instruments for the payment of money, not embracing such a case. Michigan statute construed.—Howell Anno. Stat. Mich. § 7316, provides that when an action on a contract is brought in the circuit is not as a rule a necessary party defendant to a suit brought to recover the amount of the note.[92]

(IV) Effect of Failure to Serve All Joint Defendants. The common-law rule that service of process must be had on all of several joint defendants has been modified by statute in various states. These as a rule provide that plaintiff may discontinue as to the party or parties not served and proceed against those served with process.[93]

c. Parties Severally Liable — (I) At Common Law. At common law the holder of a bill might bring several simultaneous actions against all or any of the prior parties liable to him.[94] He could not, however, maintain a joint action against parties severally liable.[95]

(II) By Statute — (A) In General. By statute in many of the United States, in England, and in Canada the holder of a bill of exchange or promissory note may bring suit against the drawer or maker, accepter or indorser, any or all, in the same action.[96] In other states it is provided that if a joint action is brought court against joint defendants, one of whom does not reside in, and is not found in, the county, and one or more of whom are served with process in the county, service may be had on defendant not so found or served in the county, provided "such joint defendants are original parties thereto by being indorsers or guarantors." It has been held that one other than the payee, who indorses a note before delivery and before any advances are made thereon, is an original party to the contract and not an indorser or guarantor, within the meaning of the statute. Allison v. Kinne, 104 Mich. 141, 62 N. W. 152.

92. In Louisiana, under Civ. Code, arts. 2080–2082, in an action upon a joint obligation all the parties thereto must be made parties to the suit; and if one of the parties is a non-resident and has no property in Louisiana he may be cited through a curator ad hoc and judgment rendered against him is valid in Louisiana, although it may have no extra-territorial effect. In Texas the act of 1846, § 46, provides that no judgment shall be rendered against an indorser or surety unless judgment is at the same time rendered against the principal, except where plaintiff discontinues as to the principal because he resides beyond the limits of the state or because he is insolvent. it must be prosecuted against all of the parties liable,[97] and in Mississippi no action can be brought against parties secondarily liable on a note without joining all prior parties living in the state.[98] Conversely it has been enacted in Texas, in the case of non-negotiable instruments, that only the immediate indorser can be sued.[99]

See 7 Cent. Dig. tit. "Bills and Notes," § 1435.

Right given by charter.— In Georgia it has been held that the charter of a particular bank authorizing such suits upon paper held by the bank is a constitutional act. Davis v. Fulton Bank, 31 Ga. 69.

Right of severance.— The statute as to suing all the parties to a note in one action (N. Y. Laws (1832), c. 276), has not been repealed, and the right which it gives to sever the action at any time, to take judgment against any of the parties, should not be taken away by a mere order of the court as to adding parties. Sawyer v. Chambers, 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 110.

Surety signing after maturity.—Iowa Code (1851), § 1681 (Code (1873), § 2550), providing that an action may be brought against any or all persons liable on contracts, negotiable paper, orders, and checks, and sureties on the same, authorizes a recovery in the same action by the holder of a note against the maker and a surety signing after maturity. Jones v. Wilson, 11 Iowa 160. See also McVean v. Scott, 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 379.

97. In Indiana, under the statute of 1839, the holder of a note payable at bank may proceed against the maker and indorsers jointly, if he has a good cause of action against each of them, but not otherwise. When he has such grounds of suit and chooses to proceed under the statute, his action must be brought against all the makers and indorsers living; and the judgment for plaintiff, if any, must be rendered against all sued and served with process, except where one pleads some plea that goes to his personal discharge. Goodlet v. Britton, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 500. See also Cross v. Pearson, 17 Ind. 612; Dillon v. State Bank, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 5.

In Kentucky the statute gives a joint action in the case of foreign bills only, leaving, as to the mode of suit, the other kinds of bills as they stood at common law. In the case of a foreign bill, the statute does not restrain the holder from bringing several actions against the drawer, etc., but if he chooses to depart from the common law he must pursue the statute and unite all concerned. Crisson v. Williamson, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 454.

(Miss.) 78.

Present statute construed.— Miss. Code (1871), § 2237, requiring that in suits on negotiable instruments the makers, accepters, drawers, and indorsers shall be sued jointly, is for the benefit alone of those secondarily liable, so that in an action against the accepter of a bill he cannot object that the drawers are not joined. Hamilton v. Catchings, 58 Miss. 92.

A subsequent indorser without recourse is not a necessary party in an action by his indorsee against the first indorser. Duncan v. McNeill, 31 Miss. 704.

Repugnant to Judiciary Act.— The Mississippi act of May 13, 1837, providing that, in all actions on bills and notes, "plaintiffs shall be compelled to sue the drawers and indorsers, living and resident in this State, in a joint action," is repugnant to the act of congress giving jurisdiction to the courts of the United States, and consequently, where the original parties were citizens of Mississippi, it was held that an indorsee, a citizen of Tennessee, could not join such parties in an action in the United States circuit court. Keary v. Farmers', etc., Bank, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 89, 10 L. ed. 897.

(B) Maker and Indorser. Under the statutes above referred to the maker and indorsers of negotiable[1] paper may now in general be sued together in one action.[2] Where such an action is brought it may be discontinued on payment of costs as to one defendant and proceed as to the other.[3] It has been held that

1. Where a non-negotiable note is transferred by indorsement, a joint action cannot be maintained by the indorsee against the maker and indorser, since the maker must be sued by the indorsee as assignee, and the indorser by him as indorsee. Accommodation indorser.— In a joint action against a maker and indorser of a promissory note, an answer by the indorser alleging that he was only an accommodation indorser and not a maker is insufficient. Clark v. Carey, 63 Ind. 105.

Administrators of maker and indorser.— D. C. Rev. Fleischmann v. Stern, 24 Hun (N. Y.) 265, 61 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 124.

Restrictive indorsement.— The maker of a note and one indorsing it "to be liable in the second instance" cannot be sued together in the same action. Bartlett v. Byers, 35 Ga. 142.

Statute strictly construed.— A statute authorizing a joint action against the drawer and indorser of a foreign bill of exchange, being in derogation of the common law, must be strictly construed, so that such an action cannot be maintained unless brought for interest and costs of protest as well as for the principal. Pendleton v. Commonwealth Bank, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 148. See also Mann v. Sutton, 4 Rand. (Va.) 253.

3. Fuller v. Van Schaick, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 547.

In Mississippi the action cannot be dismissed against the maker and proceed against the indorser. Smith v. Crutcher, 27 Miss. 455.

In Tennessee under the earlier statute the action must be a joint one and it could not be dismissed as to one and continued against the other. Holland v. Harris, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 68.

In Texas the holder cannot discontinue his suit against the principal debtor and take judgment against the indorser or surety, unless the principal is a non-resident or is insolvent (Barnett v. Tayler, 30 Tex. 453), but the provisions of such a statute make no change in the liability of the parties to the paper.[4]

(c) Maker and Guarantor. The statutes of some of the states expressly provide that guarantors may be joined in the same action with the maker of a promissory note,[5] but it has been held that unless the statute expressly includes guarantors, such action will not lie against the maker, indorser, and guarantor,[6] or against the maker and guarantor only.[7] Under other statutes, however, it has been held that the guarantor, although not expressly mentioned, may be sued jointly with the maker.[8]

(d) Indorsers — (1) In General. Independently of statute,[9] successive indorsers cannot be joined as defendants in the same action,[10] and this is still the case where an action is brought by the holder for money paid, and not on the note.[11]

(2) Immediate and Remote Indorsers. Under these statutes immediate and remote indorsers of promissory notes or bills of exchange may be joined in the same action.[12]

(e) Indorser and Guarantor. A joint action will not lie, independently of statute, against the indorser and guarantor of a promissory note.[13]

d. Note Made in Name of Wrong Payee. In an action on a note made payable in the name of a wrong payee, such payee is not a necessary party to a suit brought by the real owner.[14]

e. Maker as Necessary Party to Action Against Indorser. The maker of a promissory note is not a necessary party to an action against an indorser or assignor.[15]

f. Transfer Without Indorsement. Where a note has been assigned, but not by indorsement, the assignor should be made a party defendant in an action by the assignee.[16]

g. Notice to Defend and Calling in Warranty. A defendant, when sued upon a bill or note which he has paid, or which has been assigned after maturity, may give notice to the assignor to defend, or call him in warranty, in a suit by the holder,[17] but such right is confined to defendants[18] and to cases in which a privity exists between plaintiff and the person so called.[19]

In Kentucky by statute the payer of a note when sued by an assignee has not merely an equitable, but a legal, right to avail himself as matter of defense of any usury embraced in the note or of any payments made to the payee before notice of the assignment. Consequently, the assignor is not a necessary party to a suit on a note, brought by the assignee against the maker, where the defense is payment with notice before assignment and usury. True v. Triplett, 4 Metc. (Ky.) 57.

Action by assignee against remote assignor. — In a suit in equity by the last assignee of a note against a prior assignor plaintiff's immediate assignor is a necessary party. Turneys v. Hunt, 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 401.

Representative of deceased assignor.— Where the payee of a promissory note, who has transferred it by sale and delivery without indorsement in writing, is deceased, a complaint upon it by the assignee must make his personal representatives a party or show that there are no such representatives. St. John v. Hardwick, 11 Ind. 251. or by making it a part of the complaint, declaration, or petition by appropriate reference.[28]

(II) As to Execution and Delivery — (A) Necessary Allegations. The execution of the instrument must be substantially alleged,[29] and the declaration or complaint must contain some averment or statement of facts sufficient to show a delivery of the instrument.[30]

(B) Sufficiency of Allegations — (1) In General. The absence of an express averment of execution is not fatal to the pleading if by other allegations and statements therein contained the fact of execution is made manifest.[31] So the

A description of notes issued by a bank by their numbers and letters and the names of the president and cashier of the bank is sufficient where the original notes are annexed to and filed with the petition, although not made a part thereof. Gray v. Commercial Bank, 1 Rob. (La.) 533.

See 7 Cent. Dig. tit. "Bills and Notes," § 1474.

Erroneous designation.— A description of a maker and an indorser in one paragraph as joint makers is cured by a proper description in the other paragraphs, and in the accompanying copy of the note and indorsement. Burroughs v. Wilson, 59 Ind. 536.

Omission cured.— The omission of an averment of execution is cured by failure to deny the making of the instrument. Turner v. White, 4 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 465, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,264, where there was a plea of payment.

Incompetency of maker.— An allegation that defendant was adjudged a lunatic after the execution of the note in suit is not an admission that he was incompetent at the time of its execution. Knox v. Knox, 30 S. C. 377, 9 S. E. 353.

30. Brown v. Ready, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 583, 20 S. W. 1036; Thigpen v. Mundine, 24 Tex. 282; Sneed v. Moodie, 24 Tex. 159; Gray v. Osborne, 24 Tex. 157, 76 Am. Dec. 99; Noonan v. Ilsley, 21 Wis. 138.

Delivery by defendant.— An averment that defendant is indebted to the petitioner "in the sum of $100, by promissory note, made, executed, signed, and delivered to petitioner for a valuable consideration," does not sufficiently allege that the note was delivered by defendant. Parr v. Nolen, 28 Tex. 798.

31. Thus, execution of the instrument is sufficiently charged by the following allegations: An allegation of a promise to pay. McDonald v. Han, 28 Ind. App. 227, 62 N. E. 501; Parsons v. Jones, 16 U. C. Q. B. 274. "For value received, 'defendants' jointly and severally promised to pay." Wallace v. Hunt, 22 Tex. 647. "By his note in writing under his hand" promised, etc. Binney v. Plumley, 5 Vt. 500, 26 Am. Dec. 313. That the bill in suit was "sold, discounted and endorsed to the plaintiff." Rudd v. Owensboro Deposit Bank, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1276, 49 S. W. 207.

An averment of making is equivalent to an allegation of signing. Ereskine v. Murray, 2 Ld. Raym. 1542; Smith v. Jarves, 2 Ld. Raym. 1484; Elliot v. Cooper, 2 Ld. Raym. 1376.

Statutory form.— A complaint in the form prescribed by statute is sufficient, although it contains a superfluous averment as to the maker's signature. Baldwin v. Humphrey, 75 Ind. 153.

Note under seal.— In Conner v. Autrey, 18 Tex. 427, a petition describing the instrument sued on as a note, but alleging that it delivery of the note or bill need not be alleged in terms, but may be implied from other statements and allegations,[32] as, that it was made, executed, drawn,[33] indorsed,[34] assigned,[35] duly assigned,[36] negotiated,[37] or that defendant promised to pay it.[38] An allegation of delivery imports a delivery to the payee.[39]

(2) SETTING OUT INSTRUMENT. If the instrument sued on, signed by the party sought to be charged, is set out in the declaration or complaint, filed, or made a part of the pleading by appropriate reference, its execution by defendant is sufficiently shown by a suitable averment connecting him therewith;[40] but unless he was signed "R. Autrey [seal.]," was held to be a sufficient averment that the note was under seal.

32. Rudd v. Owensboro Deposit Bank, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1276, 49 S. W. 207; Loungeway v. Hale, 73 Tex. 495, 11 S. W. 537. Thus an allegation that the note having been made by one defendant, payable to her own order, was thereafter, and before the maturity thereof, duly indorsed by the other defendant, and that as thus indorsed it was delivered to a bank for value necessarily implies that the note was delivered by the maker. Odell v. Clyde, 38 N. Y. App. Div. 333, 57 N. Y. Suppl. 126.

Setting out and alleging ownership.— A complaint setting out the note in suit and alleging it to be the property of plaintiff sufficiently avers it to have been delivered. Lord v. Russell, 64 Conn. 86, 29 Atl. 242.

Single bill.— It is not necessary in a declaration in debt on a single bill to allege delivery of the writing to the payee, although such delivery is essential to its validity. Brown v. Hemphill, 9 Port. (Ala.) 206.

Delivery to "defendant."— An allegation in the declaration, in a suit on a note, that it was delivered to "defendant" is a clerical misprision. Allen v. Claunch, 7 Ala. 788.

Copy filed.— Where it is alleged that the note was executed by defendants, the copy filed in accordance with law may be looked to to determine the character of the signatures. Jaqua v. Woodbury, 3 Ind. App. 289, 29 N. E. 573.

is so connected, there should be an allegation of execution.[41] However, under statutory provisions permitting plaintiff to set out a copy of the note and to allege that there is due to him thereon a specific sum, if he so plead, an express allegation of execution is unnecessary.[42]

(C) Joint and Several Execution. If the promise is joint or joint and several, it must be so alleged.[43]

(D) Execution by Agent. The execution of the instrument by an agent may be averred to be the act of the principal.[44] And while there are decisions to the effect that the authority of the agent must be averred,[45] there are also decisions

A declaration against one joint and several maker of a note which alleges its execution by him need not aver its execution by the other. Morgan v. Laurenceburg Ins. Co., 3 Ind. 285.

Alleging execution and indorsement before delivery to the payee is equivalent to an allegation that the maker and indorser are jointly liable as makers. Paine v. Noelke, 43 N. Y. Super. Ct. 176, 54 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 333.

An allegation that defendants drew checks on a bank sufficiently avers that the checks were executed jointly. Ringo v. New Farmers' Bank, 101 Ky. 91, 39 S. W. 701.

An allegation that defendants made their note is an averment of joint and several execution. Reed v. Clark, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 39 S. W. 160.

An allegation that each of two indorsers promised to pay authorized a recovery as of a separate promise by each — a joint promise being unnecessary. Brown v. Fowler, 133 Ala. 310, 32 So. 584.

A note reciting "we promise," etc., signed by a corporation and its treasurer, should be declared on as a several and not as a joint note. Gleason v. Sanitary Milk-Supply Co., 93 Me. 544, 45 Atl. 825, 74 Am. St. Rep. 370.

In an action by a bank against a maker and indorser, on a note discounted by it, an allegation charging defendants as joint makers is sufficient, where the charter of the bank provides that all parties to a note discounted by it shall be sued jointly. Chenango Bank v. Curtin, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 326.

Action against survivor.— An allegation in an action against a surviving maker of a joint note that it is joint and several is an immaterial variance. Creecy v. Joy, (Oreg. 1901) 66 Pac. 295. And in an action on a joint and several note, the addition of the words "survivor," etc., as description of defendant in the declaration is mere harmless surplusage and will not affect the action against him on his several liability. Bogert v. Vermilya, 10 N. Y. 447.

In Canada the statutory form must be followed, and the liability of the several parties stated. Upper Canada Bank v. Gwynne, 4 U. C. Q. B. 145. But see Acheson v. McKenzie, 4 U. C. Q. B. 230, holding that if a promise is alleged the specific statement of legal liability set forth in the form is immaterial and may be omitted. Under 3 Vict. c. 8, a declaration against the maker and indorser of a note should allege a joint and several liability according to the form of the act. Nordheimer v. O'Reilly, 6 U. C. Q. B. 413. But see Chapman v. Dubrey, 21 U. C. Q. B. 244, holding that in an action against maker and indorser of a note it is unnecessary to aver a joint liability. A declaration against the drawer of a bill, and accepters thereof who sign jointly, which avers a joint and several liability of all the parties is bad. Upper Canada Bank v. Gwynne, 4 U. C. Q. B. 145. The recital of a joint and several promise, and averment of a joint and several liability, and an averment "and being so liable, they jointly and severally promised to pay," etc., are not inconsistent. Sufficiency of averment.— An allegation in the declaration, that the note on which the suit was brought was made by a person named acting for himself, and as joint owner with another of the boat, is not an allegation that the former had authority, as the agent of the latter, to execute the note in his name, so as to make the note evidence under the statute, unless contradicted by a sworn plea. Brooks v. Harris, 12 Ala. 555.

The authority is not shown by a power of attorney annexed to the complaint which does not purport to confer any authority. Brown v. Rouse, 93 Cal. 237, 28 Pac. 1044.

Principal not disclosed by instrument.— to the effect that where the paper is executed by an agent no averment of his authority is necessary.[46]

(E) Execution by Copartners. Where a note purports to be signed by two or more, an averment that they signed as partners is immaterial,[47] and it is not necessary to allege the firm-name or the style in which they do business;[48] but if necessary to charge defendants as copartners the intention should clearly appear.[49]

(F) Corporate or Individual Execution. Unless required by statute the authority of a domestic corporation to make commercial paper need not be expressly averred.[50] To charge a corporate liability the declaration must contain averments sufficient to show that the instrument in question was the act of the corporation through its duly authorized officers;[51] otherwise it will be taken to be the individual obligation of those whose names are signed to it.[52]

(G) Representative or Individual Execution. Where personal representatives execute a note or like instrument, allegations showing their intention to sign

49. A note containing the signature of a firm in liquidation by one of the members thereof (i. e. "Gayle & Bowers, in liquidation, by Wm. Bower") may properly be declared on as a note of the partnership. Riggs v. Andrews, 8 Ala. 628.

By firm-name.— In declaring against an indorser, it is sufficient to describe the note as being made by a firm in their copartnership name, without setting forth the names at large of the persons composing the firm. Bacon v. Cook, 1 Sandf. (N. Y.) 77.

A note executed by one partner may be averred to have been made by the firm. Porter v. Cumings, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 172.

Ambiguity.— A complaint which in the caption describes defendants as two persons doing business as a firm, but in the body of the complaint alleges a cause of action against "above named defendant" without designating which of the defendants is a firm, or which of them executed the note in suit, is fatally ambiguous. Hawley Bros. Hardware Co. v. Brownstone, 123 Cal. 643, 56 Pac. 468.

Authority of officer.— A petition on notes executed in the name of a corporation, by one signing himself as "business manager," an officer unknown to the law, which states that the notes "were made, executed and delivered by the corporation," sufficiently alleged the authority of the signer to act for the corporation. Topeka Capital Co. v. Remington Paper Co., 61 Kan. 6, 59 Pac. 1062, 57 Pac. 504.

Exhibition of note.— An averment that defendant, a corporation, executed the note sued on is supported by the exhibition of a note containing a promise of the company to pay and signed by its secretary and general manager. Wagner v. Brinckerhoff, 123 Ala. 516, 26 So. 117.

Intention.— An averment that the note in suit was executed for an indebtedness against a school township, taken in connection with the articles for which it purported to have been given, sufficiently shows that it was the intention of the parties to bind the school, and not the civil township. Moral School Tp. v. Harrison, 74 Ind. 93.

52. An averment that defendants made the note in suit is sufficient to charge them personally, although the instrument bears the impression of the seal of the corporation of which they are officers. Tama Water Power Co. v. Ramsdell, 90 Iowa 747, 52 N. W. 209, 57 N. W. 631.

A complaint alleging that the A Co., B, and C, by their joint note promised to pay, etc., and by reference making a part thereof the note in question commencing "we," etc., promise and signed: A Co., B, Pres. and C, Man. states a cause of action against B. & C. as individuals. Albany Furniture Co. v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 17 Ind. App. 531, 47 N. E. 227, 60 Am. St. Rep. 178.

A petition alleging that defendant having authority, drew a bill on behalf of a corporation and for its benefit, states no right of action against the defendant individually. Hall v. Cook, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 606, 17 S. W. 1022.

The signers of a note reading "the directors, etc., promise, etc.," to whose signature no official designation is attached, are properly declared against as individuals. McKensey v. Edwards, 88 Ky. 272, 10 S. W. 815, 21 Am. St. Rep. 339, 3 L. R. A. 397.

in a representative capacity will be sufficient to bind the estate,[53] unless the declaration shows that they signed individually, although adding words descriptive of their office.[54]

(H) Description and Identification of Maker. The signer of commercial paper may be charged by the style in which his name appears on the instrument.[55] If the party used initial letters or contractions before his surname, he may be so described, and a statement of his name in full is unnecessary,[56] but it seems that he should be identified as the same person.[57]

(I) Words Appended to Signature. Words appended to the maker's signature which constitute no part thereof may be omitted.[58]

(III) As to Payee—(A) In General. The declaration or complaint must show to whom the instrument was made payable.[59]

53. Storey v. Nichols, 22 Tex. 87.

Acknowledgment of indebtedness in name of estate.— A declaration in assumpsit alleged that defendant made his promissory note, commonly called a "duebill," by which he acknowledged himself indebted to plaintiff by the name of "the estate of Thos. Eager, deceased," plaintiff being the administrator of said estate, in the sum of, etc., and then and there delivered the same to plaintiff. It was held that the declaration was good, and that a writing agreeing with that described in the declaration was admissible evidence for plaintiff. McKinney v. Harter, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 385, 43 Am. Dec. 96.

Note made by intestate.— A declaration in one of the short forms authorized by the code against the administrator of a person named did not expressly state that he was sued as administrator, but alleged that he was indebted to plaintiff on a promissory note, a copy of which was annexed, and the copy annexed was that of a joint note signed by decedent and another. It was held that such a declaration upon its face, in the absence of anything to show that the latter was still alive, sets forth a cause of action at law against defendant, as administrator of decedent. Jennings v. Wright, 54 Ga. 537.

54. Descriptio personæ.— An action is against a defendant individually, although he is described in the note and writ "as trustee," etc., the latter words being merely descriptio personæ. Blackstone Nat. Bank v. Lane, 80 Me. 165, 13 Atl. 683. To same effect see Rupert v. Madden, 1 Chandl. (Wis.) 146.

Individual liability.— One who signs a draft as executor is liable personally; and if he be sued as executor, but there be a prayer for general relief, judgment will be given against him individually, if on the trial his liability as such be established. Russell v. Cash, 2 La. 185.

Claim against deceased maker.— In Bowman v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 25 Ind. App. 38, 56 N. E. 39, the overruling of a demurrer interposed by an administrator to a complaint in an action on a note initiated by a claim against his intestate, as maker, was held not to constitute reversible error, since the administrator was a party by operation of law.

57. Where the note signed by the makers by their initials is set out as a part of the complaint, an allegation that defendants, giving their full names, made it, is a sufficient identification. Humboldt Sav., etc., Soc. v. Burnham, 11 Cal. 343, 43 Pac. 971.

Alias.— The description of a defendant, as "J. M. Duncan, alias James M. Duncan," is sufficient. Duncan v. McAffee, 3 Ill. 559.

Statutory form.— A complaint is good which is in the prescribed form and contains a copy of the note showing by whom it was executed. Jackson v. Burgert, 28 Ind. 36.

58. Where a note was executed by one partner in the name of a firm, which was then in dissolution, and described in the note as in liquidation, it is sufficient in a declaration by an indorsee against the indorser to describe the note as made by the firm. Riggs v. Andrews, 8 Ala. 628; Fairchild v. Grand Gulf Bank, 6 Miss. 597.

59. California.— Hook v. White, 36 Cal. 299, where it is said that an allegation "that said defendant executed to this plaintiff a promissory note" is equivalent to an allegation "that defendant made his note payable to plaintiff."

Connecticut.— Sherman v. Glabe, 4 Conn. 246, holding that an averment that defendant promised plaintiff to pay "to his order," etc., describes a note payable to plaintiff.

Indiana.—Timmons v. Wiggins, 78 Ind. 297, holding that an averment of a promise to pay plaintiff's attorney fee does not show plaintiff to be the payee.

Kentucky.—Cooper v. Poston, 1 Duv. (Ky.) 92, 85 Am. Dec. 610.

(B) Words of Description. A note in which the payee is referred to by description may be declared on in his individual name, or where the words of description are set out in plaintiff's pleading they may be rejected as surplusage.[60]

(C) Designation by Description in Instrument. It is sufficient to allege the execution of the instrument sued on to the payee or payees thereof as he or they are therein designated or described, and in the case of a firm, without an averment of their firm-name or style.[61]

(D) Misdescription in Instrument. So where the person intended is improperly described, the real party may be designated as payee,[62] or he may declare

Where a copy of the note is set out, an allegation that the promise was made to the payees by the style, etc., is unnecessary. Jackson v. Burgert, 28 Ind. 36.

Necessity of identification.— Under a statute allowing a note to be filed as the state of demand, in an action by partners, it is not sufficient to file a note payable to A & Co., without a suggestion on the record that the promise was made to plaintiffs by the name of A & Co. Hughes v. Walker, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 50. Where a declaration avers that a note is made payable to plaintiffs by the name and style of C and B, such note may be read in evidence, although plaintiffs declare in the name of E C and J B, without alleging that they were partners, or that the note was made payable in any joint character. A corporation in an action on a note payable to its treasurer need not allege that the note was made payable to the corporation in the name of its treasurer. Rutland, etc., R. Co. v. Cole, 24 Vt. 33.

Delivery to person other than payee named. — An allegation that the note in suit was executed for the purpose of delivery to the payee named therein, and that, on his refusal to accept, it was delivered to plaintiff for a

upon the instrument in his proper name and prove that he was the person intended,[63] and his assignee may make the like averment and proof.[64]

(iv) As to Place of Making. Except where so required by statute it is unnecessary to allege the place of making of a bill or note, unless it was made in a foreign state or country, and it is sought to recover interest or damages different from that allowed by the law of the forum,[65] and unless it is stated that the instrument was drawn or made without the state, it will be regarded as a domestic bill or note.[66] It will be presumed that the instrument was made where it bears date.[67] If, however, it is material to allege the place of making it should be set forth with substantial accuracy.[68]

(v) As to Time of Making. The date of the instrument is a material part thereof and should be averred,[69] although where the instrument is set out prima facie it will be taken to have been made at the time it bears date[70] or purports to have been drawn.[71] So an allegation that a note was made on a certain day is tantamount to alleging that it was dated on that day.[72] And there are decisions to the effect that the omission of the date or a misdescription thereof will not necessarily vitiate the pleading.[73]

(VI) As to Place of Payment. If a note or bill is made payable at a particular place the place of payment must be averred.[74] It will be sufficient, however, if the place is described with substantial accuracy,[75] but if the note is set out the place of payment therein stated is sufficiently averred[76] and in the absence of an express averment the place of payment will be presumed to be the same as the place of making.[77]

(VII) As to Time of Payment—(A) Time Fixed by Instrument. Where the instrument by its terms fixes the time of payment the declaration should appropriately allege that time;[78] and unless it appears that the instrument is due the declaration is bad, because failing to show an accrued cause of action.[79]

(B) Time Not Fixed by Instrument. If no time of payment is specified in the instrument, it may be described in the complaint, declaration, or petition as payable on demand.[80]

Election by holder.— Where the only thing necessary to the maturity of a note is the holder's election that it should mature, an averment that he has demanded payment is, unless specially excepted to, a sufficient averment of notice that he has made the election and that the debt is due. Graham v. Miller, (Tex. 1894) 24 S. W. 1107. An averment of a failure to pay an instalment of interest when it became due by the terms of the note, and that plaintiff elected to declare and did declare the principal sum and the interest thereon due and payable, sufficiently avers an election at the time the interest became due. Fletcher v. Dennison, 101 Cal. 292, 35 Pac. 868.

whole that the instrument actually matured before suit brought, the absence of a positive averment is immaterial.[81]

(D) Failure to Allege Time — (1) PRESUMPTION. If the time of the maturity of the note is not stated it will be presumed to be due presently or on demand.[82]

(2) SUPPLY OF OMISSION — (a) BY COPY OF INSTRUMENT. The omission of an express averment of the time of payment is supplied by the note itself when it is made a part of plaintiff's pleading or is filed with it as required by statute.[83]

(b) BY RECORD. Although there is no direct averment of the time of payment, if the record shows that the action was instituted after the note matured, that fact will be deemed sufficient.[84]

(E) Days of Grace. It is enough to state that the note was payable as drawn without referring to days of grace.[85]

(F) Extension of Time. An agreement extending the time of payment need not be noticed — such an agreement being matter of defense.[86]

Illustrations.— A complaint alleging that, on a certain day and at a certain place, defendant, by his note, for value received, promised to pay to plaintiff or bearer a specified sum, and that he had not paid it, but is indebted to plaintiff, is sufficient, although it does not allege whether the same is due or not. Peets v. Bratt, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 662. Where in declaring on a note, dated April 17, 1857, the note was described in its terms as "payable six months after the date thereof, 'to wit, on the 17th day of October, 1857,'" it was held that an allegation of the day on which it fell due was mere surplusage and if incorrect would not vitiate the pleading. Archer v. Claflin, 31 Ill. 306. A petition alleging the date of the note, and that it bore interest from date, and further that defendant, although often requested, had never paid said note, or any part thereof except thirty-five dollars heretofore mentioned, but the same remains still due and unpaid, sufficiently alleges that the debt is due, as against a general demurrer. Pennington v. Schwartz, 70 Tex. 211, 8 S. W. 32.

"Due."— In a statutory proceeding on an indebtedness evidenced by an unmatured note, which was described as "due," but which from other parts of the petition appeared not yet to have matured, it was held on demurrer that the word "due" must be construed to mean as it does in the saying, "Debitum in præsenti solvendum in futuro," and the demurrer was overruled. Kritzer v. Smith, 21 Mo. 296.

According to tenor of bill.— An obligation to pay on a day certain is properly described, in a declaration, as an obligation to pay on request, "according to the tenor and effect of the said bill." McMahan v. Murphy, 1 Bailey (S. C.) 535.

Clerical omission.— A declaration on a note payable in three months from date is not bad because averring the time of maturity to be "three from date," where it is thereafter averred that "the said three months from the date of said note have long since elapsed." Contingency.—Where the note in suit stipulated that on failure to pay any of the attached interest coupons the entire amount should become immediately due, but the copy set out in the complaint, the correctness of which was not questioned, did not contain such provision it was held that equitable defenses were not available against a purchaser before the date of final maturity but after an interest coupon had become delinquent. Beach v. Bennett, 66 Pac. 567.

84. Where the record shows the commencement of the action after the maturity of the note on which a recovery is sought, the complaint will possibly be sufficient, although default is not specifically alleged. Cummings v. Citizens' Bldg., etc., Assoc., 142 Ind. 600, 42 N. E. 213.

(VIII) As to Promise — (A) Necessary Allegations — (1) In General. With certain exceptions, as where a promise to pay arises from the character of the instrument and the relation thereto, of the party sought to be charged,[87] or the rule of the common law has been abrogated, such a promise must be expressly averred.[88]

(2) Action by Bearer. The holder of a note payable to bearer need not allege a promise to himself.[89]

(3) Action by Assignee. The assignee of a note, when suing the maker, need not allege a promise by the latter to pay him.[90]

(B) Sufficiency of Allegations — (1) In General. It is sufficient to allege a bare promise and to leave the mode of it to the proof,[91] and the absence of a specific averment of a promise to pay will not invalidate the pleading, if taken as a whole it fairly appears that a promise was in fact made or such a promise can be implied as a matter of law.[92]

(2) Exhibition of Instrument. In many jurisdictions the exhibition of the bill or note, by incorporation in the complaint or otherwise, is a sufficient averment of the promise without a distinct substantive allegation.[93] show that the date of maturity had been changed to the time of such proposition.

An averment that "there is now due" a certain sum on the note sued on is sufficient, although the note contains a stipulation that it shall be extended if certain taxes are not collected by a specified date, without averring that such taxes have been collected. Revolving Scraper Co. v. Tuttle, 61 Iowa 423, 16 N. W. 353, 47 Am. Rep. 816.

87. Thus it had been held that an express promise need not be laid in a declaration against the drawer (Starke v. Cheesman, Carth. 509, 1 Ld. Raym. 538, 1 Salk. 128) or accepter (Wegerseoffe v. Keene, Str. 214) of a bill of exchange, in an action by an indorsee against successive indorsers (Aitkin v. Leonard, 11 U. C. Q. Averment of execution.— An averment of a promise to pay which is only inferentially involved in a statement that defendant "executed a note" is bad pleading, and insufficient on special exception, although good on general demurrer. Graves v. Drane, 66 Tex. 658, 1 S. W. 905.

(IX) As to Consideration—(A) General Rule. At common law prior to the passage of the statute of Anne an action of debt could not be maintained on a promissory note as such, but the payee was required to declare on the contract and state the real consideration;[94] but one of the effects of that statute[95] was to permit an action on a promissory note without alleging a consideration.[96] Hence where the instrument is negotiable, itself imports a consideration, or its nature is such that a consideration will be implied, unless otherwise provided by statute, a consideration therefor need not be alleged.[97] Under similar circumstances it is unnecessary for the transaction out of which the consideration arose to be detailed in the plaintiff's pleading.[98]

(B) Exceptions to Rule. Where from the nature of the action[99] or the particular circumstances it is necessary that it should appear that the instrument was given for a consideration that fact must be duly alleged to entitle plaintiff to recover.[1] Hence a consideration for the execution of the instrument must be alleged as to a stranger who is sought to be held as a surety or the like.[2]

(C) Non-Negotiable Instruments. In an action on an instrument not within the law merchant or negotiable by statute a consideration must be averred, either expressly or by showing an acknowledgment of a consideration on the face of the instrument.[3]

Lost note.— A statute permitting profert of the note instead of an averment of the consideration is not applicable to a lost note, as to which the consideration must be averred. Stephens v. Crostwait, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 222.

Married woman's note.— A declaration on a note which does not disclose defendant's coverture, which is first set up by defendant's plea or answer, is not defective as stating no cause of action, on the ground that it does not show that the note sued on was founded on such consideration as would make defendant liable. Grubbs v. Collins, 54 Miss. 485.

Unauthorized note.— A note, which, as appears from the complaint, was made without authority, does not import any consideration. Brown v. Rouse, 93 Cal. 237, 28 Pac. 1044.

Forbearance.— Where a petition on a written promise to pay money alleges forbearance as the consideration thereof, it should state the time of the forbearance actually given. An allegation that the creditor gave his debtor further time and did forbear to enforce payment is insufficient. Glasscock v. Glasscock, 66 Mo. 627.

In declaring on a bank-note, if defendant's promise is alleged to have been made to bearer, and plaintiff is alleged to be the holder for a valuable consideration, the consideration is sufficiently set forth. Gilbert v. Nantucket Bank, 5 Mass. 97.

In Texas, consideration for the acceptance of an order must be alleged. Summers v. Sanders, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 28 S. W. 1038.

A contemporaneous agreement which constitutes the consideration need not be set out. Perry v. Rice, 10 Tex. 367.

99. In assumpsit on a note not under seal, a consideration must be averred in the declaration. Hart v. Coram, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 26.

1. Rossiter v. Marsh, 4 Conn. 196. See also Hemmenway v. Hickes, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 497, where it is questioned whether a complaint on a promissory note should aver a consideration.

Where a note is silent as to the consideration in an action between the original parties a consideration must be averred and proved. Bourne v. Ward, 51 Me. 191.

Judgment by confession.— Where the design of a statute authorizing judgments by confession is to prevent fraud, a confession which purports to describe the note confessed must set out its consideration. Plummer v. Plummer, 7 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 62.

Acceptance.— A petition in an action on a draft drawn by and payable to plaintiff must allege a consideration for its acceptance. Robertson v. Phillips, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 447, where it is intimated that such an allegation would be unnecessary if the draft had gone into the hands of a third party.

The actual consideration alleged can alone be recovered. Brown v. Rouse, 93 Cal. 237, 28 Pac. 1044.

2. Stone v. White, 8 Gray (Mass.) 589.

Indorser after maturity.— In an action on a note, on the back of which defendant placed his name after it was due, for a new consideration, the declaration must state the whole consideration; and if this consist of several things, and especially of something to be done by plaintiff, plaintiff cannot recover without alleging and proving all of them, unless it be such as are frivolous and void. Garrett v. Butler, 2 Strobh. (S. C.) 193.

Indorser to give credit.— An averment that defendant put his name on the back of a note with intent to give it a credit, and to induce plaintiff to accept the same, and that the note so indorsed was delivered to plaintiff for a full and valuable consideration, is a sufficient averment of a consideration for the promise. Offutt v. Hall, 1 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 572, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,450.

(D) Sealed Notes. If it is alleged that the instrument is sealed no further allegation of consideration is necessary.[4]

(E) Sufficiency — Value Received. It will be sufficient to set forth the instrument in terms or according to its legal effect and allege that it was given for value received,[5] or where it purports to be for value received to set it forth in full or exhibit it without a specific averment.[6]

(F) Consideration of Guaranty. Although it is held that there must be a distinct averment of a consideration for a guaranty by indorsement,[7] the rule seems to be that if the guaranty is a part of the original transaction no new consideration is necessary to be averred in support of it;[8] but otherwise where the guaranty is subsequently made by a third party.[9]

(G) Aider of Defects. The omission to state, or a defective statement of, the consideration may be aided by the subsequent pleadings, as by the answer,[10] or by production of the note, as where it is spread upon the record after oyer craved.[11]

In an action on a joint note by husband and wife, a judgment by default will be set aside where the declaration contains no averment of separate benefit or that the note was given for necessaries. Covington v. Burleson, 28 Tex. 368; Trimble v. Miller, 24 Tex. 214. And see Bullock v. Hayter, 24 Tex. 9.

Note payable to maker.— The holder of a note payable to the order of the maker, and indorsed by him, cannot recover thereon without averring a previous independent indebtedness, and that the note was executed to bind the maker for such indebtedness, it not, of itself, creating any. Muhling v. Sattler, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 285, 77 Am. Dec. 172.

4. Crenshaw v. Bullitt, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 41; Angier v. Howard, 94 N. C. 27.

Unnecessary allegation of "value received." — Where, in counting on a note under seal, plaintiff, without setting out the note in hæc verba, inserted the words "Value received," which were not in the note, it was held that the words were not descriptive of the note, but merely an unnecessary allegation, and therefore did not vitiate the declaration. James v. Scott, 7 Port. (Ala.) 30; Crenshaw v. Bullitt, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 41.

In Missouri the employment in the note of the words operative under the statute to make the note negotiable must appear in the petition. Hart v. Harrison Wire Co., 91 Mo. 414, 4 S. W. 123, where the vice was that the petition contained no allegation that the note was "expressed to be for value received."

It is a sufficient setting forth of a note, if, although the note described be not expressed for a consideration, a consideration be alleged in the declaration. Leonard v. Walker, Brayt. (Vt.) 203.

Judgment will not be arrested where no consideration is specially alleged, if the instrument declared on shows a valuable consideration. Kemble v. Lull, 3 McLean (U. S.) 272, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,683.

Variance.— In declaring on a note, the words "for value received" are regarded as descriptive, and not as an averment only, and a note not containing those words will not support the declaration. Saxton v. Johnson, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 418.

Where a copy of the note filed with the complaint showed that it was given "for value received," the omission of the complaint to allege that it was so given is immaterial. Petree v. Fielder, 3 Ind. App. 127, 29 N. E. 271.

9. Joslyn v. Collinson, 26 Ill. 61.

If the guaranty is by the payee it is immaterial that it was made after the execution of the note. Judson v. Gookwin, 37 Ill. 286.

10. A complaint which counts on promises by defendant "under his bond" is aided by an answer which describes the promises as "promissory notes," and which consequently renders an allegation in the complaint of consideration unnecessary. Salazar v. Taylor, 18 Colo. 538, 33 Pac. 369.

11. An omission to aver a consideration is cured by the defendant's craving oyer, thus spreading on the record the writing which purports a consideration. Edwards v. Wiester, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 382.

So too it has been held that an objection to a defect in this respect comes too late after judgment.[12]

(x) As to Transfer, Indorsement, and Ownership — (A) Transfer in General — (1) Identification of Parties to Transfer. Plaintiff must be identified as the person to whom the note was transferred[13] by a holder or indorsee having the legal title to the instrument;[14] but language substantially showing a transfer by indorsement, assignment, or delivery will be sufficient.[15] Words added to an indorser's name which do not restrict or qualify the transfer of the instrument need not be noticed.[16]

(2) Allegations as to Negotiability — (a) In General. To charge an indorser, the declaration must state facts which in law are necessary to make the instrument negotiable.[17]

12. An allegation that a note was executed and delivered "for value received" is sufficient against an objection made after judgment. Campbell v. Worman, 58 Minn. 561, 60 N. W. 668.

Duly delivered.— An allegation that an unmatured note was duly delivered to, and came into the possession of, plaintiff, without averring by whom it was delivered, or for what purpose, or that it was indorsed, is insufficient. Parker v. Totten, 10 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 233.

Indorsement to particular person.— An allegation that the holder by a prior indorsement "endorsed the note, by writing his name across the back thereof, . . . to the plaintiff," is an averment of an indorsement to a particular person and not of a mere blank indorsement. Toles v. Montague, 53 Ill. 384.

Variance with note filed.— A demurrer will not be sustained on the ground that there is no averment that plaintiff is the same person to whom the note purports to be assigned, as the note, although filed, constitutes no part of the petition, and cannot be referred to on demurrer. Baker v. Berry, 37 Mo. 306.

14. Mechanics' Bank v. Donnell, 35 Mo. 373.

Sufficiency of allegation.— An allegation that the note sued on was assigned, transferred, delivered, and indorsed to plaintiff is a sufficient allegation that it was transferred to plaintiff by the owner. Oishei v. Craven, 11 Misc. (N. Y.) 139, 31 N. Y. Suppl. 1021, 65 N. Y. St. 114, 24 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 301. An allegation that, in writing, and prior to the commencement of the action, the note sued on was duly assigned and transferred to plaintiff, is a sufficient allegation that it was assigned and transferred by the payee named therein. Topping v. Clay, 65 Minn. 346, 68 N. W. 34.

An allegation that a bill was duly indorsed to plaintiff includes within itself an averment that it was indorsed by the payee. Snelgrove v. Mobile Branch Bank, 5 Ala. 295.

Delivery of an indorsed note by an agent is properly averred to be the act of the principal. Metropolitan Bank v. Engel, 66 N. Y. App. Div. 273, 72 N. Y. Suppl. 691.

Owner or holder.— An averment that at the time of transfer the transferrer was the owner or holder of the instrument is not a legal conclusion and is sufficient. Stoutenburg v. Lybrand, 13 Ohio St. 228.

Aider by verdict.— The omission of the name of plaintiff's immediate indorser is cured by verdict. Strader v. Alexander, 9 Port. (Ala.) 441.

Capacity of indorsee.— In an action by a bank on a note indorsed to the maker to negotiate, plaintiff must disclose the capacity in which the indorsee acted in negotiating the instrument in question. Walker v. Ocean Bank, 19 Md. 247.

15. An allegation of possession and ownership is sufficient. Lyddam v. Owensboro Banking Co., 106 Ky. 706, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 320, 51 S. W. 453.

Indorsement to bank.—An allegation of indorsement to the cashier of plaintiff, a bank, sufficiently alleges an indorsement to it. Pratt v. Topeka Bank, 12 Kan. 570.

Joint and several guaranty.— Under Ill. Rev. Stat. (1893), c. 76, § 3, providing that "all joint obligations and covenants shall be taken and held to be joint and several obligations and covenants," an averment in an action against one of two guarantors that defendants "then and there guaranteed" is no variance. Kaestner v. Chicago First Nat. Bank, 170 Ill. 322, 48 N. E. 998.

Transfer to firm.—An allegation that plaintiffs were copartners in trade doing business under the name of S. C. Howard and that the note in suit was transferred to said S. C. Howard, shows a transfer to the firm. Howard v. Boorman, 17 Wis. 459.

16. McDonald v. Bailey, 14 Me. 101, where the name of the indorser was immediately preceded by the words "eventually accountable."

Conclusion of law.— An allegation that the note in suit was negotiable is a mere conclusion of law. Jaccard v. Anderson, 32 Mo. 188.

(b) To Whom Instrument Payable — aa. To Order. At common law an indorser in declaring against the maker of a note was required to aver that the instrument was payable to order;[18] but where the common-law rule has been changed, so that it is not essential to the valid transfer of a note that it should be so payable the omission of such an averment is immaterial.[19]

bb. To Bearer. A declaration on a note payable to a designated person "or bearer" is not vitiated by the omission of the words "or bearer."[20]

cc. To Fictitious Person. The bona fide holder of a bill drawn payable to a fictitious payee or order may charge the drawer as the drawer of a bill payable to bearer or may recover on a count stating the special circumstances of the case.[21]

(3) Foreign Laws. If the rights of plaintiff are in anywise dependent on the laws of a foreign state where the instrument in suit was transferred, such laws so far as applicable must be averred[22] as a fact;[23] otherwise it will be presumed that the common law there prevails.[24]

(B) Assignment — (1) Necessary Allegations — (a) Mode of Assignment. The declaration should show whether the instrument on which the action is based was assigned in writing or transferred by delivery,[25] where the mode of assignment affects the question of making the assignor a party;[26] but unless the form of the action is affected a mere averment of assignment will be sufficient,[27] without stating it to be under the hand of the assignor,[28] and will authorize a pre-

Assigned note.— Where a note is assignable by statute without words of negotiability, in declaring on a note containing such words as "order" or "bearer" they need not be alleged, as they do not change the legal effect of the note. Sappington v. Pulliam, 4 Ill. 385.

Forged note.— A note originally genuine but on which the payee's indorsement is forged is properly described as a "negotiable promissory note." Beal v. Roberts, 113 Mass. 525.

Custom.— Where a note is claimed to be negotiable by force of an existing custom such custom should be averred and proved. Rindskoff v. Barrett, 11 Iowa 172.

Illustrations.— A statement of claim based on an indorsement which is invalid in Pennsylvania is insufficient to support a recovery on the ground that the indorsement was made and delivered in New Jersey, in the absence of an allegation to that effect, and an allegation of the laws of New Jersey relative to such indorsements. Cooke v. Addicks, 5 Pa. Dist. 387. An averment that, by the law of the place of the contract, plaintiff alone could sue, is not sufficient. It will be presumed that a statute is referred to, which should have been set out. Wilson v. Clark, 11 Ind. 385. Where a note made without but payable within the state was assigned on the day of its date it will be inferred on demurrer that the note was assigned in the foreign state and the assignee may sue thereon, although he could not if the assignment was made within the state. Freeman's Bank v. Ruckman, 16 Gratt. (Va.) 126.

23. In an action against an indorser, an averment in the declaration, "that, by the laws of the state of Georgia, where said endorsement was made, the said Daniel McDougald became liable to pay said sum of money, in said note specified, to said plaintiff," is but the statement of a conclusion as to the effect of the foreign law, and the rights and liabilities of the parties under that law, and is therefore demurrable. McDougald v. Rutherford, 30 Ala. 253.

24. Mendenhall v. Gately, 18 Ind. 149.

25. An allegation that the note was "assigned over and delivered," imports an assignment by delivery. Edison v. Frazier, 9 Ark. 219.

An allegation of assignment after maturity will authorize a presumption of an assignment in writing. Boynton v. Renwick, 46 Ill. 280.

In New York the purchaser of a note who takes by delivery need not aver an indorsement by the payee. Billings v. Jane, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 620.

sumption that the assignment was a separate instrument.[29] If, however, the assignment is required to be indorsed on the instrument an assignment in that mode must be averred,[30] but an allegation of indorsement or assignment by the payee is equivalent to an allegation of assignment by indorsement.[31]

(b) CONSIDERATION. Unless made necessary by statute, the consideration for the assignment of commercial paper, or that it was for value received, need not be alleged.[32] Such an allegation is necessary, however, where the assignee of a note seeks to recover of his assignor on the default of the maker.[33]

(2) SUFFICIENCY OF ALLEGATIONS. Assignment of the instrument in suit is sufficiently shown by averments of a transfer in that mode.[34]

(3) SETTING OUT, ATTACHING, OR FILING ASSIGNMENT. There must be a conformity with statutory provisions requiring plaintiff to set out,[35] attach,[36] or file the assignment[37] through which he claims.

(4) NON-NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS. In an action on non-negotiable paper by a person other than the payee, plaintiff must allege title by way of assignment,[38] although an allegation of indorsement and delivery[39] or that plaintiff is the owner

(c) Indorsement — (1) By Agent. Indorsement or transfer by an agent may be charged as the act of his principal, or to have been made at the instance of the latter,[41] without an allegation of the agent's authority.[42]

(2) By Copartnership. In averring an indorsement by a copartnership the individual members of the firm need not be designated;[43] but where one of several payees transfers, the transferee must allege a partnership or that the transferrer had authority from the other members of the firm.[44]

(3) Consideration For. While on the one hand it is held to be necessary in an action against an indorser to aver an inducement or consideration for the indorsement,[45] it is also held that as an indorsement imports a consideration none need be averred.[46]

'Pay to [plaintiff],' "— and alleges that the whole amount was due from defendant to plaintiff, is sufficient as against a motion to vacate a judgment entered on default. Alexander v. McDow, 108 Cal. 25, 41 Pac. 24.

Charging separate estate of married woman. —An allegation that defendant, a married woman, had a separate estate and that by indorsing she intended to and did charge her separate estate with payment of the note so indorsed, and that the consideration thereof went for the benefit of her separate estate is sufficient. Gfroehner v. McCarty, 2 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 76.

Credit to third persons.— A complaint is sufficient on demurrer, where it alleges that the indorsement was to procure credit for a third person, and to induce plaintiffs to extend the payment of a claim then due from defendant on the credit of such indorsement. Smith v. Storm, 6 Misc. (N. Y.) 627, 27 N. Y. Suppl. 143, 58 N. Y. St. 573.

Liability of payee.— A declaration in the common form, alleging that defendant became liable, and in consideration thereof promised plaintiff to pay him the note, is sufficient to show that defendant indorsed the note for value. Bartlett v. Leathers, 84 Me. 241, 24 Atl. 842.

Loan of money.— An allegation, in a declaration in assumpsit against an indorser in blank of a note, that the indorser, in consideration that plaintiff then lent and advanced the money to the makers, indorsed the note, is a sufficient averment that the loan was made, the note executed and the indorsement made at the same time, which implies without further specific averment that the money was loaned at the request of defendant. (4) Conditional Indorsement. A conditional indorsement must be specially declared on.[47]

(5) Time of Indorsement. The time of indorsement need not be alleged.[48] Nor is it necessary to aver that the instrument was negotiated or transferred before maturity.[49]

(6) Indorsement in Blank. Averments of indorsement in blank and possession or ownership of the instrument declared on sufficiently show a transfer of title by indorsement;[50] but a declaration merely alleging an indorsement in blank, without averring an actual transfer[51] or delivery to plaintiff,[52] or otherwise showing his title[53] or interest,[54] is not sufficient. It seems too that plaintiff may declare on a note so indorsed, as indorsed to himself,[55] without filling the blank.[56]

(7) Irregular or Anomalous Indorsement. One whose name irregularly appears on a promissory note, or who placed it thereon before delivery for the purpose of giving it credit, must be charged according to the actual intention by special averments showing the facts relied on to fix his liability[57] as

Necessary averments.— A complaint alleging indorsement before delivery must also allege that the indorsement was to give the maker credit or that defendant indorsed as maker,[58] indorser,[59] guarantor,[60] or surety.[61] To overcome a presumption that defendant intended his liability to be that of a second indorser, the payee must show that defendant indorsed to give credit to the note with him and intended to charge himself as joint maker, guarantor, or surety, and that he parted with value on the faith of such indorsement.[62] It is held, however, that if a liability on defendant's surety. McMoran v. Lange, 25 N. Y. App. Div. 11, 48 N. Y. Suppl. 1000.

Where defendant is privy to the consideration, and indorses a note non-negotiable or payable to order, or to plaintiff or bearer, and not negotiated, defendant may be charged directly as maker or as indorser. A declaration against a maker and guarantor, which treats defendants as joint makers and contains no allegation of demand and notice, is insufficient. Lightstone v. Laurencel, 4 Cal. 277.

An averment that defendant indorsed before delivery to induce the payee to take it is sufficient to hold him as maker. Marienthal v. Taylor, 2 Minn. 147.

Dismissal as to one signer.— In an action on a joint and several note against two who executed it at the same time, one by signing it and the other by writing his name on the back, it is error to dismiss the petition as to the latter on the ground that he was surety and could not be held after a discontinuance as to the signer. Brooks v. Thrasher, 116 Ga. 62, 42 S. E. 473.

If defendant is charged as guarantor he cannot be held as principal debtor. Powell v. Alford, 113 Ga. 979, 39 S. E. 449.

Ignoring suretyship.— It is proper to declare on a joint and several note signed by defendant as surety for an individual or a copartnership, as the note of defendant, in a several action against him, without setting out the joint contract also, and without taking notice of the suretyship or copartnership between the principals. Biddeford First Nat. Bank v. McKenney, 67 Me. 272.

Signers on the back of a sealed note may be charged as makers. Watson v. Barr, 37 S. C. 463, 16 S. E. 188.

59. An allegation of indorsement in blank at and before delivery, whereby defendants "intended to be equally bound as obligors," is insufficient, accommodation indorsement not being alleged. Kellogg v. Dunn, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 215.

In Wisconsin it is said that a third person signing his name on the back of a note is not liable to the payee as an indorser is not so well settled as to render a complaint showing such facts frivolous on demurrer. Cahoon v. Wisconsin Cent. R. Co., 10 Wis. 290.

60. A purpose to guaranty (Kellogg v. Dunn, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 215) in writing (Powers v. Alford, 113 Ga. 979, 39 S. E. 449) must be alleged.

A conclusion of guaranty without stating facts is insufficient. Twogood v. Coopers, 9 Iowa 415.

Statute of frauds.— A complaint alleging that a defendant signed under a parol contract of guaranty is not demurrable because failing to show a cause of action under the statute of frauds, for the reason that without the averment of guaranty there would still be a cause of action against defendant as maker. Smucker v. Wright, 2 Ohio Cir. Dec. 360.

Sufficiency.— A complaint alleging execution and delivery to defendant who indorsed it, and for value received, delivered it to plaintiff, who accepted it on the faith of said indorsement, sufficiently shows that defendant indorsed as surety. Smith v. Smith, 37 N. Y. Super. Ct. 203.

Sufficiency.— An allegation that after the making of the note it was indorsed by defendant and thereupon transferred for value to defendant is insufficient to admit proof to rebut the presumption that the payee was the first indorser. Draper v. Chase Mfg. Co., 2 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 79.

An allegation of indorsement before delivery is insufficient to overcome the legal presumption of an intention to become an in-part is sufficiently averred, it is immaterial in what capacity the liability originated.[63]

(8) Sufficiency of Allegations — (a) In General. The fact of indorsement and the valid transfer of title by the indorser to his indorsee is sufficiently shown by the allegation of facts from which these conclusions can fairly be deduced.[64]

(b) Setting Out, Annexing, or Filing. In some jurisdictions it is sufficient to set out or file a copy of the instrument, bearing the indorsement or indorsements through which plaintiff claims,[65] and where the setting out, annexation, or filing of such a copy is necessary to its sufficiency, the indorsement must so appear and show title in plaintiff,[66] or to set out the note and allege indorse-dorser subsequent to the payee. Edison General Electric Co. v. Zebley, 72 Hun (N. Y.) 166, 25 N. Y. Suppl. 389, 55 N. Y. St. 62.

In Iowa since the passage of the code which requires a copy of the instrument sued on to be attached to the pleadings, the indorsement on which plaintiff bases his right of recovery should be so annexed. Mainer v. Reynolds, 4 Greene (Iowa) 187.

In Michigan where, by statute, a note may be given in evidence only where a copy has been served with the declaration, if the copies set out in the declaration fail to show title in plaintiff, he cannot recover, although the indorsements on the original did show title. Hamilton v. Powers, 80 Mich. 313, 45

ment,[67] although in some states if the assignment or indorsement is distinctly averred, a copy of it need not be set out or filed.[68] It is held that a distinct and positive allegation of indorsement is necessary, although it appear on the copy filed.[69]

(9) Delivery to Indorsee. An allegation of indorsement imports delivery; hence where such an averment is made a delivery by the indorser to the indorsee is implied.[70]

(D) Title or Ownership — (1) Necessary Allegations — (a) In General. Plaintiff must show title to the bill or note in suit, or privity between himself and defendant, or that as the holder thereof he has the legal right to maintain the action and recover thereon, by averments which if proved will establish that right to the exclusion of the idea of ownership in another.[71] Failure of the com-

N. W. 580. Where one brought suit individually on a note, and the copy of the note appended to the declaration under the common counts was payable to plaintiff "& Co.," and no indorsement was set forth in the copy, such declaration was equivalent to an assertion that he was in a position to sue on it without indorsement, and that on default such title was admitted, unless evidently impossible. Wilcox v. Sweet, 24 Mich. 355.

In Ohio, the omission to set out a copy of the indorsement relied on is equivalent to an omission to plead the indorsement; and plaintiff is not entitled, under the petition, to the protection given an indorsee for value, and before maturity, although the payee's name appears indorsed on the note introduced in evidence. On behalf of foreign bank.— An averment in a complaint on a bill of exchange that plaintiff is duly authorized to bring an action on behalf of a foreign banking company, owning the bill, as one of its registered officers, is a conclusion of law, and insufficient. He should set forth the existence and terms of the act under which the bank was organized, and his authority as one of its registered officers to sue on its behalf. Myers v. Machado, 6 Duer (N. Y.) 678, 6 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 198, 14 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 149.

There is no right to sue on a bill of exchange, where it appears that the bill was held for collection as a matter of favor to one of defendants, who never instructed the bringing of the suit. Kampmann v. Williams, 70 Tex. 568, 8 S. W. 310.

The right to maintain the action is shown by an exhibition of the note indorsed by the holder and an allegation that it is held as collateral, the real owner being made a co-plaintiff. Palmer v. Mt. Sterling Nat. Bank, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 790, 18 S. W. 234.

Want of privity.— In an action on a note indorsed to the treasurer of an academy, a declaration failing to show any privity between such treasurer and plaintiff, and containing no averment that plaintiff was the successor of such treasurer, or that the contract inured to such successor, is insufficient. Jenness v. Barron, 95 Me. 531, 50 Atl. 712.

See 7 Cent. Dig. tit. "Bills and Notes," § 1480.

A declaration on a note payable to the treasurer of a parish, or his successor, without naming him, which alleges that at the time it was given plaintiff was the treasurer

(c) Title Through Deceased Payee or Holder. Ownership or title may be shown by allegations of acquisition from a deceased payee or holder, as his personal representative or by bequest or succession.[75]

(d) Instrument Payable to Bearer. A declaration on an instrument payable to a person named or bearer should show that plaintiff acquired it by transfer by appropriate averments to the effect that he is the bearer, owner, holder, or the like,[76] but need not allege the mode by which he acquired title or possession,[77] of the parish, and that it was payable to himself, is not demurrable, although an indorsement on the note, which is copied as a part of the declaration, appears to have been made by a successor to plaintiff in the office. Buck v. Merrick, 8 Allen (Mass.) 123.

75. King v. King, 59 N. Y. App. Div. 128, 68 N. Y. Suppl. 1089.

Descent.— A petition showing acquisition of a note by descent need not aver that plaintiff is the legal owner. Loungeway v. Hale, 73 Tex. 495, 11 S. W. 537.

Distributee.— A complaint alleging the transfer of a note to plaintiff by the executor of the payee and that plaintiff holds and owns the same as the heir of the payee, avers in substance that plaintiff acquired title to the note as a distributee, and although inartistic is sufficient. Perkins v. Merrill, 37 Minn. 40, 33 N. W. 3.

Successors to business.—An allegation that the holder of the bill sued on is dead, and that plaintiffs "are his successors in and to his business, and, as such, are the legal and bona fide holders" of the bill, is insufficient as an averment of title. Richardson v. Snider, 72 Ind. 425, 37 Am. Rep. 168.

Surviving spouse.— The fact that plaintiff in an action on notes alleges that she is the owner and holder of the notes only as the surviving wife of the payee does not render the complaint insufficient on general demurrer. Fant v. Wickes, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 394, 32 S. W. 126.

The personal representatives of a surviving partner through whom they derive title need not state the names of the members of the copartnership. Childress v. Emory, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 642, 5 L. ed. 705.

Transfer by executor.— A complaint alleging the death of the payee, probate of his will, issue of letters testamentary, and transfer to plaintiff by the executors prior to the action is sufficient. McWilliam v. Dayton, 57 N. Y. Suppl. 819.

Waiver of defect.— The omission of an administrator to plead his letters with a profert is waived by the failure to demur. Mitchell v. Woodward, 2 Marv. (Del.) 311, 43 Atl. 165.

Action by administrator on check payable to third party.— A complaint by an administrator on a check alleged to have been made for the benefit of his intestate and that plaintiff is the owner is sufficient, although the check is made payable to a bank which, although made a party, does not assert any claim. Mackey v. Craig, 144 Ind. 203, 43 N. E. 6.

Assignment by legatee.— In an action on an agreement in writing to pay money, plaintiff alleged in the first paragraph of his complaint that the payee gave the same to his wife, when executed, and that on the payee's death he devised all his property to his wife, and that the court, by order, vested the payee's property in his wife, and that she then assigned and delivered the instrument to plaintiff. In a second paragraph he alleged that the payee devised all his property to his wife; that the court, by its decree, vested all the estate in her; and that she assigned the instrument in suit to plaintiff. It was held that the complaint showed a good title in plaintiff. McWhorter v. Norris, 9 Ind. App. 490, 34 N. E. 854, 37 N. E. 21.

76. Creighton v. Gordon, Morr. (Iowa) 41; Flax, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Ballentine, 16 N. J. L. 454; Mechanics' Bank v. Straiton, 3 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 269, 3 Keyes (N. Y.) 365, 1 Transcr. App. (N. Y.) 201, 5 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 11, 36 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 190; Colbertson v. Beeson, 30 Tex. 76. An allegation that defendant, the payee and one of the makers, indorsed it "For value received, I sign the within," and delivered it to plaintiff is in effect an allegation that the note was payable to bearer. Walker v. Sims, (Kan. App. 1899) 64 Pac. 81. A complaint alleging the making of a note by one defendant payable to his own order and that the other defendant indorsed the note, and before maturity, and that it was delivered to a bank for value, and came into the hands of plaintiffs as a part of the assets of the bank, sufficiently alleges negotiation by the maker, within a statute providing that a note payable to the order of the maker or a fictitious person, if negotiated by the maker, shall be of the same validity as if payable to bearer. Odell v. Clyde, 38 N. Y. App. Div. 333, 57 N. Y. Suppl. 126.

Indorsement.— In an action against the maker and indorser on a note made payable to the payee named, or bearer, and afterward indorsed by a subsequent holder, it is sufficient to aver that the maker executed and delivered the note, and that it was afterward indorsed to plaintiff by the other defendant. Jackson v. Marshall, 6 Tex. 324.

A note specially indorsed to a person named cannot be declared on as payable to bearer. Dickson v. Cunningham, Mart. & Y. (Tenn.) 203.

or, if a transfer for value is alleged, aver by whom the transfer was made.[78] If, however, an indorsement is alleged it must be proved.[79]

(e) Bona Fides — aa. Of Plaintiff. Where it is incumbent on plaintiff to show that he is a bona fide holder, he must aver that he obtained the paper in question before maturity for value, without notice of any defense existing in favor of the maker, or state other necessary facts to negative bad faith.[80] Ignorance of any illegality affecting the instrument will be presumed, if it expressly or impliedly appears from the declaration that plaintiff obtained it before maturity and for value.[81] The holder of a note payable to a fictitious person need not allege that he is a bona fide holder.[82]

bb. Of Defendant. So where it is sought to avoid a note in the hands of a holder,[83] or to recover its amount from one who took it with notice of plaintiff's title,[84] plaintiff must allege facts sufficient to show the bad faith of defendant; but the assignee of the payee of a sealed note need not allege notice of the assignment by the maker.[85]

E. 306], holding that an averment that the payee became the owner of the note in due course of business, before maturity for a valuable consideration and in good faith are but legal conclusions and are not equivalent to an averment of a want of notice of the defenses such as is required. See also supra, XIV, D, 1, b, (x), (c), (5).

Assignment before maturity is shown by stating the date of the note, that it was payable in twelve months, and that it was then and there assigned. Silver v. Henderson, 3 McLean (U. S.) 165, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 12,854.

Preëxisting debt.—Under the Pennsylvania procedure act of 1887, a statement, in an action on a note by persons other than the payee, that said payee, by delivery, transferred the same to plaintiffs, without showing any of the facts of the transaction, does not entitle plaintiffs to a summary judgment, where the affidavit of defense avers that the note was delivered to plaintiffs "in payment and satisfaction of an old debt." Gere v. Unger, 125 Pa. St. 644, 24 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 7, 17 Atl. 511.

Unauthorized purpose.— Where a note secured by mortgage and payable to a corporation or order was transferred as collateral to a bond of the company which was payable to bearer and contained a clause transferring the note and mortgage, it was held that a complaint by the assignee which failed to show that the note was attached to the bond would not protect plaintiff as a bona fide indorsee, should it be claimed that the note was given for an unauthorized purpose. Howard v. Boorman, 17 Wis. 459 [distinguishing Crosby v. Roub, 16 Wis. 16, 84 Am. Dec. 720, where the note was attached to the bond].

Anticipation of defense.— A complaint alleging that the note in suit was transferred to plaintiff in the usual course of business, before its maturity, and that plaintiff purchased it in good faith without notice of any legal or equitable defense thereto, is not objectionable because anticipating the defenses and failing to aver sufficient facts to avoid them. Cooper v. Merchants', etc., Nat. Bank, (Ind. 1900) 57 N. E. 569.

81. Press Co. v. Hartford City Bank, 58 Fed. 321, 7 C. C. A. 248.

83. Preëxisting debt.— A petition to avoid a note in the hands of the holder, which alleges that the payee, with knowledge of its illegality, indorsed it to the holder who paid no value therefor, but credited him with it on an account, in effect avers that the note was taken in payment of a preëxisting debt. Draper v. Cowles, 27 Kan. 484.

84. Where an assignee of a note seeks to recover its amount from one who purchased it at a judicial sale of the payee's property, and who has collected it, he must allege that defendant had notice of the assignment before the purchase. Allison v. King, 21 Iowa 302 [distinguishing Allison v. Barrett, 16 Iowa 278, where the maker had notice of plaintiff's interest before payment of the note].

85. Helms v. Sisk, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 503.

on the instrument in question for the use of another is unnecessary and may be treated as surplusage.[86]

(2) SUFFICIENCY OF ALLEGATIONS — (a) IN GENERAL. The right to maintain the action as the owner, holder, or party in interest is sufficiently shown by alleging facts as to transfer from which the title of plaintiff can be deduced.[87]

(b) ALLEGATIONS OF OWNERSHIP AND POSSESSION. Although there are decisions to the effect that a direct averment by an indorsee that he is the owner and holder of the instrument sued on is the averment of a mere conclusion of law,[88] there are other holdings to the effect that such an allegation is sufficient to show a prima facie right to recover, and that the mode of acquisition may be supplied by proof.[89] If the complaint or declaration otherwise shows title in plaintiff,

Came lawfully into possession.— An averment that before maturity the bill "came lawfully into the possession of those plaintiffs for value," is a sufficient allegation of ownership. Phelps v. Ferguson, 9 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 206, 19 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 143.

Contradictory allegations.— A complaint alleging the transfer of a note to plaintiff in the usual course of business, before maturity, and for value, sufficiently alleges title, although it also contained an allegation importing only a holding for collection. Farmers, etc., Bank v. Wadsworth, 24 N. Y. 547.

Indorsement to bank.— An averment that the note in suit was indorsed to a bank is equivalent to an averment that it was discounted there, and shows title in the bank. Farmers', etc., Bank v. Small, 2 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 88.

"Owner."— An allegation in a complaint on a note that plaintiff is the "lawful holder" thereof, in connection with the words "value received," is a sufficient allegation of ownership. Benson v. Couchman, 1 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 119.

an additional allegation that he is the owner and holder is unnecessary and superfluous.[90]

(c) Setting Out, Annexing, or Filing. Where the instrument is set out substantially or in hæc verba, or is exhibited in connection with the complaint, by annexation or filing, ownership or title is sufficiently shown by referring thereto and averring that plaintiff is the owner and holder thereof,[91] or that defendant is indebted thereon to him.[92]

(3) Negativing Transfer to Another. Where plaintiff has shown title he need not aver a continuous holding and ownership or negative a transfer by himself.[93]

(4) Negativing Payment to Original Payee. While it has been held that the declaration should negative payment to the assignor or original payee before assignment[94] it has also been held that an averment of such non-payment before indorsement or assignment is unnecessary.[95]

(5) Subsequent Indorsement. Unless plaintiff claims through subsequent indorsements he need not aver them.[96]

(6) Reacquisition. A payee or indorsee of a note which has been transferred by him, and who seeks to recover thereon, must show that he has taken up or reacquired the instrument, as well as his right to maintain an action thereon.[97]

Sufficiency.— In an action by the assignee of a note against the maker, the allegation that "before payment, it was assigned to plaintiff," is a sufficient averment that it was not paid to the assignor. Gay v. Hanger, 3 Ark. 436.

95. Lowe v. Needham, 5 Ind. 140. In a declaration by an assignee on a note, where it is averred that the obligation was unpaid at the time of the assignment, and that the obligor at the time had notice of the assignment, it is not necessary to aver non-payment to the assignor. If plaintiff avers an indorsement to another, he must also allege an indorsement by such other to himself. Cunliffe v. Whitehead, 3 Bing. N. Cas. 828, 32 E. C. L. 380, where plaintiff alleged an indorsement by him to another who "delivered" it to him.

Indorsement without recourse by subsequent indorser.—A petition by a payee showing an indorsement by him to one who thereafter indorsed it without recourse is sufficient to show that plaintiff is the real party in interest. Whittenhall v. Korber, 12 Kan. 618.

Retransfer.— Where it is shown that the note was given to plaintiff, and by indorsement transferred to another, who by like means transferred it back to plaintiff, delivery to and title in plaintiff are sufficiently shown. Smith v. Thurston, 8 Ind. App. 105, 35 N. E. 520.

Taking up.— An allegation that plaintiff's indorsee sued him on the indorsement, but that before judgment plaintiff paid the note and costs, sufficiently shows his right to sue the maker. Taylor v. Hearn, 131 Ind. 537, 31 N. E. 201. Averments in effect that at the special instance and request of, and for the exclusive benefit of, defendant plaintiff drew on the latter, that the draft was dishonored, and that for defendant's exclusive benefit plaintiff paid off and took up the bill, are sufficient. Tinsley v. Penniman, 83 Tex. 54, 18 S. W. 718. In an action on a bill to which there are several parties, indorsed by the holder to the accepter and by the latter to plaintiff, the declaration must show the assent of the other parties to the indorsement by the accepter so as to avoid the legal presumption that the bill was taken up and extinguished by the latter. Beebe v. Real Estate Bank, 4 Ark. 546. In an action by a payee against the maker and the accepter of a bill of exchange, an averment that plaintiff indorsed the bill before maturity "by procurement of defendants," and that he had been obliged to pay the same, is unnecessary and improper because the mere anticipation of a defense. List v. Kortepeter, 26 Ind. 27. An averment, in an action on a note indorsed to a third party, that, on failure of the payer to discharge the same at maturity, plaintiff paid the indorsee the amount thereof, does not sufficiently allege that plaintiff is the owner thereof, although his name appears as payee; and the mere introduction of the note is insufficient evidence to justify a verdict for plaintiff. Johnson v. Arlidge, (Tex. 1891) 17 S. W. 28.

(XI) As to Presentment, Demand, Protest, and Notice — (A) To Charge Maker or Accepter. The English and the American rules respecting the necessity of averring presentment to a maker or accepter of a note or bill payable at a specified time and place are in direct conflict. In England such an averment is held necessary,[98] while in the United States the contrary doctrine prevails.[99]

Action by guardian on note transferred by ward.— In a complaint by a guardian, to recover the amount of a note due to the estate of his ward, which shows, as an excuse for non-production of the note that the infant has transferred it to a third person it is not necessary to aver that the infant has subsequently disaffirmed the transfer or that the infant has tendered back the consideration which was received upon such transfer. Eichner v. Bowery Bank, 20 Misc. (N. Y.) 90, 45 N. Y. Suppl. 68.

Plaintiff need not allege a continued refusal to pay, by the maker, up to the time of suit brought. Crenshaw v. McKiernan, Minor (Ala.) 295.

Presentment to the particular person named in the instrument need not be averred. St. James Church v. Moore, 1 Ind. 289.

Money counts.— Under N. Y. Laws (1816), c. 223, § 2, providing that all notes in the form of bank-bills, issued by any person, payable in bills of any incorporated company, may, in case of default in payment according to the tenor thereof, be sued by the holder, a declaration by the latter on such a note need not specially aver demand of payment, proof thereof being admissible under the common money counts. Throop v. Cheeseman, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 264.

Bill accepted by drawer.— In an action of indorsement.[2] If presentment and the subsequent steps are not conditions precedent, or a party is liable without notice,[3] as where he is a surety,[4] assignor,[5] or unconditional guarantor,[6] where recovery is sought on non-negotiable paper,[7] or where formal averments are not required, as in summary proceedings,[8] averments of this character are unnecessary; and there are cases holding that under certain circumstances, demand, non-payment, or notice will be presumed in the absence of an express averment thereof,[9] as, for example, where protest there-against the drawer of a bill of exchange, who was also the accepter, it is not necessary to allege a demand and notice. Smith v. Paul, 8 Port. (Ala.) 503.

A custom of giving notice to residents through the post-office need not be alleged. Gindral v. Mechanics' Bank, 7 Ala. 324.

An averment of a personal demand is unnecessary where it can be shown that by agreement and usage a demand at the bank where the instrument was negotiable would be sufficient. Brent v. Metropolis Bank, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 89, 7 L. ed. 65.

An averment that the owner personally presented the note is not necessary. White v. Low, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 204.

Production of the instrument at the time of presentment is properly alleged. Smith v. Gibbs, 2 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 479. A declaration averring that notices of non-payment and protest were mailed to defendants in an envelope addressed to the accepter, and that the holder believes and charges that the latter at once notified defendants is insufficient. Sibree Deposit Bank v. Moreland, 96 Ky. 150, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 404, 28 S. W. 153, 29 L. R. A. 305.

An averment of notice of non-payment is not a sufficient averment of notice of dishonor. Pahquioque Bank v. Martin, 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 291.

Filing protest.— The protest or a copy thereof need not be filed. Rice v. Derby, 7 Ind. 649.

A copy of the protest will not aid the averments of the complaint. Pollard v. Bowen, 57 Ind. 232.

Defects — Objections.— The omission to allege protest is not available on general demurrer (Hart v. Otis, 41 Ill. App. 431), and such an omission, or the failure to aver presentment or notice, or insufficient allegations in respect thereto are immaterial after default (Jordan v. Bell, 8 Port. (Ala.) 53; Crocker v. Gilbert, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 131; Brent v. Metropolis Bank, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 89, 7 L. ed. 65), although it is also held that such omissions are not cured by verdict (Disborough v. Vanness, 8 N. J. L. 231; Knott v. Hicks, 2 Humphr. (Tenn.) 162; Slacum v. Pomeroy, 6 Cranch (U. S.) 221, 3 L. ed. 204) or by judgment by default (Bosch v. Kassing, 64 Iowa 312, 20 N. W. 454; Tumley v. Clarksville, etc., R. Co., 2 Coldw. (Tenn.) 327; Harlan v. Dew, 3 Head (Tenn.) 505; Mullaly v. Ivory, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 30 S. W. 259).

A clerical error, alleging notice to defendant in an action against several, is not fatal.

German Exch. Bank v. Kroder, 13 Misc. (N. Y.) 192, 34 N. Y. Suppl. 133, 68 N. Y. St. 219.

Remedies for defects.— Objection for indefiniteness should be made by motion (Heaver v. Beatty, 3 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 61, 2 Wkly. L. Gaz. 388), but if the protest and notice are made a part of the complaint and fail to show a legal demand and notice of non-payment the remedy is by appeal (Kohler v. Montgomery, 17 Ind. 220).

2. Kennon v. McRae, 3 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 249; Jones v. Middleton, 29 Iowa 188; Alleman v. Bowen, 61 Hun (N. Y.) 30, 15 N. Y. Suppl. 318, 39 N. Y. St. 822.

3. Marvin v. Adamson, 11 Iowa 371.

A declaration on a bill drawn in the United States and payable in Europe to recover on a protest for non-payment need not aver a protest for non-acceptance. Brown v. Barry, 3 Dall. (Pa.) 365, 1 L. ed. 638.

Note not payable at chartered bank.— A declaration on a note payable at "Hoyt & Jones," against the indorsers by Hoyt & Jones, who were described as "lately bankers doing business . . . under the name, style, and firm of Hoyt & Jones," is not sufficient to show that Hoyt & Jones was a chartered bank, so as to require notice of dishonor to the indorsers. Salmons v. Hoyt, 53 Ga. 493.

4. McDougald v. Rutherford, 30 Ala. 253; Chorn v. Merrill, 9 La. Ann. 533; Dismukes v. Wright, 20 N. C. 74; Williams v. Irwin, 20 N. C. 70.

7. Stapp v. Bacon, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 535.

8. In summary proceedings against an indorser technical pleading is not required. It is sufficient to state that defendant is "indebted as indorser" instead of formally averring demand on and refusal by the maker, and notice thereof to defendant. Hilburn v. Paysinger, 1 Bailey (S. C.) 97. In an action on a bank check payable after date, against the drawer, plaintiff's affidavit of the cause of action need not allege that notice of its dishonor for non-payment when due was served on defendant, where no affidavit of defense is filed. Work v. Tatman, 2 Houst. (Del.) 304.

9. In McConeghy v. Kirk, 68 Pa. St. 200, it was held that if a copy of a note is filed with the complaint in an action against an indorser, the complaint need not allege defor is averred.[10] Although there are cases to the contrary,[11] the weight of authority is to the effect that general averments of the performance of the requisites necessary to fix the liability will be sufficient.[12]

(c) Place of Presentment — (1) In General. Although questioned, or held to the contrary in some of the cases,[13] the English rule appears to require an averment of presentment at the place of payment designated in the instrument,[14] and mand and notice of non-payment, since they will be presumed until denied by defendant. But this case is disapproved in Vulcanite Paving Co. v. Philadelphia Traction Co., 115 Pa. St. 280, 8 Atl. 777.

Action on judgment in favor of last holder. — In an action by an indorsee against his immediate indorser, for money paid on a judgment in favor of the last holder of the note against all the parties to it, it is not necessary to aver that notice of protest was served either in the first or second action, the presumption being that all parties to the judgment who were entitled to it received notice. Hamilton v. Veach, 19 Iowa 419.

Implied notice.—An allegation in an action on a corporate note executed by an agent who indorsed it that the indorser was the sole agent of the corporation, and that no other person was authorized to pay the note for the corporation, is insufficient to show that the indorser was the sole agent to pay the note, so as to raise the inference that he had notice of its dishonor. An allegation of due notice imports protest. Upper Canada Bank v. Parsons, 3 U. C. Q. B. 383; Commercial Bank v. Cameron, 3 U. C. Q. B. 363.

Special stipulation.—A petition on a foreign bill of exchange containing the stipulation that "protest shall be evidence of due presentment" sufficiently shows that there had been a presentment for payment, and a protest, by an averment that a notice of protest had been served, in view of a statute, declaring that a notarial protest shall be evidence of the fact of presentment and non-payment. this rule has been adopted to some extent in this country,[15] and in Canada;[16] but in many of the states the English rule is not followed, and an averment of presentment at the place of payment is held to be unnecessary.[17]

(E) Time of Notice. The time of giving notice of dishonor must be averred,[26] although it is not necessary that the precise date should be stated,[27] and there are holdings that a general averment of notice will be sufficient.[28]

(F) Exhaustion of Remedies Against Maker. In some of the states to charge an indorser or assignor of paper which is not governed by the law merchant, it is a prerequisite that the holder should first exhaust his remedies against the maker. Consequently the declaration or complaint must contain suitable averments of facts showing a compliance with such requirements, the efforts made to comply therewith, or sufficient reasons for non-compliance or for the failure to collect or enforce payment of the maker.[29] Thus, although no suit was instituted against him, inability to proceed against the maker because of his non-residence[30] or

United States.— Dent v. Ashley, Hempst. (U. S.) 55, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3,809*b*.

Time of instituting action.—It is not necessary to allege that the action was brought at the first term of the district court, which is the diligence prescribed by the statute, but the court will take judicial notice of that fact. Hutchins v. Flintge, 2 Tex. 473, 47 Am. Dec. 659.

Time of issuing execution.—A declaration stating that the term of the court at which plaintiff obtained judgment against the maker was adjourned on September 7, and that a fieri facias issued on the judgment on the twenty-first of the same month shows prima facie sufficient diligence in taking out execution. Clark v. Spears, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 302.

Request of indorser to assist in prosecution. — Where, in an action against the maker, the indorser is notified of its pendency and of the plea interposed and is requested to appear and assist in the prosecution of the suit, but fails so to do, an action may be maintained against him without notice of the result of the action or any demand on him to pay the loss sustained. Hazzard v. Citizens' State Bank, 72 Ind. 130.

Record of action against maker.— In a suit by the assignee of a note against his assignor, alleging that in an action on such note by the assignee against the maker the latter had judgment, the complaint need not contain a copy of the pleadings, proceedings, and judgment in such action. White v. Webster, 58 Ind. 233.

30. Miller v. McIntyre, 9 Ala. 638.

"Left the state."—An allegation that since the indorsement and before maturity of the note sued on the maker "left the state" is not equivalent to an averment that the maker became a non-resident. Holton v. McCormick, 45 Ind. 411.

Non-residence at accrual of right of action. —An allegation that the maker and another indorser "are nonresidents and have been for a long time" is insufficient because failing to state that they were non-residents when the right of action accrued. Mullaly v. Ivory, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 30 S. W. 259. An averment that the maker at the time of the indorsement was a non-resident and has since continued so to be and that the fact of his non-residence was at the time unknown to plaintiff is insufficient. Fulford v. Johnson, 15 Ala. 385.

Diligence.—An averment excusing the in-insolvency,[31] or because of coverture,[32] a request by the assignor or indorser not to sue,[33] or an express promise to pay by the party sought to be charged,[34] when appropriately averred, will sustain the action against an indorser or assignor. So an allegation of presentment, demand, refusal to pay, and notice thereof to the indorser is sufficient without an averment that suit was instituted against the maker within a prescribed time.[35]

(G) Waiver — Excuse. If presentment, protest, or notice thereof has been expressly or impliedly waived no averment in respect thereto is necessary.[36] Where, however, plaintiff seeks to excuse actual presentment, demand, or notice, and relies on matters which are equivalent thereto or which obviated or dispensed with the necessity of these formal requisites, rendered them useless or unnecessary,[37] or operated as a waiver thereof, the waiver or the facts so relied on must stitution of an action against the maker "in the county, where he ordinarily resided, but that he could not, on diligent search and inquiry, there, and elsewhere, in said State, be found," is not a sufficient averment of diligence. Fulford v. Johnson, 15 Ala. 385.

Time of insolvency.— The insolvency must be alleged to have existed at the time when suit should have been brought. Fisher v. Phelps, 21 Tex. 551.

Negativing transfer to assignee in bankruptcy.—A complaint against an indorser in which the ground of recovery is the insolvency and not the bankruptcy of the maker need not show that a sufficient amount of property to pay the note or the principal part thereof was not transferred to the assignees in bankruptcy of the maker. Hayne v. Fisher, 68 Ind. 158.

34. Brown v. Fowler, 133 Ala. 310, 32 So. 584.

Promise with knowledge of delay.—A declaration alleging that with knowledge of delay in suing the maker defendant, an indorser, expressly promised to pay need not also excuse a want of diligence in proceeding against the maker. Walker v. Henry, 36 W. Va. 100, 14 S. E. 440.

Unnecessary averments.—A complaint is not objectionable because, after sufficiently averring a request not to sue and a promise to pay, it further alleges a suit against the maker and the return, unsatisfied, of a judgment recovered therein. Brown v. Fowler, 133 Ala. 310, 32 So. 584.

35. Fisher v. Phelps, 21 Tex. 551.

Effect of giving notice of dishonor.— It is not necessary to aver the insolvency of the maker, where, by statute, the liability of the indorser attaches on his receiving notice of dishonor. Jones v. Robinson, 8 Ark. 484.

be specially pleaded and cannot be proved under the usual allegations of demand or notice.[38] There are, however, many decisions to the effect that such averments may be supported by proof of that character.[39]

(H) New Promise. A drawer or indorser who, with knowledge that proper

Inquiry and search.— An allegation in a declaration "that the notary, at," etc., "aforesaid, made diligent search, and inquiry for the said acceptor," is a sufficient allegation that inquiry and search were made at the place to which the bill was directed. Hazzard v. Shelton, 15 Ala. 62, 48 Am. Dec. 129.

If want of funds or effects or the fact that the note was indorsed or bill drawn without expectation of funds to meet it is relied on as an excuse facts sufficient to constitute the excuse must be averred.

Canada.— Goldie v. Maxwell, 1 U. C. Q. B. 425.

An allegation of the insolvency of the maker at the time of giving a note will not excuse the failure to give notice (Winter v. Coxe, 41 Ala. 207), although an averment of acceptance of a note in reliance on the indorser's fraudulent representations as to the maker's solvency will obviate the necessity of allegations of demand and notice (Jamison v. Copher, 35 Mo. 483).

No loss or detriment.—Averments that before presentment of an order the drawer had withdrawn all his funds from the hands of the drawee, and that he suffered no loss by the delay of presentment and want of notice (Spangler v. McDaniel, 3 Ind. 275) or that one deemed a guarantor and sought to be charged as such had received no detriment because of the insolvency of the maker and payee (Grier v. Irwin, (Iowa 1901) 86 N. W. 273) have been held sufficient; but, where protest and notice have been waived, an averment that the lack of notice was without detriment is unnecessary and immaterial (Star Wagon Co. v. Swezy, 63 Iowa 520, 19 N. W. 298).

Accommodation indorser.—An allegation that the indorsement was for the accommodation of the indorser is sufficient (Blenderman v. Price, 50 N. J. L. 296, 12 Atl. 775); but an allegation that at the time of the execution of the note defendant indorsed it to plaintiff, who, for defendant's sole benefit and accommodation, paid to the maker its face value is not sufficient to show that defendant was the party accommodated, and therefore does not show any excuse for not giving notice of non-payment (People's Nat. Bank v. Winton, 13 Ind. App. 110, 41 N. E. 75).

Diligence.—An express averment of due diligence is not necessary (Williams v. Matthews, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 252); but such an averment may be supported by proof of matters of excuse (Blakely v. Grant, 6 Mass. 386).

Sufficiency a question of law.— The sufficiency of the diligence alleged to have been exercised is a question of law determinable on a demurrer. Hartford Bank v. Green, 11 Iowa 476.

Partnership of drawer and drawee.— If plaintiff relies on the fact that the drawer and drawee were partners he must aver such fact in his declaration. Harwood v. Jarvis, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 375.

Foreign laws.— In an action against an indorser of a note made in another state which has dispensed with the necessity of demand and notice by statute such facts must be alleged. Mims v. Central Bank, 2 Ala. 294.

steps have been taken to charge him, promises to pay may be declared against on the original contract as if his liability had been legally fixed;[40] but if in ignorance of the laches of the holder he promises to pay on a new consideration he must be declared against on a special count framed on the promise.[41]

(XII) As to Acceptance—(A) In General. The acceptance of a draft or order by defendant sought to be charged must be appropriately alleged,[42] but the cause or reason for giving the order or the capacity in which the accepter incurred liability need not be averred.[43]

(B) Agreement to Accept or Promise to Pay. If a recovery is sought because of an agreement to accept the instrument before it was drawn or a promise to pay it thereafter, or because of any conduct on the part of defendant amounting to an acceptance, such agreement, promise, or conduct and that by reason thereof the payee was induced to take it, must be averred,[44] although it

An introductory statement naming one of defendants as "accepter" is not a sufficient averment of the fact that he accepted the bill. Lail v. Coram, 3 B. Mon. (Ky.) 414.

In declaring against a principal on a bill accepted by his agent the agent's authority must be averred. It is not sufficient to aver that he was the agent, and as such agent accepted for the principal. May v. Kelly, 27 Ala. 497.

Setting out copy.— See Andrews v. Astor Bank, 2 Duer (N. Y.) 629, an action on a bill addressed "to John Lloyd, Esq., President of the Astor Bank," and accepted by him as president, where a complaint containing a copy of the bill showing its acceptance, but not averring that defendant bank accepted it, or that Lloyd was president or as such had authority to accept, was held sufficient.

In suing on an accepted order for the amount of a subscription it is not necessary that the subscription should be made part of the complaint. Stockton v. Creager, 51 Ind. 262.

Funds in the accepter's hands at the time of acceptance need not be alleged. Spurgeon v. Swain, 13 Ind. App. 188, 41 N. E. 397.

That the acceptance was unconditional need not be alleged. Whilden v. Merchants', etc., Nat. Bank, 64 Ala. 1, 38 Am. Rep. 1.

Where the action is on a protest for nonpayment the silence of the declaration as to whether the bill was accepted or not will not vitiate it. Brown v. Barry, 3 Dall. (Pa.) 365, 1 L. ed. 638.

New promise.— In an action on the acceptance a new promise to pay need not be alleged. Nesbit v. Bendheim, 15 N. Y. Suppl. 300, 39 N. Y. St. 109.

Promise by agent.—An allegation that a person named as agent for defendant accepted in writing and promised and agreed to pay the bill in suit is an averment of an express promise by the agent. Rudd v. Owens-has been held that a valid agreement to accept may be declared on as an acceptance.[45]

(c) Conditional Acceptance. In declaring on a conditional acceptance the condition must be stated and its performance averred.[46] In declaring against the drawer if a conditional acceptance postponing the time of payment is averred, it must also be alleged that the drawer consented to it and that its terms were not kept or that as between the drawer and drawee the former had no right to draw it.[47]

(d) Payment Out of Particular Fund. Where a draft or order is drawn on or payable out of a particular fund the existence of such fund must be averred.[48] If an order is payable out of moneys properly applicable thereto it is sufficient to allege the accepter's control of sufficient funds so applicable without averring their actual receipt by him.[49]

(e) Time of Acceptance. An acceptance before the drawer has signed the bill may be declared on as an acceptance after the signature.[50]

(f) Necessity of Alleging Written Acceptance or Promise. It is not necessary to allege that the acceptance, the promise to accept, or the promise to pay was in writing.[51]

(g) Non-Acceptance. When so required by statute a demand for the return of a non-accepted bill must be alleged.[52]

(xiii) As to Non-Payment—(a) Necessary Allegations. Non-payment of the instrument on which the action is brought, in whole or in part, must be duly averred;[53] but an indorsee suing the maker need not negative payment to inter-

Sufficiency.—A complaint against one who indorsed a bill for services "Accepted, payable out of . . . my note to him, payable July 1, 1893, provided the note can be gotten here by that date," is sufficient if it allege that the conditions of the acceptance were complied with and the note taken up, and that defendant in paying it had reserved out of the amount due the amount of the bill sued on. 52. A demand for the return of the bill must be alleged where by statute it is provided that the drawee must refuse to return the bill, accepted or non-accepted, within twenty-four hours after delivery or such time as the holder may allow, in order to be charged as accepter. mediate holders[54] and one suing on an instrument made to him in his official capacity for the use of his successor in office need not negative payment to the latter.[55] Neither is it necessary to allege non-payment by a joint and several maker,[56] by an indorser not sued,[57] by a representative, not made a party, of a maker who predeceased his co-maker, defendant's testator,[58] or by a deceased partner, where a recovery is sought against the survivor on a firm note.[59] However, in an action on a note by a deceased maker, in the execution of which his wife improperly joined, non-payment by the husband in his lifetime must be averred;[60] and the drawer when seeking to recover of the accepter of a bill must allege not only non-payment by the latter, but also that because thereof he, the drawer, became liable and paid the bill.[61]

(B) Sufficiency of Allegations. The fact of non-payment will be deemed to be sufficiently shown, if facts are stated from which the default of the adverse party, and that there is an indebtedness from him to the adverse party can fairly be inferred,[62] but averments of a legal conclusion should be avoided.[63]

The following allegations have been held sufficient.— That "no part of said note, principal or interest has been paid" (Jones v. Frost, 28 Cal. 245); of a promise and failure (Roach v. Scogin, 2 Ark. 128) or refusal to pay (Rogers v. Lovett, 104 Ga. 665, 30 S. But see Scroufe v. Clay, 71 Cal. 123, 11 Pac. 882, holding it insufficient to allege that defendant "has refused and still refuses to pay"); that "defendant did not pay the same" (Wilkins v. McGuire, 2 App. Cas. Clerical omission.—See Notman v. Green, 90 Cal. 172, 27 Pac. 157, where the complaint was held insufficient, the pleader having evidently inadvertently stated that "no part of the principal sum mentioned in said promissory note . . . still remains due and unpaid."

allegation of non-payment, may be supplied or aided by other averments,[64] or by unchallenged proof of the fact,[65] or cured by verdict[66] or a judgment by default.[67]

(XIV) As to Amount Due — (A) Necessary Allegations. The amount claimed to be due from the adverse party must appear by direct averment or by implication in the body of the pleading,[68] or in the prayer or demand for judgment,[69] and with reasonable certainty.[70]

(B) Sufficiency of Allegations. Unless otherwise provided by statute, the pleading will be deemed sufficient if the facts set forth show an indebtedness of defendant to plaintiff, on the instrument in suit, in a specific amount.[71]

Under the Missouri code, art. 6, § 1, providing that, where a recovery of money is demanded, the amount thereof shall be stated, or such facts be given as will enable the court to ascertain the amount demanded, in an action on a note it is sufficient to pray judgment "for the amount of the promissory note, with interest." Page v. Snow, 18 Mo. 126.

Alleging less than demanded.—An allegation of damages in a sum less than the amount of the note may be disregarded where judgment for such amount is specifically demanded. French v. Davis, 38 Miss. 218.

Sufficiency.—A complaint on notes aggregating three hundred and ninety dollars and eighty cents and concluding "Plaintiff, therefore, demands judgment for 800 dollars" is a sufficient demand of judgment for a given sum. Gage v. Woodruff, 13 Ind. 293.

70. Uncertainty.— Where the statement of the sum promised to be paid by the note sued on is illegible, as where a word may be read "four," "five," or "fine," a demurrer should be sustained. Noel v. Clark, 3 Ark. 432, where the defect was cured by inspection of the note placed in record on oyer being craved.

Actual liability not expressed on face of note.— Where an indorser declines to indorse for the whole amount expressed in an accommodation note, but becomes liable for a less amount the note may be declared on as being for such lesser sum. Douglass v. Wilkinson, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 431 [affirmed in 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 559]. See also Merchants', etc., Bank v. Evans, 9 W. Va. 373. Foreign money.— In an action on a note payable in pounds sterling, it is not necessary to aver or prove the value of such pound in money of the United States, but the court will give judgment for the value of the contents of the note in money of the United States, according to the ratio prescribed by statute. King v. Hamilton, 8 Sawy. (U. S.) 167, 12 Fed. 478. See also Gibb v. Morisette, 4 U. C. Q. B. 205, where an averment of a promise to pay the sum of two hundred louis current money, meaning thereby the sum of two hundred pounds of lawful money of Canada, was held good. If the declaration on a protested bill state that the bill was for so much sterling money, "for value in current money there received," without naming the sum of current money, plaintiff can only recover the sum mentioned in the bill, as current money. Proudfit v. Murray, 1 Call (Va.) 394. In an action on a bill for sterling money, the damages must also be expressly laid in the declaration in that money. Scott v. Call, 1 Wash. (Va.) 115.

(c) Setting Out Credits. Credits being matters of defense need not be set forth by plaintiff.[72]

(xv) As to Interest—(a) Stipulation in Instrument—(1) Legal Rate—(a) In General. Where the instrument contains a stipulation for the payment of interest before maturity, the interest is a part of the contract and must be declared for,[73] as a single cause of action,[74] specifying the principal and interest separately;[75] but the failure to negative payment of the stipulated interest cannot be reached by general demurrer,[76] nor is an objection for that reason available after default.[77]

(b) Omission of Stipulation. A promissory note containing immaterial omissions in the stipulation respecting interest may be declared on according to the evident intention of the parties thereto;[78] and it has been held that the failure of such a note to contain a stipulation for interest is remedied by recitals in a mortgage which was given to secure it, where both instruments are attached to a bill for foreclosure.[79]

(2) Special Agreement. When by agreement as permitted by statute a note bears interest at a rate greater than the ordinary legal rate a breach of the agreement must be assigned,[80] and if the promise is to pay more than the ordinary rate after maturity by way of penalty there must be an allegation of special damage.[81]

Texas.— Page v. Carson, (Tex. 1891) 16 S. W. 1036.

Several notes.—A complaint on three sealed notes, which alleges and demands at the close the aggregate amount sued for, is not demurrable because it fails to give, at the close of each of the three separate causes of action into which the pleading is divided, the particular sum claimed in that clause. Holland v. Kemp, 27 S. C. 623, 3 S. E. 83.

Legal conclusion.—An averment that a certain amount is due is insufficient, because a legal conclusion. Frisch v. Caler, 21 Cal. 71. But see Creecy v. Joy, 40 Oreg. 28, 66 Pac. 295, holding that such an averment, although perhaps a conclusion of law, is no more than a defective statement of a material allegation which is waived by answering over.

72. Hendrie v. Rippey, 9 Iowa 351; McRea v. Purvis, 12 La. Ann. 85.

In Ohio a petition is not defective for failure to allege that a copy of the note is set forth, "with all the indorsements and credits thereon," as, in the absence of such allegation, it will be presumed that there are no indorsements or credits. Ives v. Strickland, 6 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 810, 8 Am. L. Rec. 309; Ingersoll v. Craw, 4 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 76, Clev. L. Rep. 1.

Certainty.—A complaint setting forth a copy of the note sued on, showing indorsements of payments of a date later than that of the note, and alleging payment of a sum equal to the amounts indorsed, is not uncertain because conveying the idea that the indorsements were not part of the note as originally made but were added subsequently. Form of declaration.—A formal demand of the amount claimed in the beginning of the declaration is usual, but the omission of it is not cause of demurrer, or fatal on error. Hence in declaring on a note bearing interest it is not necessary to demand the interest in the beginning of the declaration. Mitchell v. Conley, 13 Ark. 414.

Summary proceedings.— In petition and summons on a note bearing interest, it is sufficient to set out the note, aver that the debt remains unpaid, and demand judgment for the debt, damages, and costs. It is not necessary specially to negative the payment of the interest. Cail v. Brookfield, 4 Ark. 554.

In Pennsylvania, there being no court of chancery, where an agreement for interest has been omitted from the note by mistake, plaintiff may declare on the note according to its equitable effect. Reichart v. Beidleman, 17 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 41.

It seems, however, that the note and the interest which has accrued after maturity constitute but a single cause of action.[82]

(3) Illegal Rate. If the instrument provides for illegal interest it may be declared on as without interest.[83]

(B) Interest as Damages — (1) In General. Where the instrument contains no stipulation as to interest, it is unnecessary to demand the interest that is due or to negative its payment. The debt alone should be declared for, and interest is recoverable as damages for its detention.[84]

(2) Foreign Laws. Where the rate of interest sought to be recovered is governed by the laws of a foreign state where the note was made, such laws must be pleaded in the same manner as any other necessary fact,[85] and with reasonable certainty,[86] as well as the fact that such laws were in force at the time the instrument was made,[87] otherwise the rate of interest recoverable will be that of the state where the action is brought.[88]

(3) Amount Claimed. The amount claimed as interest should be specified or facts should be stated from which the amount can be ascertained by calculation.[89]

(XVI) As to Attorney's Fees — (A) In General. A stipulation for the payment of attorney's fees must be specially pleaded,[90] although plaintiff need not

Interest provided for in note.—Where a petition on a note drawing interest sets forth in full a copy of the note, alleges that the amount specified therein is wholly due and unpaid, and asks "judgment for the amount due by said note," interest accrued on the note at the date of the rendition of judgment may be included therein. Period covered.—An allegation that the laws of the state where the note was executed authorized contracts for the payment of the rate specified in the note, without stating "until paid," authorized a recovery of that rate to the time of maturity only. 89. Gottfried v. German Nat. Bank, 91 Ill. 75.

Sufficient allegation.—An allegation that the note in suit bears interest at a stated rate per annum sufficiently describes in this respect a note bearing interest at a rate stated, payable annually (Rees v. Clark, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 39 S. W. 160); and a declaration alleging a note to be payable one day after date, with interest at a specified per cent until paid, and that defendant became liable to pay such interest from the time the note fell due until paid, is good against a demurrer (Watkins v. Weaver, 4 Ark. 556).

Allegation construed.—A claim of the amount of the note with interest is a claim of interest from the time of the commencement of the action only. Barton v. Smith, 7 Iowa 85.

In the federal courts a demand for judgment for the amount of the note sued on and interest in the form permitted by the New York code is not a sufficient demand of damages. Brownson v. Wallace, 4 Blatchf. (U. S.) 465, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 2,042.

Aider by prayer.— The necessary allegation of a promise to pay such fees is not supplied by a prayer therefor in the petition. Williams v. Harrison, (Tex. Civ. App. 1901) 65 S. W. 884.

The incorporation in the petition of the note containing the stipulation is sufficient. Chowning v. Chowning, 3 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 150.

Sufficiency to charge indorser.—A count in a declaration alleging that a third person executed his certain note, payable to the order of defendant; that defendant indorsed and delivered the note to a certain bank, whereby she promised to pay the bank one hundred dollars for attorney's fees in the event the note was not paid at maturity, and was placed in the hands of an attorney for collection; that the note was not paid at maturity, and had been placed in the hands of an attorney for collection — does not show a liability for attorney's fees on the part of defendant to the bank, or to one claiming allege that they are due,[91] and a complaint otherwise good is not invalidated by averments respecting attorney's fees for which defendant is not liable,[92] or where the stipulation for their payment is invalid.[93]

(B) Resort to Legal Proceedings. If the collection of the note by legal proceedings is a condition of liability for attorney's fees a complaint on the note which also seeks to recover such fees need not aver a resort to legal proceedings.[94]

(C) Employment of Attorney. If the liability depends upon the employment of an attorney, an averment of such employment is absolutely necessary,[95] unless the record shows the employment of an attorney.[96] If the amount of the fees is fixed by the stipulation, or is deducible from the note itself, it is sufficient to state the amount, without averring its reasonableness or the value of the attorney's services.[97]

(D) Amount of Fees Not Fixed. If the amount is not fixed, the reasonable value of the attorney's services should be averred[98] or it will be sufficient to allege a breach of the agreement and to state the damages generally, leaving the question of value to the proof.[99]

(XVII) As to Protest Fees. To authorize a recovery of protest fees the fact of protest,[1] the necessity therefor,[2] and the amount of the protest fees or through it, since an ordinary indorsement of a note does not carry with it an original obligation to pay attorney's fees for collecting it. Robinson v. Aird, (Fla. 1901) 29 So. 633.

Prerequisites.—Where no presumption arises that a plea may be filed and not sustained it is error to refuse to permit an amendment of the prayer by adding a claim for attorney's fees — the statute providing for a recovery of such fees only where a plea filed is not sustained. Baxley Banking Co. v. Carter, 112 Ga. 529, 37 S. E. 728.

Supplemental complaint.—Where after suit the maker pays the note to one to whom the payee has assigned it as security a supplemental complaint claiming attorney's fees provided for is insufficient, because not showing facts accruing since the original pleadings were filed. A petition which admits part payment, and then alleges that the note was placed in the hands of attorneys for collection, whereby ten per cent attorney's fees on the face of the note became due and payable, as stipulated for therein, is broad enough to admit evidence that the part payment was made after the notes were placed in the attorney's hands. Kendall v. Page, 83 Tex. 131, 18 S. W. 333.

98. Necessity of separate count.—An agreement to pay a reasonable attorney's fee may be enforced by averring the value of the reasonable attorney's services in the same paragraph or count of the complaint as that on the note itself. It need not be set out as a separate cause of action. Mathews v. Norman, 42 Ind. 176.

See also Glenn v. Porter, 72 Ind. 525 (holding that the value of attorney's fees may be included in the judgment, although no allegation of their value or specific claim for their recovery is contained in the complaint); Boyd v. Smith, (Ind. App. 1894) 39 N. E. 208 (holding that in an action on a note providing for an attorney's fee, on which there is due less than two hundred dollars, where the complaint alleges a reasonable attorney's fee to be thirty dollars, and demands generally a judgment for three hundred dollars, plaintiff is not limited in his right to recover such fee to thirty dollars).

Sufficiency of allegation.—An allegation of two indorsements, a demand, and refusal of payment, and notice to the indorsers, is sufficient to authorize a recovery of protest fees charges[8] must be appropriately alleged; but it has been held that the claims for such fees or charges need not be set forth as a separate and distinct cause of action.[4]

(XVIII) As to Statutory Damages — Protested Bills. While it has been held that statutory damages on protested bills of exchange need not be specially demanded,[5] it has also been held that they must be specifically claimed, but need not be set forth as a separate and distinct cause of action.[6] However, as the fact of protest is indispensable to the right of recovery that fact must be averred.[7]

(XIX) As to Revenue Stamp. A revenue stamp is no part of a note or bill, and in declaring on such an instrument, it need not be alleged that it was properly stamped, nor need a copy of the stamp be set out.[8]

(XX) As to Mistake. A note or bill may be declared on according to its true intent and meaning without adverting to mistakes or omissions occurring therein,[9] unless the error is of such a character as to require the mistake to be shown as a fact.[10]

c. Annexation and Filing — (I) In General. In a number of the states there exists provisions to the effect that where an action is founded on a written instrument charged to have been executed by defendant, the instrument itself or a copy thereof must be attached to or filed with the declaration or like pleading, or that it must be both attached and filed, and substantial compliance with such requirements is necessary to the sufficiency of the declaration or complaint.[11]

9. Error in date.— A note mistakenly dated as of the previous year may be declared on according to its true date, without any averment of the mistake. Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Walden, Anth. N. P. 172. And in petition and summons by an administrator on a note bearing date subsequent to the date of the letters of administration, it is not necessary, as in an action at common law, to aver that the note was incorrectly dated. Hamilton v. Stewart, 5 Mo. 266.

Maturity of note.—When a note is intended to read, "twelve months after I promise," but the word "date" is omitted, the complaint in an action thereon need not allege the omission and the intent of the parties, if the note itself be set out. McPherson v. Biscoe, 3 Ark. 90.

Error in the erasure of an indorser's signature may as against him be shown without being alleged. Any circumstance showing that the erasure affected or destroyed his liability must be pleaded by him. Cantrelle v. Percy, 17 La. 520.

Amount due.—Where by mistake but part of the amount due is sued for and recovered, in a subsequent action for the remainder the plaintiff need only allege the amount due, without averring the mistake respecting his former claim. Conklin v. Field, 37 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 455.

10. Error in signature.—A declaration in an action against Downer & Co. is sufficient which describes the note sued on as being the note of that firm, but alleges that the note was by mistake signed Downer & Dana, although it ought to have been signed Downer & Co., as the note was given for the benefit of the latter firm, and for property which went to their use. Miner v. Downer, 20 Vt. 461.

Erroneous designation of payee.—A complaint in an action on a note alleging that at the time of its execution to plaintiff defendant, through inadvertence and the mutual mistake of parties, wrote therein as payee the name of defendant's father instead of plaintiff's name states sufficiently as against a general demurrer that the mistake was a mistake of fact. However, matters which properly constitute no part of the instrument may be disregarded.[12]

(II) IDENTIFICATION OF INSTRUMENT. The instrument filed must be referred to and identified by the complaint that it may appear that the instrument on which that pleading is based and the instrument or copy filed are the same.[13]

(III) REFERENCE TO COPY ANNEXED OR FILED. In some jurisdictions the instrument or copy thereof filed or annexed is not regarded as a part of the pleading or record and will not aid plaintiff's pleading, which must be complete in itself.[14] In others the note when filed becomes a part of the record.[15]

In Kansas, under a code section requiring a copy of the note to be "attached to and filed with the pleading" and another section authorizing plaintiff "to give a copy of the instrument" and state the amount due thereon which he claims, it is sufficient to set out the note in full without attaching it. Budd v. Kramer, 14 Kan. 101.

An action will not be dismissed for failure to file the note with the petition, since the note forms no part of the petition, and is when filed but an exhibit which the statute requires to be filed with the petition. Collum v. Fahrner, 3 Mo. App. 110.

Attaching a copy of a note to the back of a petition sufficiently sets forth the instrument sued on, although it is not referred to by letters or figures, so as to designate it as part of the petition. Ives v. Strickland, 6 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 810, 8 Am. L. Rec. 310. 310.

Attachment to each paragraph.—A copy note filed with and made part of each paragraph of the complaint is sufficiently described. Firestone v. Daniels, 71 Ind. 570.

If profert is duly made, the omission to file the instrument or a copy is unimportant. Williams v. Bryan, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 104; Anderson v. Allison, 2 Head (Tenn.) 122.

If the instrument sued on be set out in the petition it will be sufficient, without filing a separate copy. Bostwick v. Fleming, 2 Ark. 462.

Several notes.—A complaint in two paragraphs, on two similar notes, must be accompanied with a copy of each note, filed with the paragraph declaring on it. Johnson School Tp. v. Citizens' Bank, 81 Ind. 515.

In an action on a large number of bank-bills of different denominations it is sufficient to attach one of each denomination. Tarbell v. Stevens, 7 Iowa 163.

"Herewith filed."— The copy filed is sufficiently referred to and identified by a statement, following a description of the instrument, that a copy thereof is "herewith filed," or by equivalent language, where the note or other writing actually filed corresponds with that described in the complaint. Dunkle v. Nichols, 101 Ind. 473; Whitworth v. Malcomb, 82 Ind. 454; Carper v. Kitt, 71 Ind. 24; Friddle v. Crane, 68 Ind. 583; Reed v. Broadbelt, 68 Ind. 91; Gish v. Gish, 7 Ind. (iv) Excusing Omission to File or Annex. The omission to file or annex the note or a copy may be excused, where the original has been lost or destroyed or the failure to produce it is otherwise satisfactorily explained.[16]

(v) Waiver and Aider. The failure to attach or file the instrument may be waived by pleading to the merits,[17] by admitting the execution of the writing in question,[18] or by the omission to make seasonable objection.[19] Likewise such failure may be cured by verdict.[20]

d. Setting Out Instrument and Claiming Specific Sum. In some of the states plaintiff may set forth a copy of the instrument and state that there is due to him thereon from the adverse party a specified sum which he claims, and this is equivalent to setting forth the instrument according to its legal effect.[21] This mode of pleading is permissive and does not preclude a resort to other modes.[22]

e. Profert and Oyer — (i) Profert. At common law, an unsealed promissory note being neither a specialty nor a debt, but merely evidence of a collateral liability arising out of a simple contract, no profert of it was required to be made or laid, nor was it necessary to assign any reason for the omission.[23] In some jurisdictions, however, by statute, plaintiff is required to produce the note and make profert in his declaration.[24]

Where there are two counts on two notes,

(II) OYER. Technically oyer cannot be craved of an unsealed promissory note,[25] although in some jurisdictions it is permitted,[26] or at least in its discretion the court may grant the request;[27] and when granted the instrument becomes a part of the declaration.[28]

f. Causes and Counts — (I) SINGLE CAUSE AND COUNT — (A) In General. In some jurisdictions, in an action on several notes or bills to which the parties are the same, they are regarded as a single cause of action embracing several items, which may be stated in a single count,[29] so where several instalments of the instrument are sued for,[30] where distinct defaults have occurred according to its tenor,[31] or where parties to the note are sought to be held in different capacities,[32] although where a single cause of action is erroneously set forth in separate counts, after a general verdict they may be treated as one.[33]

(B) Unnecessary Averments. A complaint which unnecessarily recites facts as to the consideration of the note sued on, or contains a history of the transaction out of which the note grew, or other irrelevant matter, and which also sets out the note upon which the recovery is sought, states but a single cause of action.[34]

profert of both at the conclusion of the last count is sufficient. Hynson v. Ruddell, 1 Ark. 33.

Under the Louisiana code of practice oyer may be craved, when the note is not annexed. Lee v. Lacoste, 3 La. Ann. 223.

In Tennessee if plaintiff fails to file the notes sued on defendant may have his demand of oyer entered and have the judgment of the court whether he is bound to answer until the notes are filed. Anderson v. Allison, 2 Head (Tenn.) 122.

In order to take advantage on demurrer of a variance between the note set out in the declarations and the copy of the note filed therewith, oyer should be craved and the note set out in hæc verba. Harlow v. Boswell, 15 Ill. 56; Bogardus v. Trial, 2 Ill. 63.

Sufficiency.—A count on several notes which alleges that they bear the same date, stating it, the time of payment, and the amount of each, and that plaintiff is the payee, is sufficiently precise. Note and judgment thereon.—Plaintiff may in a narrative form set forth a note and a judgment recovered thereon, claiming only a recovery on the note. Thompson v. Minford, 11 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 273.

(II) Separate Counts. In other jurisdictions, however, each note or bill,[35] or each distinct obligation on the same instrument is regarded as a distinct and complete cause of action, which must be stated in a separate count or paragraph.[36]

(III) Joinder of Counts — (A) In General. A count on the note may be joined with a count on an agreement to indorse it,[37] but a count against all the joint and several makers cannot be joined with a count against less than all.[38] Nor can a cause on a promise to pay by one whose name has been forged, be joined with a cause against him as indorser and also against the maker,[39] or a cause against the maker and indorser with one against the indorser on an account to which the note was given as collateral.[40] Plaintiff cannot declare both in case and debt on a single bill,[41] and it has been held that the drawer of a check cannot join a cause of action against the payee for failure to present the check within a reasonable time with a cause for damages, because of a breach of the payee's contract to present the same with due diligence.[42]

(B) Special and Money Counts. The money counts may be added to a special count,[43] and if for any reason the instrument is inadmissible under that count it may be introduced in evidence under the money counts.[44]

(c) Enforcement of Collateral Security. A complaint which seeks to recover on a note and to enforce payment out of collateral given to secure the same is not objectionable for misjoinder.[45]

(iv) Election of Counts. Where plaintiff declares on a special count and also on the money counts, he may elect under which to proceed,[46] but will not be required to elect between a count charging an acceptance and one charging a breach of a promise to accept,[47] or where the complaint states the execution and delivery of the note in suit for different purposes.[48]

g. Recovery on Money Counts. At common law, and where the rule in this respect has been preserved, bills of exchange between the drawer and payee and promissory notes may be declared on and are evidence under counts for money lent, money had and received, and money paid for the use of defendant.[49] So

h. Non-Negotiable Instruments. An instrument which is not a promissory note, but which is of the same legal effect, may be declared on as such;[61] and there are decisions that a non-negotiable instrument may be declared on as if negotiable.[62] However, in the absence of statutory authority the proper practice seems to require that such instruments should be declared on as specialties.[63]

i. Notes Payable on Condition or Contingency — (i) In General. A note payable or a bill accepted on a condition or contingency cannot be declared on as a negotiable instrument, but must be sued on as a special agreement[64] and the condition or contingency set out.[65] After the contingency has happened, how-to which the signature of the maker was procured in the belief that it was for a less amount borrowed of the payee there can be no recovery of the smaller sum without a count for money had and received. Griffith v. Short, 14 Nebr. 259, 15 N. W. 335.

(11) Performance of Condition — Happening of Contingent Event. To hold the party against whom a recovery is sought the happening of the contingency or the performance of the condition or a readiness to perform must be suitably alleged.[67]

j. Contemporaneous Agreements. Although there are decisions to the contrary,[68] it appears to be the rule that a contemporaneous agreement varying the note reciting, "This note given for purchase-money on real estate. If title defective, note void," the complaint need not allege that the title to the land was not defective as to the assignor. Bringham v. Leighty, 61 Ind. 524.

Characterization of instrument.—A declaration on a writing which is not one "whereby money is promised or secured to be paid" within the statute (Thompson Dig. Generality.—A declaration, on a note to be paid on a contingency, that averred that the contingency had happened, as appeared by an indorsement thereon, was held sufficient to warrant a judgment by default. McGehee v. Childress, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 506.

Immaterial matters.— In an action on a note, payable on the contingency that the child of a particular person shall live two years, it is not necessary to aver what was the name or the sex of the child, the time of its birth, or how long it lived, these facts not being material to plaintiff's case. It is sufficient to aver that the said child lived two years. Littleton v. Hutchins, 20 N. H. 425.

Videlicet.—Where, in a declaration on a note payable in one year after the decease of a particular person, the decease of the said person was alleged under a videlicet, the declaration was held sufficient on general demurrer. Ladue v. Ladue, 16 Vt. 189.

Notes for goods sold conditionally.—A complaint on "promissory notes" for the purchase-price of goods, with reservation of title to the payee, need not aver a sale and delivery. Beaudrias v. Walck, 17 N. Y. Suppl. 716, 45 N. Y. St. 7.

Payment out of profits.— In an action on a due-bill which was to be paid out of the profits of a partnership it was not necessary to aver the payment of the firm's debts, where it was alleged that the profits exceeded the amount of the bill. Helton v. Wells, 12 Ind. App. 605, 40 N. E. 930.

Existence of overdraft.—Where a note recites that it was given to secure an overdraft the existence of an overdraft at the time of the institution of the action must be alleged. San Luis Obispo County Bank, etc. v. Greenberg, 116 Cal. 467, 48 Pac. 386, 127 Cal. 26, 59 Pac. 139.

Uncertain amount.—A declaration on an order accepted by the drawee, payable on a contingency, and uncertain as to the amount to be ultimately paid, which states the facts on which the debt arose, the consideration, the happening of the contingency on which it became payable, and the amount which has in fact accrued, is sufficient. Goss v. Barker, 22 Vt. 520.

The time of the happening of the contingency need not be alleged. Allen v. Dickson, Minor (Ala.) 119.

68. Cartwell v. John Williams Co., 10 Ky. L. Rep. 1062. See also Black v. Epstein, 93 Mo. App. 459, 67 S. W. 736.

An allegation of an "understanding" respecting the liabilities of the signers of a note, which is elsewhere referred to as an "agreement and arrangement" is a sufficient allegation of a contract. Sloan v. Gibbes, 56 S. C. 480, 35 S. E. 408, 76 Am. St. Rep. 559.

Mode of payment.—A count in a declaration by the indorsee against the personal rep-terms of a negotiable instrument, but not contained therein, need not be noticed[69] and that no notice need be taken of collateral agreements contained in the instrument which do not affect plaintiff's right of action.[70]

k. Notes Secured or Given as Collateral Security. It is not necessary to allege that the note in suit was given as collateral security, although the instrument recites that fact.[71] Where no recovery is permitted on a note secured by mortgage, except in a suit to foreclose the mortgage, a complaint which seeks a recovery on the note alone is insufficient if it shows that the instrument is so secured.[72]

l. Service of Copy of Instrument. In some jurisdictions it is required that service of a copy of the instrument sued on with a prescribed notice be made on defendant,[73] and when service is so made the copy is regarded as a part of the declaration[74] and as equivalent to the insertion of a special count therein.[75]

m. Bill of Particulars. Ordinarily the note or bill is of itself a sufficient bill of particulars,[76] but where a recovery is sought by plaintiff on the common money resentatives of the indorser of a negotiable note averred that by an agreement between the maker and indorser the surplus value of certain slaves held by the latter as an indemnity was after the payment of a certain sum to be applied to the discharge of several notes, of which the note sued on was one, and in the event the indorser should keep the slave, etc., the surplus should be ascertained by three disinterested persons, etc., and further averred that the said surplus was sufficient fully to indemnify the indorser, etc. It was held that the count was not defective because it failed to aver that the surplus had been ascertained in the mode designated by the agreement. Cockrill v. Hobson, 16 Ala. 391.

Aider by answer.—Where a petition merely declared on a note, without more, and the answer set forth the note and a supplemental agreement, the omission of the petition was obviated by the answer. Citizens' State Bank v. Pettit, 85 Mo. App. 499.

Mode of payment.— In declaring on a note promising to pay a certain sum at maturity, but containing a memorandum that the payee may, if he chooses, take a commodity previous to the day of payment, it is sufficient to allege the promise to pay. Owen v. Barnum, 7 Ill. 461.

Where there is no averment that the note was secured by mortgage a recital to that effect in the note which is set forth is not the equivalent of such an averment. Hibernia Sav., etc., Soc. v. Thornton, 117 Cal. 481, 49 Pac. 573.

73. Under the New York act of 1832, p. 489, a copy of the bill or note was required to be served with the declaration and proof of service made on the trial. Steuben County Bank v. Stephens, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 243.

Sufficiency of copy.—A receipt written on the note in suit for a part of the amount and a memorandum that it had been protested for non-payment need not appear in the copy served. Buhl v. Trowbridge, 42 Mich. 44, 3 N. W. 245.

Proof of service.—Where the declaration was indorsed with a notice that at the trial a note, a copy of which was given and referred to in the notice, would be read in evidence and the sheriff returned that he had served a copy of the declaration and notice it was held that service of a copy of the note was implied. Bliss v. Paine, 11 Mich. 92. Failure to make proof of service must be objected to before the note is received in evidence. Steuben County Bank v. Stephens, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 243.

74. Cooper v. Blood, 2 Wis. 62.

75. Peck v. Cheney, 4 Wis. 249.

76. Filing copy note.— Under a statute only requiring plaintiff to file his declaration together with a copy of the instrument on which the action is brought, no bill of particulars is required other than a copy of the note. Galloway v. Trout, 2 Greene (Iowa) 595.

Sufficiency — Attorney's letter.—Where defendant's attorney requested of the attorney of plaintiff a bill of particulars, and the latter wrote to him that the claim was on the note specified in the declaration, and no counts,[77] or the circumstances are such that the adverse party is unable to defend without further information,[78] a bill of particulars or statement of like character should be furnished.

2. Plea or Answer[79] — a. Pleas to Several Counts or Causes. A single plea appropriate to separate counts is not objectionable because directed to the complaint as a whole and not to each count,[80] and where two or more notes are sued on a plea or answer directed to one must identify it with reasonable certainty.[81] order for a bill was obtained, it was held that plaintiff was bound by the letter, as a bill of particulars. Williams v. Allen, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 316.

77. Reynolds v. Woods, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 642, where the declaration contained the money counts, and notice was given that "this suit is brought against you as a party to a promissory note of which the following is a copy" setting out the note, and it was held to be insufficient as a bill of particulars. To same effect see Garrett v. Teller, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 643.

Under the Mississippi statute, where an indorsee seeks to recover against his immediate indorser under the common counts alone, he must furnish a bill of particulars. Jennings v. Thomas, 13 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 617.

Where there is a special count on a note, a copy of which is filed with the declaration, and the common counts are also inserted no account need be filed for the common counts. People v. Pearson, 2 Ill. 473; People v. Pearson, 2 Ill. 458.

78. Right to bill.—A statute entitling defendant in an action on an account to a bill of particulars has no application to an action on a promissory note, the consideration of which is denied. Doss v. Peterson, 82 Ala. 253, 2 So. 644. A statute permitting a motion for a more specific statement, where the facts on which the pleading is founded are stated too generally, has no application to indefiniteness in the prayer or demand for judgment. I. F. Sieberling Co. v. Dujardin, 38 Iowa 403.

Name of payee.— In an action against the executrix of the maker of a note payable to bearer, if the complaint fails to state the name of the payee through whom plaintiff derived title, a disclosure may be required of the name of the person to whom the note was delivered upon the making thereof. Chapman v. Walkerman, 75 Hun (N. Y.) 285, 26 N. Y. Suppl. 1006, 58 N. Y. St. 199.

Identification of instrument.— In an action by an accommodation accepter against the drawer, based on an account to receive moneys advanced in payment of bills of exchange and other moneys advanced, the bills must be so described in the account sued upon as to identify them. Curry v. Kurtz, 33 Miss. 24.

If the bill of particulars confined the claim to a particular note or notes, no recovery can be had for a preëxisting claim or for the original consideration. U. S. Bank v. Lyman, 1 Blatchf. (U. S.) 297, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 924, 20 Vt. 666, 11 Law Rep. 156 [affirmed in 12 How. (U. S.) 225, 13 L. ed. 965].

Where defendant pleads "payment, with leave to give special matter in evidence," plaintiff is entitled to a specification of the particular matters relied on. Hale v. Fenn, 3 Watts & S. (Pa.) 361.

Set-off.— In Mississippi in an action by an accommodation accepter against the maker of a bill for moneys paid thereon, plaintiff is entitled, by statute, to a bill of particulars of a set-off claimed by defendant. Curry v. Kentz, 33 Miss. 24. Where the action is based on a promissory note given for the balance of an account, an unsettled counterclaim cannot be proved as a set-off unless it is incorporated in a bill of particulars. Graham v. Chubb, 39 Mich. 417.

b. Inconsistent Pleas. Where two or more pleas are interposed they must set up consistent defenses,[82] but pleas are not inconsistent if the proof in support of one will not necessarily dispose of the defense set up by the other.[83]

82. Illinois.— Murtaugh v. Colligan, 28 Ill. App. 433, holding that in an action against the maker of a renewal note to recover the amount paid thereon by plaintiff as surety, defendant cannot repudiate the second note on the ground that its amount was raised after he executed it, and at the same time allege that the first note was paid by the proceeds of a transfer of the second.

Indiana.— Yeatman v. Cullen, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 240, holding that a plea in an action by the assignee of a note before maturity that it was made without consideration and that it was obtained by fraud is unavailable under the law merchant.

Iowa.— Sherman v. Elder, 12 Iowa 433, holding that a plea to a suit on a note that it was given for money loaned by plaintiff through the indorsers as his agents, and that they as such negotiated said loan to defendant, who was the maker of the note, without consideration, and that it was understood and agreed at the time that if the indorsers would indorse the note plaintiff would look to the maker only for payment, is bad.

Missouri.— Sheppard v. Starret, 35 Mo. 367, holding that an answer denying execution of the note in suit and averring payment sets up inconsistent defenses.

Washington.— Lamberton v. Shannon, 13 Wash. 404, 43 Pac. 336, holding that an answer by makers denying execution of the note as principals and also denying "each and every part . . . of the complaint except as herein expressly admitted, explained or qualified," followed by an affirmative defense that they signed as sureties, presents inconsistent defenses.

Canada.— Hawke v. Salt, 3 U. C. C. P. 97, holding that where, in an action against maker and the indorsers, under the statute, the defenses clash or the facts set up are not equally a defense to all the parties they should plead separately; and that therefore a plea by all the defendants that there was no consideration for the making of the note, or for the respective indorsements or either of them, and that plaintiff holds the note without any consideration or value, is bad.

A joint plea by a maker and indorser which is bad as to one is bad as to both. Ward v. Bennett, 20 Ind. 440.

83. Non est factum or non-execution and want of consideration are not inconsistent. Barnes v. Scott, 29 Fla. 285, 11 So. 48; Paducah First Nat. Bank v. Wisdom, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 530, 63 S. W. 461; Mullikin v. Mullikin, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 609, 23 S. W. 352, 25 S. W. 598; Patrick v. Booneville Gas Light Co., 17 Mo. App. 462; Booco v. Mansfield, 66 Ohio St. 121, 64 N. E. 115; Pavey v. Pavey, 30 Ohio St. 600.

Non est factum, and payment, release, or discharge are not inconsistent. Nelson v. Brodhaek, 44 Mo. 596, 100 Am. Dec. 328.

Non est factum and alteration.— In an action on a bill single, payable to a firm of which one of the obligors is a partner, defendant may plead non est factum, and a special plea that the name and seal of one of the obligors have been canceled without his consent. Tindal v. Bright, Minor (Ala.) 103. And an answer pleading non est factum and admitting the signing, but alleging certain subsequent unauthorized alterations, is not demurrable, as containing at the same time an admission and a denial of the execution of the note. Wiltfong v. Schafer, 121 Ind. 264, 23 N. E. 91.

Non-execution and fraud.— One sued as maker of a note may deny its execution, and also set up that, if the signature is genuine, it was obtained by fraud. Citizens' Bank v. Closson, 29 Ohio St. 78.

General denial and statute of limitations are not inconsistent. Lawrence v. Peck, 3 S. D. 645, 54 N. W. 808.

Failure of consideration and purchase after maturity.—Where in an action by the transferee of a note against the maker the latter pleads failure of consideration and also that plaintiff purchased the note after maturity, both pleas may stand, although on its face the transfer appears to have been made before maturity. Pinson v. Bass, 114 Ga. 575, 40 S. E. 747.

Want of consideration and payment are not inconsistent. Roche v. Union Trust Co., (Ind. App. 1899) 52 N. E. 612.

Separate pleas of payment made in different ways are not improper. Babcock v. Callender, 17 Conn. 34.

Payment and denial of plaintiff's title.—A plea of payment is not inconsistent with a denial of plaintiff's ownership, nor is it an admission thereof. Cavitt v. Tharp, 30 Mo. App. 131.

Fraud and special agreement.—A plea of fraudulent procuration of the note in suit is not inconsistent with a further defense that there was an agreement between plaintiff and defendant that the latter should not be concluded by the note, but that he might afterward show that it did not correctly represent the amount due by him. Gates v. Dundon, 18 N. Y. Suppl. 149, 42 N. Y. St. 660.

Set-off and denial of plaintiff's title.— In an action on notes given for the price of a machine, brought by plaintiff as a transferee of the notes without indorsement by the payee, the answer denied the transfer and set up a counter-claim for a false warranty of the machine, by way of set-off. It was held that such claim of set-off was in no way inconsistent with the denial of plaintiff's ownership of the note, and did not operate as

e. Duplicity. The plea should not be in the alternative or double.[84] Thus a plea alleging failure of consideration and that plaintiff is not a bona fide holder is duplicitous,[85] as is a plea by an indorsee that plaintiff priorly indorsed the note in suit, negotiated it, subsequently paid it, and discharged defendant;[86] but a plea which sets up a good defense is not duplicitous because it also narrates the attendant circumstances or states matter explanatory of the defense relied on.[87]

d. Non-Execution — (1) Specific Allegations. Although there are decisions to the contrary,[88] it is the general rule and in some states it is so provided, that the execution or indorsement of a promissory note is not put in issue by a general denial or plea of the general issue,[89] but that the denial must be specific.[90] an admission of his ownership. Wilson v. Reedy, 32 Minn. 256, 20 N. W. 153.

Plea held good.— In an action against the indorser of a note, negotiable and payable at a chartered bank in Indiana, a plea by defendant that the indorsement was made without consideration, and stating also that the note was not designed to be negotiated in bank is not duplicitous. Niles v. Porter, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 44.

88. Williams v. Miami Powder Co., 36 Ill. App. 107; McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Doucette, 61 Minn. 40, 63 N. W. 95 [But see Cowing v. Peterson, 36 Minn. 130, 3 N. Refiling plea.— Where defendant pleads the general issue, and also that he signed the note as surety, and is discharged by an extension of time granted the maker by plaintiff, and then by leave of court withdraws the general issue, after defendant has testified that a material alteration was made in the note after he signed it, it is not error to allow him to refile the general issue so as to put in issue the signature to the note and the alleged alteration therein. "Not guilty."— In assumpsit on a note, a plea that defendant "is not guilty of the matters therein alleged" is inappropriate. Cunyus v. Guenther, 96 Ala. 564, 11 So. 649.

Execution and delivery by a decedent may be denied generally. Carthage Nat. Bank v. Butterbaugh, 116 Iowa 657, 88 N. W. 954.

Sufficiency.—In Schwenk v. Yost, 9 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 16, which was an action on a note in which defendant's name appeared after that of the makers, with the addition of the printed word "indorser," an affidavit of defense that defendant did not sign as maker but had agreed to indorse and that his signature was affixed thereto as an indorser was held sufficient. So an affidavit of defense denying that defendant gave the note, or authorized or received any consideration for it, or that he owed its amount to the payee or to plaintiff is sufficient to prevent judgment for want of a sufficient affidavit. Anchor Sav. Bank v. Stoneham Tannery Co., 8 Pa. Co. Ct. 303. And the answer of one sued on a note that he never made it and that if his name appears on it the signature is a forgery sufficiently and specifically denies his signature. Ludlow v. Berry, 62 Wis. 78, 22 N. W. 140. An affidavit of defense alleging that defendant had carefully examined the notes on which suit was brought, "and that he has no recollection whatever of having ever signed the same, or delivered the same to the plaintiff," without stating that the signatures were or were not his, is not a compliance with the rule requiring defendant, in his affidavit of defense, "to state specifically, and at length, the nature and character of the same." Woods v. Watkins, 40 Pa. St. 458.

Alteration.— Defendant admitted the execution of a note of the tenor of the one described in the complaint, but alleged that plaintiff had materially altered the same, without his knowledge and consent, by adding the sum of sixty dollars thereto, and that the note so altered was the note sued on, but by reason of said alteration it was not his note, and that he had never made or delivered it. It was held that this did not constitute a denial of the making of the note which plaintiff alleged as his cause of action. Wyckoff v. Johnson, 2 S. D. 91, 48 N. W. 837.

(II) NON FECIT, NON EST FACTUM, OR NON ASSUMPSIT. In modern practice execution is sufficiently denied by a plea of non fecit, non est factum, or a plea to that effect,[91] or by a plea of non assumpsit.[92]

Denial of identity of note.—An answer which admits the making of a note similar to the one sued on, but leaving it to plaintiff to prove the identity of the notes, is not a sufficient denial of the execution of the note to put plaintiff to proof of the same. Sheldon v. Middleton, 10 Iowa 17.

A denial that "for any consideration whatsoever" defendant made, executed, and delivered to plaintiff, etc., is insufficient. Farmers', etc., Bank v. Copsey, 134 Cal. 287, 66 Pac. 324.

Amendment of petition — Necessity of second denial.—Where after denying the signature, plaintiff amends and pleads ratification, and by reference makes the original a part of his amended pleading, and defendant simply denies generally, the original denial of execution is sufficient. Renner v. Thornburg, 111 Iowa 515, 82 N. W. 950.

Refusal of obligee to accept.—Where a sealed note is presented to the obligee for discount and he refuses to accept it, a plea of non est factum, in an action brought in his name, is good. Brooks v. Bobs, 4 Strobh. (S. C.) 38.

Fraudulent procurement.— In an action on a note due one day after date a plea by the maker that he was illiterate, and owed plaintiff a portion of the amount, which was not to be paid until a later date, that the balance was due a short time prior to the commencement of the suit, and that he did not intend to give the note payable at the time it was, but that the payee took advantage of his illiteracy in making it, amounts to a plea of non est factum. Alexander v. Foster, 16 Ark. 660.

Defendant is not compelled to plead non est factum generally with an absolute affidavit of facts supporting, but he may state in a special plea the particular facts and circumstances which amount to a denial of the legal effect or validity of the note, or deny the authority of the agent who made it. Martin v. Dortch, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 479.

Conclusions of law.—An answer alleging that the note sued on "is non est factum as to defendant, it not being a legal promissory note against defendant in this action," and that, owing to sickness, the defendant "was in no condition to execute a legal promissory note," avers only legal conclusions, and is insufficient as a plea of non est factum. Templeton v. Sharp, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 499, 9 S. W. 507, 696.

Denial of legal effect.—A plea not denying the execution of a note sued on, but denying its obligation according to its legal import, is bad. Trask v. Roberts, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 201.

Alteration.—Where the note declared on was for two thousand eight hundred and fifty dollars, and defendant alleged that, when he signed the note, it was for one hundred and fifty dollars, a plea of non est factum is good, although the signature and the paper were that of the original note. Stephens v. Anderson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 36 S. W. 1000.

At common law the plea of non est factum is only used in actions on instruments under seal, and is not applicable in an action on a note or bill. Luna v. Mohr, 3 N. M. 56, 1 Pac. 860.

A plea of non-assignavit does not deny execution. Klyce v. Black, 7 Baxt. (Tenn.) 277.

In Canada the rule making this plea bad is confined to actions between the parties to the instrument and does not extend to their personal representatives. Masson v. Hill, 5 U. C. Q. B. 60.

Action by joint maker for indemnity.— Defendant having been arrested, requested plaintiff to join him as maker of a note to M, his creditor, for the debt, which he did, and plaintiff was obliged to pay the same with costs, etc. Plaintiff then sued to recover this amount, alleging in his declaration that in consideration of plaintiff joining defendant in signing as maker, a note jointly and severally promising to pay M, or order, the sum of, etc., for defendant's use and benefit, defendant promised plaintiff to indemnify him, and that he did join him accordingly. It was held that the making of the note by

(III) Denial of Genuineness of Signature—(A) In General. By statute in some of the states to put plaintiff to proof of execution the genuineness of the signature must be denied,[93] and provisions exist debarring from other defenses a defendant whose signature shall have been proved after his denial of the same.[94]

(B) Who May Deny. The genuineness of the signature may be denied by a person other than the one whose signature it purports to be.[95]

(IV) Negativing Authority of Another. It is held that it is not enough to deny the signing or execution, but that defendant must go further and deny that the instrument was signed or executed by his authority.[96] So where a note purports to have been made by a corporation a denial of corporate execution must state facts sufficient to show that the instrument is not its act and deed.[97] plaintiff was not put in issue by the plea of non assumpsit. Blake v. Harvey, 2 U. C. C. P. 310.

93. A denial of execution made by an administrator sufficiently denies the genuineness of the signature. Ashworth v. Grubbs, 47 Iowa 353.

Denial of signature.—An answer that "defendant denies the signature of the alleged note described in plaintiff's declaration" does not, under Mass. Pub. Stat. c. 167, § 21, contain such "a special denial of the genuineness" of the signature to the note, "and a demand that" it "shall be proved at the trial," as to require the plaintiff to prove the signature. Spooner v. Gilmore, 136 Mass. 248.

An allegation, upon information and belief, that the note declared on is a forgery, is not a specific denial of defendant's signature under the Wisconsin statute. Smith v. Ehnert, 47 Wis. 479, 3 N. W. 26.

Alteration.—A denial that defendant signed the note as it reads above his name is insufficient. Ela v. Sprague, 3 Pinn. (Wis.) 323, 4 Chandl. (Wis.) 52.

94. A denial of having made the note sued on will not incur the penalty. Stockton v. Truxton, 8 La. 224.

The denial by an administrator of the genuineness of the signature of his testator is not within the purview of such a statute. Bradford v. Cooper, 1 La. Ann. 325.

95. Shaw v. Jacobs, 89 Iowa 713, 55 N. W. 333, 56 N. W. 684, 48 Am. St. Rep. 411, 21 L. R. A. 440.

In Maine, by rule of court, counsel for defendant is not permitted to deny the signature, unless he shall have been specially instructed that it is not genuine, or unless defendant in court shall deny the signature to be his, or that it was placed there by his authority. See Libby v. Cowan, 36 Me. 264; McDonald v. Bailey, 14 Me. 101.

96. Richardson v. Finney, 6 Dana (Ky.) 319; Hawkins v. Fellows, 6 Dana (Ky.) 128; Ephraim v. Pollock, 1 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 102. See also Marshall Field Co. v. Oren Ruff-Corn Co., (Iowa 1902) 90 N. W. 618; and infra, XIV, D, 2, d, (VI).

An express denial of authority is sufficient. Hunter v. Reilly, 36 Pa. St. 509. See also Marshall Field Co. v. Oren Ruff-Corn Co., (Iowa 1902) 90 N. W. 618, holding that an allegation that a person who assumed to sign for another did so without authority is sufficiently specific.

Lack of positiveness.— In an action on a note signed K, per N, it is not sufficient to aver that defendant had no recollection of ever delegating power to N to sign the note in question and that he never gave him general power to sign notes. Mitchener v. Kimball, 1 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 111.

A denial of authority in writing is not enough. Authority by parol should also be negatived. Garritt v. Ashcraft, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 38, 39 S. W. 51. It is no defense that defendant did not authorize any one in writing to sign the note for him, unless he also alleges that he was only a surety. Goodpaster v. Triplett, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 638.

In New Hampshire by rule where an individual intends to contest the authority or competency of a party to affix the signature to a note, he must give notice on the record, at the first term of court, that the signature is denied; otherwise it will be regarded as admitted to be executed by competent authority. Williams v. Gilchrist, 11 N. H. 535.

97. Thus in an action on a note signed by a person as president of a corporation and also by him personally, an answer denying corporate execution is insufficient to put in issue the genuineness of the actual signature and is no more than a denial of the subscription of the instrument by the corporation. McCormick v. Stockton, etc., R. Co., 130 Cal. 100, 62 Pac. 267.

Denial of extrinsic matter pleaded to show corporate execution.—Where a note sued on does not on its face purport to be made by defendant, and the extrinsic matter contained in the petition is essential to make out a cause of action, a denial of such matter presents a good defense. Spencer v. Shakers Soc., 23 Ky. L. Rep. 854, 64 S. W. 468.

Denial of authority of corporate officer.— In an action against a corporation on its note signed by its president as such, an answer that the note was given for stock in another corporation subscribed for by him as trustee to avoid the statute, which subscription was not authorized, states a good defense in view of a statute prohibiting a corporation from using its funds in the purchase of stock in another corporation without the written consent of all the stock-holders of each corporation. Midland Steel Co. v. Citizens Nat. Bank, 26 Ind.

(v) Incapacity. Where the legal effect of signing commercial paper is sought to be avoided on the ground of want of capacity to incur the liability charged, the particular facts relied on to establish the defense must be specially pleaded.[98] This rule is applicable to the defenses of coverture,[99] insanity, lunacy,[1] or intoxication.[2] With respect to the defense of infancy it is held that it may be proved under a plea of non assumpsit, but not under a plea of nil debet.[3]

(vi) Joint and Several Execution—(a) In General. In an action on a note purporting to have been made jointly or by several, it will be sufficient for a defendant who seeks to avoid liability to specifically deny execution by himself or to allege such facts as will preclude the idea of his individual liability as maker.[4]

App. 71, 59 N. E. 211. In an action on a corporate note, an allegation that it was executed and delivered in pursuance of a fraudulent conspiracy between plaintiff and an officer of the corporation is an admission of the authority of such officer. Raines v. Coos Bay Nav. Co., 41 Oreg. 135, 68 Pac. 397.

A plea denying the authority of the president of a corporation to sign the note in suit, but not denying his authority to sign such paper generally, is in effect an admission of his general authority. Dexter Sav. Bank v. Friend, 90 Fed. 703.

Specificness.— An answer in an action on a note signed O. R. Co. per O. R. Prest. that O. R. had no authority to sign is sufficiently specific and a good denial of the corporate signature. Marshall Field Co. v. Oren Ruff-Corn Co., (Iowa 1902) 90 N. W. 618.

98. Inability to transact business.— In an action on notes, where the defense was incapacity of the maker to contract, an answer which alleges that defendant's weakness had reached the point of incapacity to contract, and disability to manage or transact the ordinary affairs of business, was a sufficient allegation of the incapacity of the maker. Nichols, etc., Co. v. Hardman, 62 Mo. App. 153.

99. Hughes v. Brown, 3 Bush (Ky.) 660.

If not pleaded the judgment will not be arrested as to defendant's separate property. Phelps v. Brackett, 24 Tex. 236.

If one joint maker pleads coverture, the action may be discontinued as to her and proceeded with against the others. McGuire v. Johnson, 2 Lans. (N. Y.) 305; Shipman v. Allee, 29 Tex. 17.

1. Harrison v. Richardson, 1 M. & Rob. 504. But see Mitchell v. Kingman, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 431.

The plea of lunacy must set up incapacity at the time of execution. Taylor v. Dudley, 5 Dana (Ky.) 308.

A plea that defendant's intestate was insane when he made the note in suit is a plea of non est factum. Milligan v. Pollard, 112 Ala. 465, 20 So. 620.

2. Gore v. Gibson, 9 Jur. 140, 14 L. J. Exch. 151, 13 M. & W. 623. But see Pitt v. Smith, 3 Campb. 33, 13 Rev. Rep. 741, holding evidence in support of this defense to be admissible under the general issue. An answer denying that defendant ever, at any time or place, made, executed, or delivered the note described, and averring that the note was obtained from him while he was so intoxicated as to be unable to understand or know what he was doing, is in effect a denial of the validity of the instrument, but not of its execution. Henry v. Hinman, 21 Minn. 378.

3. Young v. Bell, 1 Cranch. C. C. (U. S.) 342, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 18,152.

4. Lucas v. Baldwin, 97 Ind. 471; Ludlow v. Berry, 62 Wis. 78, 22 N. W. 140 (where an allegation by one defendant that he made or joined in the making of the note in suit, and that if his name appeared thereon the signature was a forgery, was held to be a specific and sufficient denial of the signature within the statute); City Bank v. Kellar, 2 U. C. C. P. 508 (where a plea that defendant did not make the note mentioned in the declaration as therein alleged, was held not to contain a negative pregnant and to be good). See also Leslie v. Emmons, 25 U. C. Q. B. 243, where it was questioned whether the unexplained interlineation of the words "jointly and severally" in a declaration so characterizing the making of a note, could be taken advantage of under a plea of non facit, or whether a special plea was necessary.

Allegation of indorsement for accommodation.—An allegation by one apparent indorser that "he placed his name on the back of the note sued on in this action, as an indorser thereof, for the accommodation and at the request of D. H. Mears, the maker of said note, with the understanding that John Mears should also indorse the same. That there never was any agreement, or understanding that he should be liable on said note in any other manner, or to any greater extent, than as an accommodation indorser thereof," is a sufficient denial of an allegation that he was a joint maker. Parrish v. Mears, 1 Handy (Obio) 492, 12 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 253.

A plea of the general issue by joint makers is insufficient to admit evidence that one signed as surety and that the other agreed with the maker for an extension of the time of payment without the surety's consent. Rawlings v. Cole, 67 Mich. 431, 35 N. W. 66. And a plea by one defendant that the note is the separate note of one of the defendants, and was given to and accepted by plaintiff in full satisfaction of the debt, is bad on special demurrer, because it amounts to the general issue. Van Ness v. Forrest, 8 Cranch (U. S.) 30, 3 L. ed. 478.

Denial of execution by coöbligor in default.—A plea by one denying execution by himself

(B) Partnership Execution. The denial of execution by a firm must exclude the idea that any member thereof made the instrument on its behalf.[5] A mere denial by one that he is a copartner is not a denial of execution;[6] nor is a denial by one that he made the note in suit or authorized its execution a denial of its execution by the firm whose name it bears.[7]

(VII) ADMISSION OF EXECUTION. Execution is admitted by failure to deny the making;[8] and this omission is not supplied by a denial of delivery[9] or of indebtedness,[10] or by averments of illegal consideration[11] or payment.[12] So where defendant answers denying the execution of the instrument but alleging matter in avoidance of its legal effect,[13] or extrinsic matters of defense,[14] his

and a coöbligor who has suffered a default is bad. Isaack v. Porter, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 452.

Denial of inference from descriptive words. — Where a count charging several persons as makers adds the descriptive word "partners" without alleging that they executed the note as such, a plea denying a partnership presents an immaterial issue. Karch v. Emerick, 59 Ill. 184.

If the answer set out the note which on its face shows a joint and several liability, such a liability is admitted notwithstanding other allegations to the contrary. Savage v. Savage, 36 Oreg. 268, 59 Pac. 461.

5. A plea that the firm did not execute and deliver the note, which elsewhere states that a member of the firm did execute and deliver it, without negativing the authority of such member, taken as a whole, is not a plea of non est factum. Wingate v. Atlanta Nat. Bank, 95 Ga. 1, 22 S. E. 37.

6. Hawkins v. Fellowes, 6 Dana (Ky.) 128; Isaack v. Porter, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 452; Ferguson v. Wood, 23 Tex. 177. So in an action on a note signed by defendant with the addition of "& Co." if defendant instead of pleading the non-joinder of a copartner, files a sworn plea of no partnership, a recovery may be had against him on a proper declaration, if he executed the note whether in fact he had a copartner or not. Hirsch v. Oliver, 91 Ga. 554, 18 S. E. 354, where it did not appear that any person was sued except defendant.

In Indiana in an action originating before a justice of the peace, where there was no plea in abatement or denial of the execution of the note, all other matter of defense, except the statute of limitations and set-off, may be given in evidence without a plea. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Evans, 28 Ind. App. 518, 63 N. E. 389.

Individual execution of corporate note.— Where defendant signed a note, adding to his signature "Pres't of the Henderson Coal Co.," and was sued thereon, his failure to traverse the petition charging him as personally liable on the note admitted its truth. Burbank v. Posey, 7 Bush (Ky.) 372.

Anomalous indorsement.—An answer by defendant, sued as the maker of a note, that he signed it as an indorser, without averring that he made any agreement with anybody that his liability should be that of an indorser, and without denying that he signed it before delivery and at the time of its execution, is defective, since under such circumstances the presumption of law is that he signed it as maker or guarantor. Bartlett v. Jones, 4 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 292, Clev. L. Rep. 219.

Denying agreement below signature.—An answer admitting the execution of a note but averring that an agreement below the signature is no part of the instrument admits the whole writing. Black v. Epstein, 93 Mo. App. 459, 67 S. W. 736.

Identification of note.—An admission "that at the time mentioned in the complaint, they [the defendants] made and endorsed a note like that set forth therein," unaccompanied by anything tending to show that it was a distinct note from that described in the complaint, must be held to refer to the note sued on. Moody v. Andrews, 39 N. Y. Super. Ct. 302.

Refusal to admit.—An answer which does not deny that defendant is maker, but simply refuses to admit the making is insufficient. Watson v. Barr, 37 S. C. 463, 16 S. E. 188.

A plea of want of consideration implies that plaintiff is a holder of the note in suit without value or consideration paid therefor. Cunyus v. Guenther, 96 Ala. 564, 11 So. 649.

An accepter should not only state facts to show a want of consideration, but should also negative the idea that there was some benefit or advantage to the drawer of the bill at whose request it was accepted. Tittle v. Bonner, 53 Miss. 578.

Aider by other averments.— Where the specific facts pleaded are insufficient to establish the defense, the pleading is not aided by a general averment of want of consideration. Parker v. Jewett, 52 Minn. 514, 55 N. W. 56.

The following have been held to be good pleas of a want of consideration: That the note was given for a pretended indebtedness. Hall v. Morrison, 92 Ga. 311, 18 S. E. 293; Dunning v. Pond, 5 Minn. 302; Herklotz v. Chase, 32 Fed. 433. That a promised loan for which the note was given was never made. Lewis v. Simon, 101 Ala. 546, 14 So. 331; Ballard v. Turner, 58 Ind. 127. That the note was a gratuity. Poulton v. Dalmage, 6 U. C. Q. B. 277. That the due-bill sued on was given by defendant merely to show the receipt of the amount expressed as a gift. Burk v. Kerr, 12 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 191. That defendant signed as surety after delivery without consideration moving to the principal or himself. Hartman v. Redman, 21 Mo. App. 124. That in consideration that a machine, purchased on plaintiff's representation that it would do certain work, defendant had paid plaintiff a sum of money, for which he had received no consideration, because of the plaintiff's misrepresentations and the failure of the machine to work as represented. Keystone Mfg. Co. v. Forsyth, 85 N. W. 262. That the acceptance on which a recovery was sought was for a debt due plaintiffs by a third person; that defendant did not promise to pay the debt when made, or request plaintiffs to give credit to the third person; that the acceptance was not in consideration of any forbearance to, or release of, the third person; that no security for the debt was given up; and that defendant has received no advantage, and plaintiffs no detriment, from the acceptance. Ohleyer v. Bernheim, 67 Miss. 75, 7 So. 319 [citing Nelson v. Serle, 1 H. & H. 456, 3 Jur. 290, 8 L. J. Exch. 305, 4 M. & W. 795].

The following pleas have been held to be insufficient: That the note was given for a pretended indebtedness — defendant admitting a purchase of the payee prior to the date of the note and failing to allege payment for the goods purchased. Dunning v. Pond, 5 Minn. 296. That by a parol contemporaneous agreement payment was not to be enforced, as the note was only a memorandum of an advancement by a parent to his child. Weaver v. Fries, 85 Ill. 356. That defendant indorsed for the accommodation of the maker who received no sufficient consideration for the note.

(II) Sufficiency of General Averments. There are decisions, however, some of them based on statutory provisions, which hold that general averments of want of jurisdiction, or pleas of the general issue, are sufficient to require proof of consideration on the part of plaintiff or to permit defendant to show that there was no consideration in fact,[16] especially where the consideration is fully averred in the declaration.[17]

(III) Right to Plead to Part of Instrument. Want of consideration may be pleaded to a part as well as to the whole of a cause of action evidenced by the instrument sued on, when limited to that part,[18] but a plea of want of consideration is improper if there was any consideration whatever.[19]

(IV) Plea by Joint Maker. A plea by one joint maker that the note in suit was without consideration as to him is bad unless it negative a consideration to a third party with his knowledge or detriment to the promisee.[20]

Dunning v. Pond, 5 Minn. 296. That defendant was only security on the note, and received no consideration for his suretyship (Brokaw v. Kelsey, 20 Ill. 303); and so where defendant pleads that he was only a guarantor, and the contract of guaranty was a part of the same transaction as the making of the note (Hippach v. Makeever, 166 Ill. 136, 46 N. E. 790). That the note in suit was executed in consideration of defendant's liability on another note on which there was in fact no liability, because of failure to give defendant notice of protest, it not appearing that the original note was discounted, in which case only would notice be required under the statute. Farmers', etc., Bank v. Small, 2 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 88. That the note in suit was given in renewal of a note for like amount given for stock in a corporation of which the plaintiff was an officer; that the officers had fraudulently represented the property of the corporation to be worth a certain sum, free of encumbrance, when in fact it was encumbered to nearly its full value; that the corporation was insolvent when the note was given, and the capital stock was worthless, it not appearing that the encumbrances rendered the stock valueless, that the company is still insolvent, or that defendant was ignorant of the encumbrances when the renewal was given. Long v. Johnson, 15 Ind. App. 498, 44 N. E. 552.

Where there is a supposed consideration and an alleged insufficiency of it to support the instrument, the pleader may set it out for the purpose of referring its want of sufficiency directly to the judgment of the court, but he is not required to do so, and it will be sufficient if he aver in the language of the statute or in any other equivalent language that defendant made the note without any good or valuable consideration therefor. (v) Plea of Failure as Plea of Want of Consideration. A plea drawn as a plea of failure of consideration may be upheld as a plea of want of consideration, where the facts alleged so warrant.[21]

(vi) Contradictory Averments. A plea otherwise good, is nullified by other averments showing a good consideration in fact.[22]

f. Total or Partial Failure of Consideration — (i) In General. At common law, and on the ground that the terms of a written instrument could not be varied by parol, a total or partial failure of consideration could not be pleaded, but the remedy of defendant was by a distinct action.[23] The common-law rule, however, has been generally abrogated or relaxed by statute or judicial action. These pleas when permissible should be framed on the theory that originally there was a consideration, which wholly or partially fails because of something occurring subsequently, and must state facts sufficient to defeat or diminish a recovery.[24]

Ind. 134; Anderson v. Meeker, 31 Ind. 245; Wright v. McKitrick, 2 Kan. App. 508, 43 Pac. 977. See also Moyer v. Brand, 102 Ind. 301, 26 N. E. 125 [distinguishing Bingham v. Kimball, 33 Ind. 184; Anderson v. Meeker, 31 Ind. 245], where the allegation was that "as to him, it [the note] was executed without any consideration whatever," which was held to be in effect an averment that so far as he, defendant, was concerned there was absolutely no consideration, the defense being limited to himself.

"His agreement" to pay.— The separate answer of one defendant that his agreement to pay the note was without consideration is not demurrable, if he also allege that the note itself was without consideration. Ohio Thresher, etc., Co. v. Hensel, 9 Ind. App. 328, 36 N. E. 716.

Denial of copartnership.—A plea to a complaint on an alleged firm note that defendant was not a member of the firm when it was made, that plaintiff had notice of its dissolution, and that the note was made by another defendant without consideration, or the consent of defendant answering, sufficiently alleges a want of consideration, although double and inartificial. Starr v. Hunt, 25 Ind. 313.

21. Thus a plea that the note in suit was given to secure the support and maintenance of the mother of one of the defendants during her life, with a contemporaneous agreement that on her death the note should be surrendered as null and void; that the beneficiary was dead and that there was no other consideration, wherefore the consideration had failed, was held to be good as a plea of want of consideration, the agreement, presumably oral, being treated as surplusage. Kirkpatrick v. Taylor, 43 Ill. 207. See also Armstrong v. Webster, 30 Ill. 333, where the plea in substance was that the note in suit was given to prevent a distress for rent claimed by plaintiff to be due from one of the defendants when in fact no rent was due and he was not otherwise indebted.

Failure and partial failure of consideration generally see CONTRACTS.

The object of the Georgia act of 1836 was to allow a plea of partial failure "in such cases, under such circumstances, and between such parties" as would render proper a plea of total failure if there had been such total failure of consideration. Simmons v. Blackman, 14 Ga. 318.

Sealed note.— The rule that a plea of failure of consideration cannot be used as a defense to a specialty has reference to such instruments as are executed with the ceremonies necessary to specialities at common law, and does not apply to a promissory note purporting to be over the hand and seal of the makers but signed and sealed by one, the other signing only as security. Albertson v. Holloway, 16 Ga. 377.

Time of failure.— In an action on a note, where the defense is a failure of consideration, a demurrer that the answer does not show that such failure occurred at or before the commencement of the suit is bad. Lewellen v. Crane, 113 Ind. 289, 15 N. E. 515.

The plea should allege the actual consideration and that there was never any other. Grunninger v. Philpot, 5 Biss. (U. S.) 82, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 5,852. And see Garriott v. Abbott, 28 Ind. 9, where an allegation of the failure to fulfil a promise was held insufficient, because not stating that such promise constituted the entire or only consideration.

Between the original parties to a note a partial failure of consideration must be pleaded as a partial defense. Union, etc., Works v. New York, etc., Co., 13 N. Y. St. 701. See also Fisher v. Sharpe, 5 Daly (N. Y.) 214.

cannot be shown under a plea of total failure,[26] it has also been held that the latter plea includes the former.[27]

(IV) AVERMENTS AS TO EXTENT OF FAILURE AND DAMAGE. In pleading a partial failure of consideration the extent of the failure as well as the specific damage sustained should be appropriately averred.[28]

g. Illegal Consideration. A plea of illegality of consideration must sufficiently and with reasonable certainty set out the specific facts which are claimed to constitute the illegality.[29]

Consideration invalid by operation of law. — A plea which is open to the construction that there was a consideration in fact, but that the consideration was invalid by operation of law, is bad. Coyle v. Fowler, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 472, where the plea was that the note in suit was not executed on a consideration good and valid in law.

Uncertainty.—A plea alleging that the consideration of the note sued on was certain tickets, checks, or notes purporting that money would be paid to the receiver, holder, or bearer, which said tickets, notes, or checks were intended to be used as a currency, or medium of trade, in lieu of money, the said tickets, notes, or checks not being authorized so as to be used or put in circulation, was demurrable for uncertainty in not showing the character of the tickets, etc., or by whom they were issued. Ford v. Ragland, 25 Ark. 612.

Sale of fertilizers not inspected, etc.— In an action on a note given for the purchase-price of fertilizers, an answer alleging failure to comply with the Alabama act of March 2, 1871, requiring the inspection, stamping, and branding of fertilizers, need not further allege that the sale was made in this state; if made elsewhere that fact is matter for replication. Renfro v. Loyd, 64 Ala. 94.

The statute against gambling contracts need not be specially pleaded. Watson v. Bayley, 2 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 67, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,276.

Lottery tickets.—An affidavit of defense, stating that the consideration of a check is for lottery tickets, but omitting to add that the sale was in this state, is insufficient. Bows v. White, 2 Miles (Pa.) 140.

Money lost on wager.—Where, by statute, a note for which the consideration is money or property won on a bet or wager is void and a recovery is authorized of the person winning, provided that action therefor be commenced within ninety days after payment thereof, an answer alleging that an indorsement was made as a bet on a horse-race presents a good defense, although in effect it is an attempt to recover the property lost on the race and was filed more than ninety days after payment of the bet. Roff v. Harmon, (Indian Terr. 1901) 64 S. W. 755.

h. Fraud — (1) In General. The facts constituting the alleged fraud should be pleaded specifically. It is not sufficient to charge fraud generally or to state its commission as a conclusion,[30] but the answer will be sufficient if it sets out facts from which the fraud is apparent or makes out a complete or partial defense on that ground.[31] There are a number of decisions, however, to the effect that fraud may be pleaded generally or shown under the general issue.[32]

Suppression of prosecution.—Objection that a note was void because a part of the consideration was to suppress a criminal prosecution, and to suppress evidence in a pending prosecution, was bad, where the plea contained no notice of such a defense. Evidence of fraud is inadmissible under a plea of want of consideration, hence it is error to strike out a good plea of fraud on the ground that it is the same as a prior plea of want of consideration. Hawkins v. Nation, 39 Ind. 50. In Collins v. Townsend, 58 Cal. 608, a plea that the note sued on was obtained by false and fraudulent representations of the payee, "and without consideration therefor," was construed to allege that the note was without consideration because of the fraudulent representations.

Fraud is not shown by allegations that plaintiff neglected to deduct for short weight from the amount for which the note was to be given as the purchase-price of merchandise. Kooker v. Addis, 1 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 327.

Illiteracy.—An answer that defendant, a surety, was unskilled in business, unable to read or write, and ignorant of the form of note which he signed, and that at the time of its execution plaintiff was present and failed to read or explain the instrument to defendant, although the latter relied upon him so to do, does not allege fraud. Goodacre v. Skinner, 47 Kan. 575, 28 Pac. 705.

Failure to make promised loan.— That the note was executed on plaintiff's promise to make a loan to defendant which he failed to keep does not show fraud. Lewis v. Simon, 101 Ala. 546, 14 So. 331.

Partial defense.— A plea of fraud is sufficient if it sets forth facts constituting a partial defense and presents enough to enable defendant to go to the jury. Higginbotham v. Conway, 113 Ga. 1155, 39 S. E. 550.

Identification of note in suit.— An averment that the payees claimed to have had two of defendant's notes, of similar date and amount, one of which was a forgery or fraudulently obtained, but without an averment that the note in suit was not the one actually given by him is insufficient. Black v. Halstead, 39 Pa. St. 64.

Negativing truth of representations.— An allegation that the note in suit was given on the fraudulent representation that defendant was liable on a certain bond, and to avoid litigation, should also allege that he was not liable on the bond. Howe Mach. Co. v. Brown, 78 Ind. 209.

(II) INDUCEMENT. It should also be averred that the representations were made with a fraudulent intent to deceive or with knowledge of their falsity,[33] and that defendant relied on or was influenced by the fraud practised.[34]

(III) KNOWLEDGE OF FRAUD BY PLAINTIFF. In an action by one who is presumably a bona fide holder, it must be alleged that he took the instrument with knowledge of the fraud.[35]

i. Mistake. Where mistake is relied on, the answer must set forth the facts and circumstances of the transaction that it can be seen that there was mistake in fact.[36] A plea in abatement setting up a mistake should ask for reformation or for affirmative relief.[37]

j. Duress. Like pleas of fraud or mistake the plea of coercion or duress must specifically state the facts which are relied on to establish the defense.[38] Where another than the payee sues it must be alleged that he took the note after maturity or that he had notice of the circumstances under which it was procured.[39]

Sufficiency.— In an action on a note given for an interest in certain processes for making paint, it appeared that the note was one of several which by agreement were deposited with a third person, to be by him handed to the payee on the demonstration, by a test of the paints and processes, that former representations made in regard to them by the payee were correct. It was held that defendant, having substantially alleged in his answer that the note was delivered in reliance on false representations, was not bound to allege further the payee's fraudulent conduct in conducting and reporting on the test, as that was merely evidence to rebut plaintiff's allegation that the notes were given, not on the payee's representations, but on an actual test of their truth, which was satisfactory to defendant. Duplicity.—A plea which after stating that the note in suit was obtained by duress details the circumstances is not objectionable for duplicity. Bingham v. Sessions, 6 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 13.

Sufficiency.— A bill to cancel notes upon the ground that they were given under duress is sufficient if it set out facts showing in what the alleged duress consisted, although it fails to set out with great particularity the immediate injury which the notes were given to prevent. ship is admitted by failure to deny the same,[40] or by pleading immaterial matters which are insufficient to require proof of title;[41] but is not admitted by setting off matters arising out of the original transaction,[42] or after denying the transfer by alleging that if it were in fact made, the assignee had notice of existing defenses.[43]

(II) Specific or General Averments. In many cases it has been held that the transfer to or the title or interest of plaintiff to the instrument in suit and his consequent right to maintain the action may be put in issue by a general denial or a denial which is tantamount thereto.[44] In others it is held to be necessary to plead affirmatively and to set out the facts and circumstances relied on to defeat plaintiff's claim of title, to explicitly deny ownership or possession, or facts by which they could have been lawfully acquired.[45]

Power of corporation to indorse.—In an action by an indorsee against the maker of a note made payable to an insurance company, the declaration averred that the note was duly indorsed, and the answer averred that the corporation never had any legal existence or power to transfer the note by indorsement or otherwise. It was held, upon proof having been made of the incorporation of the company, with authority to indorse notes, that the making and due indorsement of the note were admitted by the pleadings. Ogden v. Raymond, 5 Bosw. (N. Y.) 16.

Failure to deny possession.— Where a complaint alleges that a note was indorsed by defendant, and afterward transferred to plaintiff, and that the latter is possessed thereof, an answer denying the transfer to him puts his title in issue, although it does not specially deny his possession of the note. Chadwick v. Booth, 22 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 23, 13 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 249.

An allegation of an agreement to receive certain stock and to cancel and deliver up the note in suit is not an allegation of the non-existence of the note or a denial of an allegation that plaintiff then held it. Diven v. Spicer, 1 Kan. 103.

Payment by original holder.— An answer that the holder of a note payable to bearer deposited it as collateral security with one who transferred it to plaintiff as collateral security; that the original holder paid the note and is entitled to its return states no defense. Canadian Bank of Commerce v. Ross, 22 U. C. C. P. 497.

Redundant averment of fraud.— In an action by a person other than the payee of the note, the answer averred substantially that plaintiff never was its lawful holder or owner; that before suit defendant had paid it in full to the payee, who was then its lawful owner and holder. It was held that a further averment as to the fraudulent practices by which plaintiff had obtained the note was redundant and properly stricken out. Carpenter v. Reynolds, 58 Wis. 666, 17 N. W. 300.

Note obtained by false representations.— An answer alleging that a person deceased held obligations which thereafter came into plaintiff's possession, that plaintiff demanded payment thereof and defendant, believing him to be the personal representative of the deceased creditor, gave to him the note in suit, that plaintiff was not the personal representative of the deceased, that the obligations in question were not transferred to him, and that he was not entitled to receive payment on account thereof is a sufficient denial of the right to maintain the action. Quinlan v. Fairchild, 76 Hun (N. Y.) 312, 27 N. Y. Suppl. 689, 59 N. Y. St. 84.

In an action on a bill of exchange payable to the drawer's order and unindorsed by him, an answer denying that plaintiff is the owner and holder of the bill in suit and alleging that he did not get it in the due course of trade is a sufficient denial of its transfer. Louisville Banking Co. v. McDonald, 4 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 255, Clev. L. Rep. 173.

Identification of note.— An answer that at the time alleged in the complaint, defendant "made and endorsed a note like that set forth therein," without anything to show that it was a distinct note, does not put in issue an allegation that plaintiff is the lawful holder, etc. Moody v. Andrews, 39 N. Y. Super. Ct. 302.

Suing without authority.— A plea that the payee of a note wrote his name on the back thereof and instituted suit in the name of plaintiff without the knowledge or consent of the latter is insufficient, unless it is further stated that plaintiff had not subsequently sanctioned or approved the use of his name. Harpham v. Haynes, 30 Ill. 404.

Corporate capacity to contract.— In an action by a bank on a note payable to it, a plea of the general issue prima facie admits the capacity of the bank to contract and sue. Herbert v. Nashville Bank, 1 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 286.

Aider by complaint.—Where by statute actions upon promissory notes payable at a bank or banking house must be brought in the name of the person having legal title, a plea denying legal title in plaintiff, but failing to aver that the note was payable at a bank or banking house is not defective, when that fact appears from the complaint. In Louisiana a plea admitting the execution of a promissory note, but denying that it was legally transferred to plaintiff so as to enable him to sue on it, is a general defense, not a mere dilatory or declinatory exception. Questi v. Griffe, 3 La. 306.

That the party suing is liable as payer upon the note sued on is matter in bar and not of abatement. Stone v. Brooks, 6 How. (Miss.) 373.

An allegation that plaintiffs are not in possession of the note in suit, but that when the action was commenced it is in the possession of a third party, is immaterial. Hayward v. Grant, 13 Minn. 165, 97 Am. Dec. 228.

right to maintain the action is put in issue by a denial that plaintiff is the owner and holder or the real party in interest, or by averments to that effect,[48] supplemented by an allegation of transfer to or ownership of another,[49] who should be identified with reasonable particularity.[50]

(v) Denial of Immaterial Averments. Allegations merely characterizing plaintiff's title need not be controverted,[51] and the denial of an allegation contained in the complaint, which is no more than a legal conclusion of title or ownership, and for that reason immaterial, does not raise a material issue without specially controverting the facts upon which the conclusion rests, or showing other facts inconsistent therewith.[52]

(vi) Denial on Information and Belief. Where to controvert a material allegation it is sufficient to deny knowledge or information in respect thereto sufficient to form a belief, the transfer or indorsement may be denied in that form,[53] although the sufficiency of a plea in this form has been denied.[54]

(vii) Indorsement — (a) In General. By the law merchant in an action by an indorsee against a maker, drawer, or accepter plaintiff was required to prove his interest or title without a special plea;[55] but in many of the states, by statute or by a practice which has sprung up without legislative sanction, no such proof posed right in the payee's assignee. City Bank v. Smith, 20 U. C. C. P. 93.

Suit in fictitious name.— A plea that the suit is brought by the true owner in a fictitious name, it not appearing by the plea that defendant has any defense to the note, is bad. Epting v. Jones, 47 Ga. 622.

48. Ebersole v. Morrison First Nat. Bank, 36 Ill. App. 267.

In the federal courts a plea that plaintiff is not the owner of the note on which suit is brought and alleging it to be the property of a citizen of the state where the action was commenced is good, notwithstanding a statute of that state providing that the title of a bona fide holder cannot be inquired into except to let in some defense. Lanning v. Lockett, 10 Fed. 451.

50. Christian name.— An allegation of assignment to a person whose christian name was unknown to defendant is bad for uncertainty. Doyle v. Watt, 12 Ind. 342.

Designation of different person on record.— A plea averring who is the real owner of the note sued upon, and that the suit is instituted for his benefit, and pleading an offset against him, is a good plea, although a different person is indicated on the record as the beneficiary of the note in suit. Bowen v. Snell, 9 Ala. 481.

Negotiation by plaintiff.— In an action by the payee of a note against the maker, a plea that the payee procured it to be negotiated in bank for his own benefit, whereby the note became the property of the bank, and that the right to demand and receive the money accrued to, and became vested in, the bank, is sufficient as an allegation that the bank has absolute ownership of the note. Tuggle v. Adams, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 429.

51. Downer v. Read, 17 Minn. 493.

An allegation that plaintiffs are partners, or the denial of an immaterial allegation to that effect, does not form a material issue where the complaint contains no allegation that the note was made to plaintiffs as partners. Hayward v. Grant, 13 Minn. 165, 97 Am. Dec. 228.

In New York an allegation that defendant "has not sufficient knowledge or information to form a belief as to whether the plaintiff is now the lawful owner and holder of said note, therefore cannot admit or deny the same," puts the ownership of the note in issue. Temple v. Murray, 6 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 329.

In Ohio an answer in which defendant says he is ignorant as to whether plaintiff is the owner or indorsee of the note sued on, and therefore denies the same, is a good denial that the note was ever indorsed to plaintiff or that he is the holder of it. is required in the absence of an appropriate plea putting the title or interest in issue,[56] as by general averments,[57] by a denial of the authenticity of the signature,[58] or by a denial of ownership or title,[59] and an assertion that the same is in a third person.[60] The effect of denying indorsement is to deny the signature, delivery, and transfer.[61] It has also been held that a plea of non assumpsit,[62] an averment that plaintiff is not the owner[63] and holder of the instrument sued on[64] or the real party in interest,[65] or an averment that the instrument was never indorsed so as to transfer title[66] is not sufficient. Neither is an allegation of indorsement met by an averment of an assignment by the payee to plaintiff and others.[67]

(B) Conditional Indorsement. The condition of an indorsement should be pleaded,[68] although it may be shown under a denial of the indorsement.[69]

(C) Alteration by Filling Blanks. Where it is sought to question the identity of the instrument because of alleged unauthorized additions or filling in of blanks non est factum is the proper plea.[70]

(D) Agreement as to Nature of Liability. A plea by an indorser that he and the other indorser were cosureties is insufficient to show an agreement that they were to be liable jointly and not severally.[71]

An averment of delivery of the instrument to plaintiff as agent, and its detention by him in fraud of his principal is tantamount to a denial of its indorsement to plaintiff (Adams v. Jones, 12 A. & E. 455, 9 L. 70. An unauthorized writing over the signature of an indorser must be questioned by a special plea of non est factum. Harding v. Waters, 6 Lea (Tenn.) 324.

Necessity of pleading knowledge of want of authority.— A plea of non est factum filed by the accommodation indorser of a note which was left to be filled up by the maker should aver that the indorsee knew at the time he received the note that the maker was not authorized to insert the amount with which the note was filled up. (E) Denial of Immediate Indorsement. An indorser of a bill is not estopped from denying the making or indorsement by the drawer,[72] although the right of an indorsee to deny the indorsement of the party from whom he directly derives title has been positively denied.[73]

(VIII) ASSIGNMENT—(A) In General. Assignment to plaintiff is denied by a plea of non-assignavit,[74] or by a denial of the assignment in general terms,[75] but not by a plea of non est factum.[76] Nor is it sufficient to deny that the instrument was assigned in writing or that it was assigned for a valuable consideration.[77]

(B) Incapacity to Assign. The incapacity of the assignor to transfer the instrument in question must be pleaded in abatement.[78]

(C) Incapacity to Acquire. An allegation of sale, discount, and transfer to a national bank simply questions the right of the bank to acquire the instrument by purchase.[79]

(D) Transfer by Plaintiff. A plea that the instrument in suit was transferred by plaintiff is not broad enough. Defendant must go further and negative a reacquisition of it by plaintiff, or allege that he had no title to or interest in it at the time of suit,[80] or set up a defense to the instrument,[81] and a plea that the note in suit was assigned, which fails to name the assignee, is in effect an allegation of indorsement in blank and is insufficient if it does not aver delivery.[82]

1. Bona Fides—(I) IN GENERAL. To question the bona fides of plaintiff or of the transaction whereby the note was obtained or by which he acquired the instrument in suit, or to enable defendant to avail himself of a defense which would have been good but for the transfer, he must allege specific facts sufficient to compel plaintiff to show that he is a bona fide holder for value or to defeat a recovery by him.[83] The allegations must be positive. 75. Denial of each and every allegation.— Where a complaint by the assignees alleged assignment and delivery before suit, and that they were the owners thereof, an answer denying each and every allegation of the complaint, except execution and delivery to the payees, presents a material issue as to ownership. Tullis v. Shannon, 3 Wash. 716, 29 Pac. 449. See also Wilson v. Black, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 509, holding a denial of assignment to be bad because amounting to the general issue.

An allegation that the assignment of the note in suit was without consideration is insufficient to show that plaintiff is not the beneficial owner. Treadway v. Cobb, 18 Ind. 36, further holding that the answer would be good if it also averred that the assignment was intended as a gift.

78. In Mississippi the defense to an action on a note that it has been assigned to plaintiff by a bank in violation of the statute of 1840, prohibiting banks from assigning their credits and choses in action, can be made only by a plea in abatement. Commercial Bank v. Thompson, 7 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 443; Lanier v. Trigg, 6 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 641, 45 Am. Dec. 293; Planters Bank v. Sharp, 4 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 17.

So an answer, in a suit on a note held as collateral, alleging that the security was assigned to secure plaintiff and another not joined in the suit, and not averring that the other's interest existed at the time of the suit, is bad, as to the interest of the latter. Jones v. Hawkins, 17 Ind. 550.

81. Redelivery to payee.— In an action by the indorsee, an allegation that he redelivered the note to the payee is insufficient, where no defense to the note as against the payee is set up and the legal title to the note is still in plaintiff. Caldwell v. Lawrence, 84 Ill. 161.

gations of belief, or by way of inference, or made as conclusions of law are insufficient.[84]

(II) Want of Consideration For Transfer. Thus defendant must aver facts from which it positively appears or from which it can reasonably be inferred that plaintiff acquired the instrument in suit without consideration [85] and in some jurisdictions the answer must contain in addition an explicit denial that plaintiff is a bona fide holder for value.[86] Allegations in the complaint which prima facie show that the transfer was made for value, in good faith before maturity, must be taken to be true unless appropriately controverted in the answer,[87] but immaterial allegations of a transfer for value need not be denied.[88]

(III) Acquisition After Maturity. If the ground of defense is that plaintiff acquired the instrument after maturity and hence subject to all the field, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 174, 8 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 50.

Generality.— An affidavit of defense alleging procurement of the note by fraud and failure of consideration and denying ownership, is sufficient to put plaintiff to proof, although it would have been better to have been more specific. Reamer v. Bell, 79 Pa. St. 292.

General issue.— Where plaintiff alleges facts which prima facie constitute him an innocent holder, proof to show that he is not a bona fide holder may be introduced under the general issue. Rischa v. Planters' Nat. Bank, 84 Tex. 413, 19 S. W. 610.

It is sufficient to allege in effect that the circumstances of the transfer were such as to subject the instrument in the hands of the transferee to such defenses as would have been available against a purchaser for value before maturity. Wiggins v. Kirkpatrick, 114 N. C. 298, 19 S. E. 152, where it was averred that if the note was received at all by plaintiff, it was "received coupled with and subject to all the equities" between defendant and the payee.

Relief by cross bill.— Where a joint maker on notes filed a complaint in equity in the nature of a cross bill, alleging that he was a mere surety, and that the holder was not a bona fide holder, the cross bill was properly dismissed, since an adequate remedy at law existed by pleading and proving such defenses in the action at law on the notes. Allentown First Nat. Bank v. Eichelberger, 1 Woodw. Dec. (Pa.) 397.

Transfer in payment of antecedent debt.— An allegation by the maker that the payee received the note for a specific purpose but in violation of the agreement indorsed it to plaintiff for an antecedent debt states no defense. Bardsley v. Delp, 88 Pa. St. 420 [reversing 6 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 366].

Negativing presumption of valuable consideration.— A plea that the note was transferred to plaintiff for a preëxisting debt due by the payee is insufficient without negativing the presumption that plaintiff acquired the note for value. Louisville Banking Co. v. Howard, 123 Ala. 197, 26 So. 207, 82 Am. St. Rep. 126.

defenses existing as between the original parties, the facts relative thereto must be appropriately alleged ;[89] but if the burden of showing good faith is on plaintiff and he fails to plead the acquisition of the instrument before maturity [90] and without notice of any existing defenses,[91] defendant is relieved of the necessity of interposing such a defense.

(IV) TRANSFER TO AVOID DEFENSE. The same requirements as to the necessity of alleging specific facts to question plaintiff's standing as a bona fide holder apply, where to defeat the action defendant relies on the fact that the transfer was made to avoid or defeat a valid defense.[92] If the answer is on belief, sufficient reasons therefor should be stated [93] and it has been held that the defense

Eich v. Greeley, 112 Cal. 171, 44 Pac. 483.

Sufficiency.— Where the complaint on an accommodation note alleges that the paper came for value before maturity into plaintiff's possession, and the allegation is not denied, an issue is not raised by an allegation in the answer that plaintiff took the note after maturity with notice. 92. The following allegations have been held to be sufficient in affidavits of defense: That plaintiffs were not the owners of said notes, but holding simply for the purposes of this action, and that they had been transferred to them to avoid the defense which defendant might have made in a suit by the original payees. Osmer v. Souder, 3 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 155. That there was no consideration for the note and that plaintiff was a mere agent of the payee. Smith v. Booth, 1 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 116. That defendant, under duress, gave the note for rent; that the lessor by failure to furnish steam as agreed in the lease caused defendant damage exceeding the value of the note; and that plaintiff is not a bona fide holder, but that the lessor is bringing suit in plaintiff's name to avoid the defense, although failing to set out the lease, and admitting that defendant, with knowledge of the damage, gave the note after the rent was due. Devlin v. Burns, 147 Pa. St. 168, 23 Atl. 375. That plaintiff is not the holder or owner for value before maturity, but that the note was handed by the payee to him for the purpose of debarring defendant from a defense to the same. Bacon v. Scott, 154 Pa. St. 250, 32 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 194, 26 Atl. 422. That no consideration was paid, either by the maker or by plaintiff, to defendant, and that plaintiff is a mere transferee without value, and holds the same merely for collection for account of the maker, who is indebted to defendant "much in excess of the amount of said note." Chestnut St. Nat. Bank v. Ellis, 161 Pa. St. 241, 34 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 351, 28 Atl. 1082. That the note was obtained by the original payee by fraudulent representations as to the property for which it was given; that the payee passed the note to plaintiff to avoid the defense of fraud; that plaintiff resides so far away that defendant cannot learn anything about him or the circumstances of the assignment; but that defendant believes that the note was passed to plaintiff without consideration, and that plaintiff took it merely to collect it for the original payee, and to avoid the defense of fraud. Boomer v. Henry, 2 Pa. Dist. 357, 13 Pa. Co. Ct. 104.

Transfer in violation of agreement.— An answer by accepters in an action against them by an indorsee setting up an agreement by the drawer that the bill should not be paid until certain goods were sold, and that until the sale the paper should not pass from his control, and also setting up in effect that the indorsement was made in pursuance of a design to deprive defendant of his defense against the drawer is sufficient. Risce v. Planters' Nat. Bank, 84 Tex. 413, 19 S. W. 610.

Transfer to evade statute.— An affidavit of defense stating that plaintiff obtained the note in suit after maturity and sues in his name to evade a statute prohibiting a wife from suing her husband, and further denying that defendant deserted his wife, the transferrer, or forced her to leave him, is good. Haun v. Trainer, 190 Pa. St. 1, 42 Atl. 367.

93. Gaskill v. Lynch, 4 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 542. But see Union Trust Co. v. Banger, 8 Pa. Co. Ct. 99, holding that de-attempted to be defeated by the transfer should be alleged,[94] as well as plaintiff's knowledge of the purpose of the transfer.[95]

(v) Transfer For Collection. Where by statute an action must be brought in the name of the real party in interest, the right to sue is put in issue by an answer that the transfer was without consideration and for the sole purpose of collection for the benefit of the real owner.[96] It is otherwise, however, where mere possession is sufficient to entitle the holder to sue,[97] and an averment that plaintiff is the agent of the payee, without a statement that he is an agent for collection, is insufficient.[98]

(vi) Fraud. In pleading fraud in obtaining or in the transfer of an instrument or in placing the instrument in circulation, facts from which the fraud is made apparent or can reasonably be inferred must be stated.[99] fendant need not state the reasons for his belief.

Sufficient affidavits of defense.— An averment that defendant "verily believes and expects to prove that the note has been passed by the payee to plaintiffs to avoid making this defence, and that the plaintiffs sold the same to the use of the (payee) without consideration as between them," is sufficient against the indorsee. Reznor v. Supplee, 81 Pa. St. 180. An affidavit of defense, in assumpsit on a negotiable note by an indorser against the maker, which avers that the deponent "verily believes and fully expects to be able to show that the plaintiff herein is not a bona fide holder . . . of such note," but is being used as plaintiff to prevent a defense being established, is sufficiently precise. Penn Nat. Bank v. Altoona Mfg. Co., 4 Pa. Dist. 46, 15 Pa. Co. Ct. 320. An averment that defendant expected to be able to prove on the trial that plaintiff was not a bona fide holder, before maturity, of the note, of which defendant was an accommodation indorser, but that the same, at and after maturity, was held and owned by a third party, and that suit had been brought in the name of this plaintiff in order to shut out defendant from his defense, as against the third party was good. Union Trust Co. v. Banger, 8 Pa. Co. Ct. 99. An affidavit of defense is sufficient where it states that plaintiff is not a bona fide holder for value, that they were transferred to him to avoid a defense, and that he became the holder of them with full knowledge that there was a failure of consideration, "all of which is true to the best of deponent's knowledge and belief, and which deponent expects to be able to prove on the trial." Woolverton v. Smith, 4 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 442; Gustine v. Cummings, 1 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 105. But see Brown v. Walton, 3 Wkly. Notes Cas. But an affidavit of defense setting forth that the note in suit was obtained or put into circulation by fraud or undue means is sufficient to overcome plaintiff's prima facie title. Lerch Hardware Co. v. Columbia First Nat. Bank, (Pa. 1886) 5 Atl. 778.

Fraudulent negotiation.— Allegations that defendant made the note to his own order, indorsed it, and delivered it to a broker to be discounted; that the broker told defendant he could not discount it, and would return it, when in fact he had fraudulently negotiated it, of which defendant had no knowledge until he received notice of its maturity from plaintiff; and that he had no means of knowing whether plaintiff gave value for it or not are sufficient to prevent judgment. Bruner v. Adams, 1 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 390.

In fraud of bankrupt law.— An answer by the maker, alleging that the transfer was in fraud of the bankrupt law, because made to prefer creditors of the transferrer, states no defense. Frenzel v. Miller, 37 Ind. 1, 10 Am. Rep. 62.

Fraud of copartner.— In an action against one partner on a firm note by an indorsee thereof, an affidavit of defense that it was made without defendant's knowledge or consent by his copartner for his own private use, sufficiently alleges fraud to require plaintiff to prove that he purchased it for value before maturity. Real-Estate Invest. Co. v. Smith, 148 Pa. St. 496, 30 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 80, 24 Atl. 59. An affidavit of defense, in an action on a note, by an indorsee thereof, fraudulently executed by a member of a partnership for his private use, need not allege that the indorsee was not a bona fide holder without notice. Tradesmen's Nat. Bank v. Bachenheimer, 5 Pa. Dist. 218.

(VII) KNOWLEDGE OF INFIRMITY. Where prima facie plaintiff is a bona fide holder, the defense relied on must be supplemented by averments of notice to, or knowledge by, plaintiff of the infirmity complained of before the acquisition by him of the instrument in suit.[1] If such notice or knowledge is inferential or

Necessity of alleging notice.— An affidavit of defense alleging that the note in suit was given in payment of goods sold by the payee to defendant, that thereafter a new contract was made, by which other notes were given in satisfaction of the note in suit, which was to have been returned, and that defendant made demand on the payee for its return, and had every reason to believe it to have been in his possession, and that he passed it to plaintiff in fraud of defendant's rights, is sufficient to prevent judgment, without alleging that plaintiff had notice of the fraud. Gordon v. Stilz, 5 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 169. A special plea in an action by the indorser against one of two makers, setting forth that the note was fraudulently made and put in circulation, is a sufficient notice to require plaintiff to prove that he is a bona fide holder. Failure of consideration.— An answer alleging in one paragraph total want of consideration, and in another a want of consideration except as to part of the amount, and each alleging notice to plaintiff at the time of the transfer, puts the bona fides in issue. Citizens' Bank v. Leonhart, 126 Ind. 206, 25 N. E. 1099.

Payment.— A plea in an action on a sealed note brought by the assignee of the payee against the maker should state that the payment was made before notice of the assignment. Helms v. Sisk, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 503.

Set-off.— When the defense to an action on a promissory note given in payment for land is that the holder of the note acquired it with notice that the maker claimed a set-off for taxes on the land paid by him, and for which his vendor was liable, the answer should aver that the vendee had received, or was entitled to receive, from the vendor, a deed with covenants of general warranty. Gere v. Unger, 125 Pa. St. 644, 24 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 7, 17 Atl. 511.

Transfer to one of several payees.—Where several payees of a promissory note unite in indorsing the same to one of their number, the latter acquires the interest only of his circumstantial, facts and circumstances which will warrant a conclusion of knowledge must be detailed,[2] but notice need not be averred where by statute defenses available against an assignor may be interposed in an action by his assignee.[3]

m. Presentment, Protest, and Notice — (I) PRESENTMENT. To put the fact of presentment or demand in issue it must be appropriately denied.[4] It has been held, however, that an issue is made by a plea of the general issue,[5] by a defense in the form of a plea of nil debet,[6] and in an action on a note payable at a particular place by a person named by a denial of presentment to such person;[7] and where a note is payable at a place in another state, an averment of no demand at such place, and that by the law of such state defendant was discharged, is sufficient to raise an issue.[8] A plea of no demand is unavailable to the maker,[9] and the denial of an allegation of protest unnecessarily made does not controvert separate allegations of demand and refusal.[10]

(II) PROTEST. An allegation of protest for non-payment may be denied generally,[11] but a plea which fails to state dishonor before the commencement of the action[12] or the denial of an allegation unnecessarily made[13] forms no issue.

associate payees in the note and is not entitled to protection as a purchaser for value. And if in an action brought by him upon the note the answer sets up a total want of consideration for the note, in matter and manner sufficient to defeat the action, had it been brought in the name of the payees, it is not necessary to allege notice to, or knowledge in, plaintiff, of the entire worthlessness of the consideration. Saxton v. Dodge, 57 Barb. (N. Y.) 84.

Defense against assigned note.— A maker of a non-negotiable note setting up a defense against its purchaser must allege in his answer that the defense existed before notice to him of the assignment. Rosenthal v. Rambo, (Ind. App. 1902) 62 N. E. 637.

Suspicious circumstances.— An averment that plaintiff took the instrument under circumstances of suspicion sufficient to put him on inquiry is insufficient. Stitt v. Garrett, 3 Whart. (Pa.) 281.

Notice by officer of plaintiff.—An averment that the payee was an officer of plaintiff and "had notice of the entire transaction" without stating what the transaction was is insufficient. Superior Nat. Bank v. Stadelman, 153 Pa. St. 634, 32 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 142, 26 Atl. 201. And an affidavit of defense alleging that, from the indorsee's position as treasurer of plaintiff, he should have known of the failure of the consideration and that affiant believed that the indorsee knew such facts, is insufficient to charge that the indorsee had actual notice. Dwight v. Hering, 18 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 38.

3. Nisbett v. Brown, 30 Ark. 585.

4. Instances of sufficiency.— An averment that demand was not made of the maker personally or at his usual place of business is sufficient to entitle an indorser to a jury to determine whether the demand if made at all was made at a reasonable time. Ashton v. Dull, 31 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 61, 6 Leg. Gaz. (Pa.) 71. And an averment that plaintiff never made any demand on affiant for payment, although they had numerous business dealings together after the note fell due, in which affiant had collected sums of money from plaintiff, is sufficient. Gross v. Cloud, 14 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 225.

Readiness to pay — Tender.— In Kentucky a plea of no demand at the place of payment must be accompanied by an allegation of a readiness to pay and a tender into court. Commonwealth Bank v. Hickey, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 225; Baker v. Phelps, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 387.

11. Decorah First Nat. Bank v. Day, 52 Iowa 680, 3 N. W. 728; Bartlett v. Jones, 4 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 292, Clev. L. Rep. 219. Contra, Fidelity Ins. Co. v. Sarmiento, 2 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 244, holding that in an action on a bill of exchange by the holder against the drawer, an affidavit of defense alleging that the copy filed was not such as would entitle plaintiff to judgment for want of an affidavit of defense, because it did not set forth that the bill was presented, or that it was not accepted or protested, is insufficient.

12. Wood v. Stevenson, 16 U. C. Q. B. 527.

13. Brennan v. Lowry, 4 Daly (N. Y.) 253.

(III) Notice. Want of notice of dishonor[14] or negligence in giving notice[15] must be affirmatively pleaded. So in an action on a foreign bill an averment of want of notice must also aver that it could have been given.[16] It is not enough to deny the receipt of notice. It must also be averred that no notice was given in fact or that due diligence was not exercised;[17] although it has been held that a denial of the receipt of due notice of non-payment or of knowledge of protest is a denial of constructive notice arising from the due sending as well as of actual notice arising from its receipt.[18] It has been held that a plea of the general issue,[19] or an allegation that notice was never sent[20] is sufficient, but a plea in the form of a negative pregnant is not.[21]

(IV) Waiver—(A) Of Demand and Notice. An allegation in the complaint of a waiver of demand and notice is met by a general denial,[22] but an answer to a complaint alleging waiver of notice of non-payment, which alleges concealment of the fact of non-payment, is insufficient unless it specially avers the facts of such alleged concealment.[23] So an answer that demand was waived after maturity is not frivolous where the complaint alleges a waiver at or about maturity.[24]

(B) Of Protest. Where protest fees are claimed a waiver of protest to be

14. Information and belief.— An averment by an indorser that he "is informed" that the protest and certificate were not actually made by a notary, without an allegation that it is believed by him, or denying actual notice, is insufficient. Cake v. Stidfole, 31 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 93.

An averment that notice did not arrive at defendant's place of business to the best of defendant's knowledge and belief is insufficient because it is vague and evasive. Felemeyer v. Ebert, 16 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 254.

Notice at place designated in note.— Where below the maker's signature on a note was written, "Notice to 623 Walnut street," and the notary's return of protest showed that demand was made at that place, an affidavit of defense in an action thereon alleging that demand was not made at the maker's residence or place of business, although he had one in the city, is not sufficient to prevent judgment. Stone v. Bonsall, 1 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 4.

Special plea and general issue.— Where the complaint on a note alleges its due protest and notice thereof to an indorser, a special plea by the latter that he was never legally notified of the protest is demurrable where he also pleads the general issue, since the allegation of notice in the complaint having been necessary the special plea was merely a repetition of the plea of the general issue. Carter v. Odom, 121 Ala. 162, 25 So. 774.

Traverse by maker and indorser of due notice as alleged in two counts on separate notes is good on special demurrer, being distributive. Tompkins v. Scott, 9 U. C. Q. B. 103.

Where an indorser wishes to defend in equity against his liability for want of due notice he must make such defense in his pleading, especially where the case has been conducted to a hearing, on the assumption of recognition of his liability being fixed on his part. He cannot for the first time raise this question under a reference, ordering a report as to the amount due to the holders of the notes. Williams v. Bartlett, 4 Lea (Tenn.) 620.

19. Pawcatuck Nat. Bank v. Barber, 22 R. I. 73, 46 Atl. 1095.

General issue and special plea.— A special plea that defendant was never legally notified of the protest is a mere repetition of a prior plea of the general issue and for that reason the answer is demurrable. Carter v. Odom, 121 Ala. 162, 25 So. 774.

20. Wolf v. Jacobs, 187 Pa. St. 260, 41 Atl. 27.

An averment that defendant had never received notice of dishonor from the indorsee or his agent, although he lived only a few squares from him, is sufficient. Gross v. Cloud, 14 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 225.

21. Treadwell v. Hoffman, 5 Daly (N. Y.) 207, where the complaint alleged that defendant had "due notice," and he denied that he had "due notice."

22. Defendant, answering by a general denial, had a right to testify whether or not the words waiving demand and notice were on the note when he indorsed it. Bay View Brewing Co. v. Grubb, 24 Wash. 163, 63 Pac. 1091.

available must be set up by a special plea,[25] which must show that protest was waived before dishonor.[26]

(v) Exhaustion of Remedy Against Maker. In an action by an indorsee against the indorser a denial of notice of a suit against the maker is a denial of an essential allegation.[27] The general issue is sufficient, without a plea that the action was instituted before the return of an execution against the maker;[28] but a plea that the maker was solvent at the maturity of the note is not broad enough to controvert an allegation of his insolvency at the time the action was commenced.[29]

n. Extension of Time — (i) In General. Extension of time for the payment of a note can only be pleaded in abatement[30] and must precede an answer in bar.[31] Hence it cannot be shown under the general issue,[32] but the nature of the contract or agreement to extend must be set out with reasonable particularity, that the court may judge of its validity.[33] It should likewise appear that the party sought to be charged executed the instrument in pursuance of the agreement to extend.[34]

(ii) Inconvenience or Impracticability of Payment at Maturity.

25. White v. Keith, 97 Ala. 668, 12 So. 611.

26. A plea to a complaint on a promissory note claiming protest fees, which avers that protest of the note was waived by the only indorser on it on the day of maturity and before protest, is insufficient, in that it fails to allege that the waiver was made before dishonor. White v. Keith, 97 Ala. 668, 12 So. 611.

Executory or executed agreement.— It should be shown whether the agreement is executed or executory. Juchter v. Boehm, 63 Ga. 71.

Guarantee of payee's indebtedness.—A plea that defendant agreed to guarantee the payment of plaintiff's indebtedness to third parties in consideration that the time of payment be extended until plaintiff should be discharged of the indebtedness so guaranteed and that defendant did guarantee such payment and was obliged to pay a sum larger than that incurred by him on the instrument in question is not a good plea of a covenant never to sue, operating by way of release to discharge the debt, or a plea not to sue for a definite limited time. Allen v. Breusing, 32 Ill. 505.

Set-off.— An answer that after execution of the note in suit plaintiff agreed that the note should not be collected until a specified time, that the amount due should be applied to pay any damages sustained by plaintiff's non-performance of the agreement, that damages were so sustained and setting off the same against the note is not an averment of an agreement to forbear until the time specified, but is a plea of set-off of such damages. Williams v. Taylor, 35 Conn. 592.

Remedy by special action.— In Durand v. Stevenson, 5 U. C. Q. B. 336, it was held that a plea that in consideration of certain notes of a third party being deposited with plaintiff as security, plaintiff agreed not to sue until the notes of the third party should become due, was not available as a plea in bar, but that defendant's remedy was by a special action for the breach of the agreement.

Sufficiency.— An answer states a good defense when it alleges that after delivery, in consideration of the deposit of collateral with plaintiff, it was agreed orally to extend the time of payment and that plaintiff retains said security and refuses to extend the time or permit a renewal of the note. Commercial Bank v. Hart, 10 Wash. 303, 38 Pac. 1114.

An answer claiming the privilege of an extension conferred by the note in terms and alleging that plaintiffs knew of defendant's claim at the time of instituting the action is good on general demurrer, the fact of such knowledge being determinable upon the facts. Davis v. Weaver, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 27 S. W. 902.

A plea of an agreement by a former owner to extend the time of payment and of notice to plaintiff is good on general demurrer, although it does not show that defendant was a party to the agreement, that the consideration moved from him, or that the agreement was entered into for his benefit. Paddock v. Jones, 40 Vt. 474.

34. A plea that plaintiff agreed by parol never to sue and that after execution of the note another agreement was made that if defendant would sign the note as surety plaintiff would never sue, but would receive the interest thereon, unless the maker should deny

Where the ground of defense is an agreement that if not convenient and practicable to pay at maturity, time for the payment should be extended, the answer must aver the inconvenience or impracticability.[35]

(III) Consideration For Extension. The answer must show that the agreement to extend was based on a valuable consideration.[36]

(IV) Interest. If the rate of interest to prevail during the extended time is not set out it will be presumed to be the same as that provided for by the note.[37]

o. Payment — (I) Specific or General Averments. Payment must be affirmatively pleaded and the facts relied on to establish the defense stated with reasonable fulness.[38] There are holdings, however, to the effect that an allegation of non-payment may be controverted by a general denial or an issue raised by a general averment of payment.[39] the note; that the interest had been paid and that the note had not been denied, is bad for failing to show that the surety executed the note in pursuance of the agreement. Withrow v. Wiley, 3 Ind. 379.

35. Costello v. Wilhelm, 13 Kan. 229 (where the only allegation in this connection was that the agreement was made at a time when plaintiff and one of the defendants were settling up sundry matters between themselves and that the particular defendant at the time of making the settlement paid certain moneys to plaintiff but failed to show any connection between the settlement and and the payment of moneys on the one side and the agreement of plaintiff to extend the time of the payment of the note on the other side as would constitute one a consideration for the other); Atwood v. Lewis, 6 Mo. 392 (where a plea that it was agreed that if it should not be convenient for defendant to pay at maturity plaintiff would wait the convenience of defendant in consideration of which defendant agreed to pay interest, and that it was not convenient to pay, was held insufficient for the reason that if defendant sustained damage by being compelled to pay before it was convenient to him his remedy was on the agreement).

W. 732, holding that an answer alleging that the extension of the time was based on a "valuable consideration," without more specifically stating the consideration, is not demurrable.

Deposit of collateral security.— On general demurrer a plea that the agreement was made in consideration of certain valuable securities placed in the hands of plaintiff as collateral security is sufficient. Paddock v. Jones, 40 Vt. 474.

Failure to demur.— Failure to allege facts will not invalidate the plea if no demurrer is interposed. Reed v. Corry, (Tex. Civ. App. 1901) 61 S. W. 157.

An answer denying in the language of the complaint that the note had not been paid and that anything is due to plaintiff denies immaterial averments only and raises no issue. Hook v. White, 36 Cal. 299.

Transfer to defendant.— In an action by an administrator to recover the purchase-price of a note the allegation that plaintiff's intestate for value and before maturity transferred the note to defendant is a substantial plea of payment. Hays v. Dickey, 67 Ark. 169, 53 S. W. 887.

Unsettled mutual accounts.— An affidavit of defense that the notes were given as part of a running account, which had never been closed or settled, and that on opportunity given for defendant to show his payments and compare them with plaintiff's charges payment of such notes will appear is sufficient. Hubbard v. French, 1 Pa. Super. Ct. 218, 37 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 556.

39. Ball v. Putnam, 123 Cal. 134, 55 Pac. 773; Davanay v. Eggenhoff, 43 Cal. 395; Chew v. Woolley, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 399 (where defendant pleaded puis darrein continuance that he "did pay to the plaintiff the several sums of money mentioned in the plaintiff's declaration"); Jewett v. Winship, 42 Vt. 204.

Under the Missouri code, in a suit on a note, an answer stating that defendant made two payments, "the last of which extinguished the note," is sufficient. Joy v. Cooley, 19 Mo. 645.

(II) PART PAYMENT. A plea of part payment must definitely show whether it was made on the original debt or on the note for which it was given,[40] and a plea of part payment to the assignor before defendant had notice of the assignment and of payment of the remainder to the assignee to be sufficient must show that the remainder was accepted by the assignee in discharge of the note.[41] But failure to definitely state the amount paid in part will not vitiate the answer where the credits are unknown to defendant.[42]

(III) TO WHOM PAYMENT MADE. While it has been held that the answer should show to whom payment was made,[43] it has also been held that such a statement is unnecessary.[44]

(IV) PAYMENT OR LIABILITY TO THIRD PERSON. A plea of payment to a third person should aver that payment was actually made in pursuance of an agreement between the parties,[45] the time, mode, and items of payment,[46] by whom payment was made,[47] the authority of such third person to receive payment,[48] payment of the particular indebtedness intended,[49] and where payments to

Under the New York code of procedure an averment of payment is sufficient without further allegations. Van Giesen v. Van Giesen, 10 N. Y. 316 [affirming 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 520].

Payments not alleged in complaint.— Under a general denial and a plea alleging the circumstances, purpose, and consideration of the note, but which does not put in issue the amount alleged in the complaint to have been paid thereon and the amount remaining unpaid, proof of other payments than those alleged by plaintiff is admissible under the general denial. Ball v. Putnam, 123 Cal. 134, 55 Pac. 773.

An averment of payment which is qualified by a statement of facts which do not amount to a payment is insufficient. Johnson v. Breedlove, 72 Ind. 368.

Indorsements of payments appearing on the note may be made a part of the plea. Russell v. Drummond, 6 Ind. 216.

40. Vance v. Claiborne, 39 Tex. 398.

45. Allen v. Breusing, 32 Ill. 505, where the answer alleged that plaintiff had agreed to extend the time of payment of the note, if defendant would guarantee the payment of certain indebtedness of plaintiff to other persons; that defendant had made such a guaranty, and by reason thereof had been compelled to pay plaintiff's indebtedness.

46. Hahn v. Broussard, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 481, 23 S. W. 88.

47. A plea of indorsement and delivery of the note by plaintiffs before commencement of the action and payment to the indorsee is bad because of the failure to aver by whom the note was paid, since it was competent for plaintiffs themselves to have paid it, taken it up, erased the indorsement, and sued in their own name. Hawkins v. Fellowes, 6 Dana (Ky.) 128.

Acknowledgment of debt.— A plea of payment without stating by whom is not an acknowledgment of the debt by defendant, since it might have been paid by someone else who was liable. Blum v. Bidwell, 20 La. Ann. 43.

48. Maynard v. Black, 41 Ind. 310.

As against an assignee a plea of payment to the assignor should aver that the payment was made before the assignment or before the note matured. It is not enough to aver payment to the assignor before defendant had notice of the assignment. Patterson v. Atherton, 3 McLean (U. S.) 147, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,822.

Authority as to kind of payment.— Where defendant pleads payment to plaintiff's attorney, who held the note for collection, it is unnecessary to allege that plaintiff had authorized his attorney to receive other payment than money. Hewett v. Thomas, 37 Tex. 520.

Ambiguity.— In an action by an executor an answer alleging the death of the payee, leaving property less than the amount allowed by law to the widow, and that she had paid expenses of funeral and last sickness; that before his death decedent, owing no debts, gave the notes to his wife; and that defendant, believing her to be the owner, paid the amount due to her, and that she surrendered the notes — is either ambiguous, as based on two distinct theories, or must be construed as based on a gift inter vivos, and as such is insufficient, alleging no delivery. Bingham v. Stage, 123 Ind. 281, 23 N. E. 756.

49. A plea asserting that the note sued on was indorsed to plaintiff by the payee for the sole purpose of discharging a particular note made by him to a third party, and that the payee, after the maturity, directed the maker to pay the money to the third party, which was done, is bad, without averring that the payment was made to the third party in discharge of the particular note which it plaintiff and to others on his behalf are relied on the payments respectively made to each should be stated.[50] Where defendant defends on the ground that he ought to pay another than plaintiff, he must show that he is defending in privity with such other and with his assent.[51]

(v) Payment by Other Party to Instrument. After an indorser has pleaded he cannot by a plea puis darrien avail himself of a subsequent payment by the maker.[52]

(vi) Offer to Pay, Readiness, and Tender. The plea of an offer to pay in property as permitted by the terms of the instrument must state the offer and when it was made or that an instrument sufficient to pass title was tendered.[53] So a plea alleging readiness and willingness to pay as agreed must also allege a readiness to pay ever since and up to the time of the action, and follow it by a tender into court.[54]

(vii) Change of Place of Payment. The time and consideration of an agreement to change the place of payment in consideration of a part payment before maturity should be definitely pleaded.[55]

(viii) Joinder of Pleas. The joinder of a plea of set-off, with a plea of payment from collateral security is not obnoxious,[56] nor is an answer setting up the acceptance of a new note under a composition agreement, and the pendency of bankruptcy proceedings, within the scope of the rule against double pleading.[57] But an answer alleging plaintiff's indorsement prior to that of defendant and before delivery and that plaintiff negotiated and paid the note in suit and released defendant is bad for duplicity.[58]

(ix) Payment Otherwise Than by Terms of Instrument — (a) In General. Not only must an agreement to satisfy the debt otherwise than as provided for in the instrument be alleged, but also performance of the agreement or a tender in accordance with its terms.[59]

(b) Receipt of Money or Property. A general statement of the receipt of money or property or the proceeds thereof sufficient to pay the indebtedness on the instrument is insufficient,[60] without an averment that it was received as pay-was the object of the indorsement to discharge. Alsobrook v. Deshler, 10 Ala. 698.

Collection by third party.— A plea that by agreement a third party was to collect moneys for the maker and apply them to payment of the note, and that a sufficient sum has been collected to pay the same is sufficient. Merrill v. Randell, 22 Ill. 227.

60. Greenwood First Nat. Bank v. Wilbern, (Nebr. 1902) 90 N. W. 1126.

Sales by defendant to plaintiff.— That defendant, after the note was given, sold logs to plaintiff at a stipulated price exceeding the amount of such note, and that plaintiff agreed to apply such amount in payment of the note when it should become due, and pay defendant the balance, does not show a payment of the note, although the facts are available by way of counter-claim. Dudley v. Stiles, 32 Wis. 371.

Instructions to coobligor.— An allegation of delivery of property to plaintiff by defendant's coöbligor with instructions to apply the proceeds in payment of the note in suit is not a plea of payment or satisfaction. Hook v. White, 36 Cal. 229.

Collection of security.— Allegations "that the drafts and bills of exchange on which suit is brought in this case are renewals of other drafts and bills of exchange, of like amounts, payment of all of which was secured to said plaintiff by a certain mortgage," and that "the amount of said mortgage and judgment in whole or in part,[61] or that the proceeds of the property were received,[62] under an agreement that it should be so applied.[63]

(c) Acceptance of Substitute For Payment. An answer of payment by the substitution of another note for that sued on,[64] by the guaranty of plaintiff's debt to a third person,[65] or by the giving of an order on a third person,[66] must allege an acceptance thereof in discharge of defendant's liability. In the last case the answer should also allege that the order was of value or was honored.[67]

(x) Discharge or Release—(a) In General. Where the defense interposed is the release or discharge of defendant by agreement of the parties or by operation of law, all the facts necessary to constitute the defense must be explicitly averred.[68]

ment thereon is sufficient to fully cover the entire amount of all notes, acceptances and indebtedness held" by plaintiff against defendant, and "that the said plaintiff has in the manner aforesaid received payment in full of the notes, drafts and bills of exchange upon which this action is founded" are not open to the objection that it was a mere statement of defendant's conclusions from facts not disclosed. Warren Nat. Bank v. Seneca Oil Works, 175 Pa. St. 580, 38 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 281, 34 Atl. 859.

Failure to enforce security.— A plea that defendant pledged collateral which plaintiff failed to collect must further aver that the collateral became uncollectable through plaintiff's negligence. Hawley Bros. Hardware Co. v. Brownstone, 123 Cal. 643, 56 Pac. 468.

61. Homas v. McConnell, 3 McLean (U. S.) 381, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,656.

Collection of insurance moneys.— A plea that, in pursuance of an agreement between defendant, plaintiff, and the mortgagee in possession of property mortgaged to secure the payment of a note in suit, plaintiff and the mortgagee collected insurance moneys paid for a loss sustained on the mortgaged property and that the note was fully paid therefrom is a sufficient plea of payment. Hailey First Nat. Bank v. Bews, 2 Ida. 1175, 31 Pac. 816.

Assignment for creditors by other party to note.— A plea by the payee of a bill of exchange that the drawer had assigned his property for the benefit of another creditor first, and then for plaintiff's benefit, is insufficient, if it does not aver that there was sufficient property to pay the preferred creditor. McCarthy v. Roots, 21 How. (U. S.) 432, 16 L. ed. 162.

62. Homas v. McConnell, 3 McLean (U. S.) 381, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,656.

63. In a suit by an indorser an answer that plaintiff had been fully paid by moneys received by him from the estate of a deceased maker and from other sources is bad for want of averments that plaintiff received such moneys under circumstances which made him indebted to the estate therefor, and that it had been agreed that such indebtedness should operate pro tanto as a payment of the money sued for. Johnson v. Breedlove, 72 Ind. 368.

64. Witz v. Fite, 91 Va. 446, 22 S. E. 171.

Retention of renewal note.—An affidavit of defense, which sets up that defendants mailed plaintiffs a renewal note for the amount sued for and a check for the balance, including interest for the renewal note, and that the check was retained and applied on account by plaintiffs, is sufficient to prevent judgment on the note. Wolff v. Jolly, 31 Pittsb. Leg. J. N. S. 194..

65. Allen v. Breusing, 32 Ill. 505.

66. Taylor v. Purcell, 60 Ark. 606, 31 S. W. 567.

Damages for non-payment.—A plea setting out an accord and satisfaction as to part of the debt, by the acceptance of an order made long after the maturity of the note, and alleging a set-off as to the residue is bad for failing to answer a claim for damages for non-payment from the time the note was due until the time the order was given. Playter v. Turner, 5 U. C. Q. B. 555.

67. Taylor v. Purcell, 60 Ark. 606, 31 S. W. 567.

An allegation that defendant "indorsed" a check which should have been applied to the note is insufficient for failing to state an indorsement to plaintiff or for his benefit, or that the check was paid. Taylor v. Purcell, 60 Ark. 606, 31 S. W. 567.

68. Maness v. Henry, 96 Ala. 454, 11 So. 410; Mitchell v. Friedley, 126 Ind. 545, 26 N. E. 391; Kelso v. Fleming, 104 Ind. 180, 3 N. E. 830; Marshall v. Mathers, 103 Ind. 458, 3 N. E. 120; Nill v. Comparet, 15 Ind. 243; Larimore v. Wells, 29 Ohio St. 13; Roche v. Kempt, 33 U. C. Q. B. 387.

Bankruptcy.— In an action on a firm note a plea that some of the copartners had been adjudicated bankrupts is insufficient. Pastor v. Hicks, 3 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 63.

Parol agreement.— An agreement not required to be in writing need not be averred to be in that form. Carpenter v. McClure, 37 Vt. 127.

Alteration.— A plea by an indorser that, since the execution of the note and delivery thereof to plaintiff, she has, without the knowledge and consent of defendant, an indorser, erased and changed the same for the purpose of releasing another indorser whereby he was released is defective, because too general and indefinite. Scharf v. Moore, 102 Ala. 468, 14 So. 879.

Cancellation of instrument.— An allegation that plaintiff agreed to cancel and deliver up a note on return of the consideration

(B) Consideration For Release. An answer setting up as a defense a release from liability must aver a sufficient consideration therefor.[69]

(C) Performance of Conditions. Where the alleged release was by agreement, the answer should aver a performance of all the conditions necessary to effect a discharge according to its terms,[70] and if it appears that the agreement has been fully executed, satisfaction and discharge are sufficiently alleged.[71]

(D) Foreign Laws. A plea of a discharge by the laws of a foreign state should specify such laws and set out the facts which operated to extinguish the liability.[72]

p. Set-Off, Counter-Claim, and Cross Complaint — (I) Set-Off and Counter-Claim — (A) Mode of Pleading. Statements of fact in an answer to a complaint on commercial paper, which if properly pleaded would entitle defendant to affirmative relief are not available by way of set-off or counter-claim unless pleaded as such.[73] If the allegations are sufficient either as a defense or counter-therefor is not an allegation that the instrument was canceled or destroyed. Diven v. Spicer, 1 Kan. 103.

Rescission of contract on which note is based.— A plea averring the rescission of the contract for which the note sued on was given must show that by the rescission the note was to be surrendered. Childers v. Smith, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 235.

Judgment on original debt.—A mere recital in the answer, in an action against the indorser of a note, that plaintiff, in a former action against the maker of the note, recovered a judgment against him on the original debt, does not present the defense that plaintiff had elected to retain the debt and surrender the note. Carter v. Howard, 17 Misc. (N. Y.) 381, 39 N. Y. Suppl. 1060.

Participation of plaintiff.— An answer in an action on an individual note that it was given for a joint debt and secured by a joint mortgage to plaintiff, who intrusted it to the joint debtor as custodian, and that the latter transferred it to defendant for his personal indebtedness, fails to connect the plaintiff with the transaction. Johnson v. Tabor, 4 Colo. App. 183, 35 Pac. 199.

Submission to arbitration.— A plea that all matters in controversy was submitted to arbitrators three days before the execution of the note sued upon, but which does not aver that the consideration of the note was among the matters submitted, is not sufficient. Armstrong v. Webster, 30 Ill. 333.

Inconsistency.—Where the answer contains a general denial and also pleads payment, a demurrer to a plea in bar that plaintiff had released the cause of action sued on for a valuable consideration is properly sustained. Whiteley Malleable Castings Co. v. Bevington, 25 Ind. App. 391, 58 N. E. 268.

69. Scharf v. Moore, 102 Ala. 468, 14 So. 879; Maness v. Henry, 96 Ala. 454, 11 So. 410, Gibson v. Weir, 1 J. J. Marsh (Ky.) 446.

Insufficient averments.— A plea that, "after the plaintiff informed defendant of his discharge as endorser on the draft in said plaintiff's declaration mentioned, the said defendant, in consideration of the said discharge, paid and discharged other pretended demands held by the said plaintiff against the said defendant, which the said defendant did not consider and believe he was legally bound to pay," does not set up a legal or equitable consideration for a discharge, but only an alleged reason for paying other claims held by plaintiff. Fridenberg v. Robinson, 14 Fla. 130.

70. Parks v. Zeek, 53 Ind. 221; Childers v. Smith, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 235.

71. Jaffray v. Hunter, 15 N. Y. App. Div. 115, 44 N. Y. Suppl. 639, where the answer alleged that defendant being indebted to plaintiffs transferred his property in trust for them; that they agreed to deduct five thousand dollars from defendant's debt, if he would take charge of and dispose of the property so transferred, that he did dispose of it and paid the proceeds to plaintiffs who, without allowing the five thousand dollars, applied all the proceeds to the original debt, that plaintiffs never denied the right to the credit but promised to allow it in the future, that defendant continued to deal with plaintiffs, and that afterward he became indebted to plaintiffs, for which indebtedness he gave two notes for two thousand five hundred dollars each, but did not claim the credit because in fear that it would prevent him from obtaining an extension on other commercial paper.

72. Ticknor v. Voorhies, 46 Mo. 110.

Amendments.— A plea of a discharge under a specified insolvent law of another state, "and the acts amending the same," is fatally defective if it fails to state the amendments. Hempstead v. Reed, 6 Conn. 480.

claim, but do not purport to set up the latter they will be treated as presenting a defense.[74]

(B) Subject-Matter. The rules of pleading relative to counter-claim and set-off apply to actions on bills and notes or like instruments, so that a cause of action to be available to defendant by way of affirmative relief must have arisen out of the contract or transaction on which the action is brought or be connected with the subject of the action,[75] or it may be any other cause arising on contract[76] and existing at the commencement of the action,[77] but not a claim or demand arising out of or sounding in tort.[78] Defendant is not precluded from setting up a counter-claim, for the reason that the court would have no jurisdiction of an original action based on the subject-matter of the claim.[79]

Pick. (Mass.) 312, 16 Am. Dec. 409) or an account against him must be filed by way of set-off (Clark v. Leach, 10 Mass. 51).

If the pleading shows that it is intended as a counter-claim against the payee it cannot at the same time be considered as an answer to plaintiff's cause of action. Gabe v. McGinnis, 55 Ind. 372.

There should be a prayer of set-off.— Allen v. Breusing, 32 Ill. 505; Bates v. Rosekrans, 37 N. Y. 409, 4 Transcr. App. (N. Y.) 332, 4 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 276 [affirming 23 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 98].

Principal and agent.— In an action on a note given for plaintiff's services, an answer that plaintiff agreed to obtain a loan for defendant, that they paid the full commissions thereon, but that he failed to procure the full amount and refused to return the commission received by him on that part which defendants did not receive states a good counter-claim. Slade v. Montgomery, 53 N. Y. App. Div. 343, 65 N. Y. Suppl. 709.

Master and servant.— That plaintiff while in defendant's employ defaulted in his accounts and charged himself with the deficits is a proper subject of counter-claim in an action by him on a note given for his salary. Slade v. Montgomery, 53 N. Y. App. Div. 343, 65 N. Y. Suppl. 709.

Landlord and tenant.— Failure of the landlord to make promised repairs and damages to the tenant in consequence of such failure constitute a good counter-claim in an action on a note given by the latter to the former for rent. Murphy v. Farley, 124 Ala. 279, 27 So. 442.

Breach of contract for which note given.— Defendant may counter-claim a cause of action for damages sustained by a breach of the contract between plaintiff and defendant, which was the consideration of the note. Hurst v. Combs, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 84, 30 S. W. 416; Burns v. Jordan, 43 Minn. 25, 44 N. W. 523; Heebner v. Shephard, 5 N. D. 56, 63 N. W. 892.

Overcharges for goods for which the note was given in an amount exceeding the sum due on the note are a proper subject of counter-claim. Briggs v. Freedman, 9 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 73.

Tender.— In an action on a note payable at a bank in another state, a plea by way of set-off that pending a suit within the state defendant offered payment of the debt and costs in the bills of the bank and in pursuance of the laws of the foreign state is sufficient. Vermont State Bank v. Porter, 5 Day (Conn.) 316, 5 Am. Dec. 157.

How question of availability raised.— Whether a counter-claim is one that could be interposed in the action is a question that can only be raised by demurrer and cannot be raised at the trial by motion. Decorah First Nat. Bank v. Laughlin, 4 N. D. 391, 61 N. W. 473.

76. Wakefield v. Spencer, 8 Minn. 376.

Breach of independent contract.— Damages sustained by the maker by breach of an independent contract, which by agreement between the parties might be offset against the note. Williams v. Taylor, 35 Conn. 592.

A counter-claim based on the payment of a prior note which had been fraudulently altered is insufficient if it fails to aver that the note was paid or given without consideration. Decorah First Nat. Bank v. Laughlin, 4 N. D. 391, 61 N. W. 473.

Replevin for property mortgaged to secure note.— Under a general denial in replevin for property mortgaged to secure the payment of a note held by plaintiff defendant may set up an indebtedness of plaintiff to defendant existing at the commencement of the suit in an amount equal to the amount due on the note. Davis v. Culver, 58 Nebr. 265, 78 N. W. 504.

(c) Privity of Parties. As a rule privity of the parties is a prerequisite to the right to set-off or counter-claim.[80] However by statute in one jurisdiction, at least in an action against several defendants, any one of whom is principal and the other sureties, a claim in favor of the principal defendant and against the plaintiff or any former holder of the note or other contract may be pleaded as a set-off by the principal or any other defendant,[81] and although the contrary has been held,[82] the better view seems to be that in an action on behalf of an insolvent bank against an accommodation maker alone a plea that the indorser had money on deposit in the bank is insufficient to entitle defendant to set off such deposit.[83] Where by statute a claim may be set off against a usee in like manner as if he were plaintiff, in the absence of an averment to that effect in the complaint defendant may aver that the action is for the use of the party against whom the claim is asserted.[84]

(d) Claims Against Prior Holders. A counter-claim against a payee is not available against an indorsee for value before maturity,[85] especially where there is no allegation that the claim arose before the assignment of the note to plaintiff or before defendant had notice thereof,[86] and where by statute a counter-claim can only be set up against an assignor of a note transferred after maturity, assignment after maturity must be averred.[87]

(e) Several Claims. Several distinct claims or demands may be pleaded[88] in

Interest of stranger.— A joint demand in favor of defendant, his coöbligor, and a stranger to the note in suit, which fails to show an acquisition of the stranger's interest in the demand, is not the subject of a valid counter-claim. Hook v. White, 36 Cal. 299.

Property of another affected.— Defendant in avoidance of his liability cannot assert a claim for tortious acts affecting the property of another. Central Ohio R. Co. v. Thompson, 2 Bond (U. S.) 296, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,550.

In an action on partnership notes, individual matters cannot be set off. Bailey v. Valley Nat. Bank, 21 Ill. App. 642.

In an action by an individual the demand against the firm of which plaintiff is a member may be set off, where it is alleged that the causes of action sued on were those of the firm and not of plaintiff alone. Griffin v. Kemp, 46 Ind. 172.

Claim against prior holder.— In an action by the transferees of a note for value after dishonor and after the sale of collateral by a prior holder, an answer setting up that the sale was without authority and for an insufficient price, and attempting to set off a claim against such prior holder, is not a counter-claim against plaintiff, although it may constitute a defense. Canadian Securities Co. v. Prentice, 9 Ont. Pr. 324. To same effect see Torrance v. Livingstone, 10 Ont. Pr. 29.

81. Indebtedness to drawee and indorsee.— An indebtedness of plaintiff may be set off by defendants in an action on a bill of exchange drawn upon them in favor of a third party which was indorsed to them by such third party and by them indorsed to plaintiff. Larrimore v. Heron, 16 Ind. 350.

Sufficient averment of existing indebtedness.— An allegation that at the time of the indorsement by the payee to plaintiff the former was indebted, etc., sufficiently avers an existing indebtedness before notice of the transfer. Jenkinson v. Bowen, 22 Ind. 344.

Assignment of claim after assignment of note.— An answer is bad if it shows that the claim offered as a set-off was assigned to defendant after assignment to plaintiff of the note sued on. It should aver an assignment to defendant before notice of the transfer to plaintiff. Sayres v. Linkhart, 25 Ind. 145.

separate counts, even when the pleas are different in their nature and require different trials before different tribunals.[89]

(F) Necessity of Pleading Facts — (1) IN GENERAL. The facts relied on must be pleaded so as to show a good cause of action and they must be set out with the same particularity as would be required if relief were sought by an independent action.[90]

(2) AMOUNT OF DAMAGE. Defendant must allege that, by reason of the cause of action alleged by way of counter-claim or set-off, he has sustained damage and must specify the amount of damage for which he seeks affirmative relief.[91]

Excessive payment for plaintiff.— An answer is sufficient which states an agreement to pay plaintiff's note on his representation that it did not provide for interest, that in fact the note did bear interest which defendant paid with the principal, and as to that the sums so paid be set off. Brown v. Freed, 31 Ind. 387.

Special or money count.— In Massachusetts, one who has indorsed a note for the accommodation of plaintiff and who has been compelled to pay it may file a declaration in set-off, stating the particulars in a special count, and need not declare in a count for money paid. Parker v. Sanborn, 7 Gray (Mass.) 191.

Sale of stock.— A plea that plaintiff had sold certain shares of stock belonging to defendant "for the use of defendant, and converted to its use" is a ratification of the sale and a claim of the purchase-price of the stock and not its actual value. Terry v. Birmingham Nat. Bank, 99 Ala. 566, 13 So. 149.

Payment of firm debts.— An answer pleading that the indorsement by the payee to plaintiff was without consideration and that by an agreement between the payee and defendant the latter paid the debts of a firm — the note being given for the purchase of a one-half interest therein — that under the agreement one half of such debts was to be repaid to defendant by the payee, and that a sum specified had been paid before maturity of the note in question, is not defective because failing to allege the payment of all the debts of the copartnership. Allentown First Nat. Bank v. Eichelberger, 1 Woodw. Dec. (Pa.) 397.

(G) Effect of Confession of Plea. The confession of a set-off pleaded by the maker precludes a recovery of the indorser who is also a defendant.[92]

(H) Bill of Particulars. If an unsettled transaction or open account is sought to be set up a bill of particulars or itemized statement is necessary.[93]

(I) Cross Complaint. A cross complaint, bringing in all parties necessary to an adjudication of the controversy, is appropriate where it is sought to rescind the instrument for fraud,[94] or to cancel an indorsement alleged to have been made by mistake and without consideration.[95]

q. Verification—(I) In General. In many of the states, by legislative enactment or by rules of practice, certain defenses are rendered unavailable, unless the plea thereof is verified or an affidavit of its truth is presented.[96]

(II) Denial of Execution or Signature—(A) In General. The effect of these provisions is that the execution of the instrument on which a recovery is sought is not put in issue unless such execution or the genuineness of the signature of the person sought to be charged or who purports to have signed it is denied under oath, or if not so denied plaintiff need only produce or read the instrument.[97] But statutes of this character do not apply to writings which do jurisdictions where no sworn denial is interposed the effect of such statutes is merely to dispense with proof of execution on the part of plaintiff, to shift the burden of proof to defendant, and to permit the latter to disprove his signature.[6]

(B) Several Defendants. Where there are several defendants plaintiff need prove execution only as to those who have denied the same under oath,[7] and proof of non-execution by the others is inadmissible.[8]

(C) Parties Sued or Answering Jointly. Although it has been held that a sworn denial by one joint maker is sufficient for all,[9] it has also been held that where the maker and the indorser[10] or several indorsers[11] answer jointly, their pleading must be verified by or on behalf of each.

(D) Copartners. Execution by a copartnership must be denied by the sworn plea of all the members thereof,[12] and an unverified answer by one partner of execution by the other for a personal debt[13] is insufficient to put plaintiff to proof of firm execution or a joint liability.[14] On the other hand a denial of execution by one partner under oath has been held sufficient.[15] In some states the failure to deny execution by a firm will dispense with the necessity of proving the partnership or that defendants are members thereof.[16]

(E) Corporations. The rule requiring the denial of execution under oath is as well applicable to notes and bills purporting to be made by corporations as to those made by a natural person, and unless so denied the instrument will be proof of the authority of the officers of the corporation to execute it on its behalf.[17]

(F) Denial of Execution by Decedents. The decisions as to the applicability of such statutes in actions against the personal representatives of a deceased maker are not in accord, and while in some states these provisions have been held not to apply,[18] in others no distinction is made between such actions and those in which the actual party is defendant.[19]

(G) Authority of Agents. Although it is held that notwithstanding the failure to support the truth of the plea by affidavit, the agency must be proved before the note can be read in evidence,[20] it seems to be the rule that in an action against the principal upon a note made by an agent, it is not necessary to prove the authority of the agent, unless the denial of the execution of the note is verified by affidavit.[21]

(H) Alteration. In some jurisdictions verification of the plea is necessary where defendant seeks to prove that the instrument in suit is not the one executed by him because of alteration therein,[22] although the rule has been held to be inapplicable where the denial of the signature[23] or the denial of the obligation of the instrument so far as it depends on the voluntary and valid signature and execution of it by defendant[24] is not on oath.

(I) Sufficiency. The denial under oath must be unequivocal[25] and substantially comply with the terms of the statute.[26] If the authenticity of the signature is sought to be put in issue its genuineness must be attacked directly[27] by specific and positive statements.[28] An affidavit of the non-execution of a note poration to an interrogatory of a verified answer to the effect that the signer had no authority was a good denial of the signature under the statute, the denial being as specific as the circumstances would permit. Marshall Field Co. v. Oren Ruff-Corn Co., (Iowa 1902) 90 N. W. 618.

Who may verify.— In an action on a note purporting to be that of a corporation, by its president, a verification by its secretary of an answer denying the genuineness of the signature is sufficient. Marshall Field Co. v. Oren Ruff-Corn Co., (Iowa 1902) 90 N. W. 618, where it is said that in such a case it is probable that the officer should show knowledge of the facts in order to enable him to deny the signature.

sued upon should not be construed technically, but will be sufficient if evidently intended in good faith to meet plaintiff's case,[29] and the truth of the plea can be inferred from the facts stated.[30]

(III) PLEA OF WANT OR FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION. Unless so required a plea of the want or failure of consideration need not be supported by oath,[31] but if a sworn denial is necessary a defense based on such want or failure is unavailable unless presented by a verified answer or an affidavit in support thereof.[32]

(IV) PLEA OF PAYMENT. In the absence of any requirement that a plea of payment must be verified no verification of such plea is necessary.[33]

statute dispensing with proof of execution unless it is denied under oath is not applicable to indorsement or assignment[35] where the indorsement purports to be by an agent.[36] Nor is the requirement of a sworn denial of indorsement applicable to an action by the indorsee against the maker[37] or to a note transferred without indorsement.[38] So a requirement of a sworn plea of belief that an assignment is forged does not apply to an indorsed note.[39] The interest of plaintiff is not admitted by failure to deny under oath an indorsement by way of guaranty,[40] and a statute dispensing with proof of handwriting unless denied by affidavit does not require an allegation of sale and transfer after maturity to be so controverted.[41]

(B) Authority of Agent. Proof need not be made of the authority of an agent to assign[42] or indorse,[43] or of the authority to indorse the name of a corporation,[44] unless by plea verified by statute.

Claim against decedent's estate.— Prior to the code of 1881 an indorsee who presented a note as a claim against the maker's estate was not required to prove the indorsement unless it was put in issue by a pleading under oath. Jennings v. McFadden, 80 Ind. 531.

Inability to deny on oath.— A rule of court that the genuineness of indorsements of notes shall be taken to be admitted unless denied by affidavit was not intended to fix on a party the admission of a fact which he does not remember, and therefore asks shall be proved, although he acknowledges its existence to be possible. Owosso Sav. Bank v. Walsh, 65 Fed. 783.

Denying plaintiff's interest.— After non assumpsit, not verified, although the maker cannot deny the execution or the indorser the indorsement, yet they may urge that upon plaintiff's declaration he has no interest in the note sufficient to maintain a suit. (VI) DENIAL OF NOTICE OF PROTEST. The sufficiency of a notice of protest will not be considered if the fact of notice is not denied on oath as required by statute,[45] and the omission of a sworn denial of receipt of the notice will permit the introduction in evidence of the notarial certificate of protest.[46] So if the affidavit is insufficient to satisfy the statute.[47]

(VII) TIME OF VERIFICATION. Unless by special leave of the court the affidavit must be interposed before the commencement of the trial,[48] or before the instrument is offered in evidence.[49]

(VIII) EFFECT OF VERIFICATION. The only effect of verification is to place the burden of proving the transfer on plaintiff, who is relieved of such proof only when no sworn plea is interposed.[50] So the fact of assignment only is raised by a sworn plea, and the time of assignment may be put in issue without verification.[51]

(IX) OBJECTIONS — WAIVER. The omission or interposition of a defective affidavit or verified plea is waived by going to trial on the merits,[52] by an agreement that all matters of defense may be given in evidence under the answer interposed,[53] or by the failure to object until after verdict.[54] The want of a verification cannot be reached by a general demurrer,[55] or by a demurrer for want of facts,[56] but must be specially excepted to.[57]

3. REPLICATION — a. In General — (I) WHEN NECESSARY. No replication is necessary where the plea merely serves to complete the issue[58] or sets forth matter irrelevant or immaterial to plaintiff's cause of action,[59] where the matter pleaded is defensive merely and does not amount to a counter-claim,[60] or where

60. Defensive matter and counter-claim distinguished.— An answer setting up that the note in suit was given in consideration of a machine which was warranted, that there was a breach of the warranty, and in conclusion praying damages was held to constitute a counter-claim and necessitate a replication under the North Dakota practice (Heebner v. Shephard, 5 N. D. 56, 63 N. W. 892); but on the other hand an answer setting up that the goods for which the note was given were not of the quality warranted and claiming damages for the breach of such warranty was held not to constitute a counter-claim and require a replication under the practice of New York (Nichols v. Boerum, 6 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 290). Nor, under the statutes of Minnesota, does a defense in an action by the transferee of an overdue note that the original payee owed defendant a debt due prior to such transfer constitute a counter-claim. Linn v.

the answer does not set up new matter.[61] But if plaintiff would avoid an answer by showing that the lex loci contractus is different from the law of the forum he must set out such law in his reply,[62] and a reply has been held necessary where the answer sets up that plaintiff is not a bona fide holder for value before maturity.[63] In some jurisdictions replication must be made to a plea of failure of consideration,[64] but as a rule this is not considered new matter, requiring a reply.[65] So too a plea of payment is not new matter and requires no replication,[66] and a failure to reply to a plea of want of consideration[67] or of non assumpsit[68] is waived by going to trial.

(II) SUFFICIENCY—(A) In General.[69] The replication, in an action on a note,[70] should traverse the material[71] averments of the new matter set forth in the answer or confess and avoid it,[72] by averments of facts,[73] and a replication to a part only of the averments in the answer is insufficient,[74] unless by virtue of the matter pleaded in the replication a part of the averments of the plea become immaterial,[75] and any scandalous matter should be stricken out.[76] But the general rules relating to pleading govern, with regard to the sufficiency, and a replication not involving duplicity, uncertainty, or other objectionable matter, but containing a substantial denial of the answer, will be held sufficient;[77] and it has been

75. As where for instance the answer avers that the note was given for lands the title to which had failed and the replication denies that this was the consideration. In such case the replication is not open to the objection that it replies to only a part of the answer, inasmuch as plaintiff's title to the land is immaterial if such land is not the consideration involved. 76. An allegation that the maker was a mere tool in the indorser's hands, that the maker had been indicted for perjury for swearing to an answer in another action, or that the sister of the maker had brought an action to have him removed as her trustee and the court in doing so had found him to be a dissolute man is scandalous and should be stricken out. held that a replication setting up an estoppel in pais against a married woman need not aver that she had knowledge of the defenses when she made the statements constituting such estoppel.[78]

(B) To Special Pleas—(1) DENIAL OF PLAINTIFF'S TITLE. A replication to an answer denying plaintiff' title and alleging that another party was the legal holder should deny title in such party at the time the action was instituted[79] and aver title in plaintiff,[80] although it is held that a replication that the suit is prosecuted for the benefit and use of the legal owner would be sufficient,[81] and a replication averring that plaintiff has an interest in the note will be understood to mean an interest sufficient to enable him to maintain a suit at law.[82]

(2) FAILURE OF CONSIDERATION. Where a replication to the plea of failure of consideration is made it is sufficient to reply generally that the consideration was adequate and did not fail in the manner and form alleged, or to specially set forth the consideration;[83] but a replication that plaintiff had not refused to deliver the consideration is not a suffieient answer to an allegation that the consideration had not been delivered,[84] and a general replication not specially denying that the note was given for the specific consideration alleged in the answer or that the consideration had failed in the manner and form set forth therein is insufficient.[85]

(3) NON EST FACTUM. While as a rule the plea of non est factum closes the issue and requires no reply,[86] a reply of estoppel may be pleaded thereto,[87] and where the facts pleaded by defendant show that the note is not binding on him a general replication would be but a deduction of law and insufficient.[88]

(4) PAYMENT OR SET-OFF. A replication denying payment in the language of the answer alleging such payment is sufficient,[89] and an admission of partial payment with an averment that no more was paid is a sufficient replication to a plea of payment in full.[90] Where defendant pleads a set-off a reply that he owes a sum in excess of the amount claimed as set-off is sufficient.[91] So too where plaintiff has both a note and an account against defendant he may sue upon the former and set up the latter in replication to a plea of set-off by defendant.[92]

b. Departure From Complaint. A replication to a plea setting forth facts foreign to the theory of plaintiff's recovery as set forth in the material allegations[95] in his petition is a departure and not allowable.[96] Thus a replication setting forth a right of action in favor of a ward of plaintiff where the complaint set forth the cause of action in favor of plaintiff in his own right,[97] a reliance upon the provisions of the statutes of a state other than that relied upon in the complaint,[98] or a reliance upon the provisions of a statute when the complaint relies upon the law merchant,[99] would be a departure; but matter tending to avoid the allegations in the plea and merely explanatory of the complaint and supporting and fortifying it is not a departure.[1] Thus where a plea puts in issue the ownership of the note, a replication setting forth the nature of plaintiff's ownership is not a departure, although the source of his title be differently averred in the complaint.[2]

4. Rejoinder. If after an answer alleging a want of consideration plaintiff has replied by showing prima facie a good consideration it is incumbent upon defendant to file a rejoinder if he would prove such want,[3] and where the answer alleges a failure of consideration, a rejoinder to a replication setting forth the consideration, which alleges but a partial failure, would be a departure.[4] By taking issue on the allegation of a rejoinder plaintiff admits that the same if true avoids his replication; and if this were made in confession and avoidance of defendant's answer such answer would then stand as confessed by plaintiff and a verdict should be rendered against him.[5]

5. Amendment — a. Of Declaration, Complaint, or Petition. The allowance of amendments to the declaration, petition, or complaint, in an action on a bill or note, rests largely in the discretion of the trial court.[6] Amendments will generally be permitted[7] in the furtherance of justice, provided a new and distinct was filed to an answer and plaintiff afterward with leave of the court withdrew the replication and refiled it, duly verified, and the court with knowledge of all the parties treated and considered it as duly verified, the irregularity in the proceedings was immaterial); Hendricks v. Cameron, 2 Tex. Failure to allege time of maturity.—Where a complaint fails to allege the time when a note sued on is payable, but the note itself is overdue, and the maker knows it to be the identical note which he will be called upon to defend, an amendment whereby the time of payment is inserted in no way changes the character of the action so as to affect the substantial rights of the parties, and is therefore allowable. b. Of Plea or Answer. The plea or answer may be amended[12] in the discretion of the trial court,[13] provided the amendment does not operate to surprise plaintiff[14] or set up an entirely new defense.[15]

6. Issues, Proof, and Variance — a. Evidence Admissible — (i) Under Declaration, Complaint, or Petition — (a) In General. A payee declaring on a draft may show that he paid the draft after notice of its dishonor;[16] but evidence to show the character of plaintiff's liability and that no demand was made of the maker is inadmissible in an action to recover money paid on a note by mistake, where no allegations to that effect are made,[17] and misrepresentations as to the circumstances of the maker made by an assignor to an assignee cannot be proved when not pleaded by the latter in suing the former.[18]

(b) Execution. Ratification of the filling of a note signed in blank may be shown, although not pleaded;[19] but where the sole issue of non-execution is found for defendant, it is error for the court without amendment to the pleadings to hear evidence and find defendant to be estopped from denying his signature or liability.[20]

(c) Consideration. A note reissued for a new consideration should be so declared on and not in its original form,[21] and where defendant relies on the defense of want of consideration for an acceptance the real consideration may be shown, although not pleaded.[22]

(D) Amount Due. In rebutting a defense of payment plaintiff may show a mistake in computation at the time of the alleged payment,[23] and under an allegation that a certain amount was due to the drawer of an order the amount due by the drawer when the order was accepted may be shown.[24] The date of a credit may be proved under an allegation stating the amount of, but not the time of, the credit.[25] In the absence of an allegation of disparity between specie and paper currency evidence relative thereto is inadmissible,[26] and, under an averment of the legal rate of interest in a foreign state where the note was made, proof is admissible that the note bore such interest by the laws of such state.[27]

(E) Transfer. Evidence of indorsement to plaintiff is admissible under an allegation of sale, assignment, and delivery,[28] and evidence of indorsement by a partner for his firm is admissible, although it is not alleged that he had authority or that the firm is a commercial one.[29] Under an allegation of transfer by indorsement, evidence is admissible of an indorsement pursuant to the resolution of a board of directors.[30] A retransfer to plaintiff by a subsequent indorser may be shown without an allegation to that effect.[31] Intermediate indorsements may be proved, although not alleged, to overcome matters of defense set up by defendant after plaintiff has made out a prima facie case.[32] Under an allegation of indorsement as a condition of a loan to the maker evidence of the indorser's privity to the negotiations is admissible.[33] Proof of assignment is admissible under an allegation of indorsement and lawful holding.[34]

(F) Ownership and Possession. Under an allegation that plaintiff is the assignee evidence is admissible that he is entitled to all the rights of a bona fide purchaser for value,[35] and he may prove defendant's possession of the note sued on, although he does not allege it.[36]

(G) Demand and Notice. An allegation of demand[37] or that a note was duly protested[38] authorizes proof of due presentment at the place designated in the instrument. Under an allegation of presentment at maturity plaintiff may show that by the law where the demand was made the instrument was not entitled to grace,[39] and under allegations of demand and notice the protest and certificate thereof are admissible,[40] but facts excusing notice must be averred.[41]

(H) Collateral Agreements. Under a declaration on an agreement signed by defendant and indorsed on a note to which he was not a party, plaintiff cannot produce the note signed on the back by defendant and prove an agreement by parol.[42] So under an obligation of an agreement that the indorser and not the maker should be liable evidence that defendant indorsed as a surety is admissible.[43]

(4) Fraud. Facts tending to establish fraud may be given in evidence under the general issue,[56] unless required by statute to be specially pleaded.[57]

(5) Good Faith of Purchaser. In an action by an indorsee against the maker, where the declaration alleges that the note passed into plaintiff's hands before maturity, defendant may show under the general issue that the note did not pass into plaintiff's hands until after its maturity.[58]

(6) PAYMENT. In an action on a note evidence of payment is competent under the general issue,[59] unless required by statute to be specially pleaded.[60]

(7) PROTEST AND NOTICE. The defense of want of due notice to an indorser of a note must be specially pleaded to be available.[61]

(c) Under Special Plea — (1) OF FRAUD. Under a plea of fraud the evidence must be confined to the fraud alleged in the plea.[62]

(2) OF LIMITATIONS. In an action by the indorsee against the maker, the maker cannot, under an answer setting up the statute of limitations, introduce in aid of such plea evidence of a want of consideration for the note.[63]

(3) OF NON EST FACTUM. The plea of non est factum puts in issue only the execution of the note[64] and confines defendant in his proof to the issue thus made.[65] Accordingly fraud,[66] illegality of consideration,[67] want of consideration,[68] in an action upon a note by an indorsee plaintiff's bona fides cannot be questioned under a plea of the general issue.

See also Taylor v. Moore, 23 Ark. 408 (holding that upon a plea that the note was given in part consideration of a wharf-boat which plaintiff on the sale falsely and fraudulently represented to be sound and adapted to use, the main issue is whether such representations were made, and until that fact is shown evidence as to the soundness is inadmissible); Corbin v. Flack, 19 Ind. 459.

Conspiracy to defraud.— Where an action on a note is brought by the second indorsee and the answer alleges that the payee and the first indorsee conspired together to defraud defendant, the latter may prove statements made to him by the payee at and before the time the note was executed, and statements made by the first indorsee at a time when he held the note, tending to show in connection with other testimony that plaintiff had notice of the conspiracy. or payment[69] cannot be proved under it; but evidence of want of delivery[70] or alteration after execution[71] is competent under a plea denying the execution of the note sued on.

(4) Of Payment. Under the plea of payment any matters may be given in evidence which tend to show payment[72] or which amount in law to a satisfaction of the note;[73] but failure of consideration,[74] want of consideration,[75] execution in a representative capacity,[76] or mistake,[77] cannot be shown under such plea.

(5) Of Want, Failure, or Illegality of Consideration. The evidence offered under a plea of want, failure, or illegality of consideration must correspond with the allegations of the plea.[78] Thus under a plea of want of consideration a conditional delivery,[79] an illegal consideration,[80] or fraud in execution[81] cannot be shown. In like manner where the only defense pleaded is failure of consideration defendant will not be allowed to prove that plaintiff is not the owner of the note.[82] On the other hand under the plea of total failure of consideration defendant may obtain an abatement in the sum agreed to be paid, if the evidence shows a partial failure.[83] So under an answer alleging that the note

Payment to third person.— In an action to recover a balance alleged to be due and unpaid on a note, evidence of a partial payment by defendant to a third person, at plaintiff's request, is admissible under a plea of payment in full by defendant to plaintiff. See also Wentworth v. Dows, 117 Mass. 14, holding that in an action by the payee against the maker of a note given for the price of goods, where the only defense set up is want of consideration, the maker cannot prove, in reduction of damages, either a breach of warranty or a fraudulent representation in the sale of the goods. But see Porter v. Gunnison, 2 Grant (Pa.) 297, holding that in an action on a note, under a notice to plaintiff to prove consideration, etc., defendant may give in evidence that the note has been stolen or lost, obtained by duress, or procured or put in circulation by fraud.

82. Russell v. Gregg, 49 Kan. 89, 30 Pac. 185.

In Illinois the statutory defense of a partial failure of consideration is not admissible under a plea of total failure. Swain v. Cawood, was given for an illegal consideration defendant may show that it was made in renewal of a note so given.[84]

b. Matters Which Need Not Be Proved — (I) Matters Admitted — (A) In General. Since the rule is elementary that no proof is required as to matters not in issue, where the answer to a declaration or complaint on a negotiable instrument admits its execution, it is unnecessary to produce further proof thereof or to introduce the instrument in evidence.[85] Since, however, a note is not executed until it is signed and delivered, it has been held that an admission in an answer that the maker of the note signed it will not dispense with proof of delivery and payment of the consideration therefor.[86]

(B) By Failure to Deny. The rule is well settled that every material allegation of the declaration or complaint not controverted by the answer or other pleadings shall, for the purposes of the action, be taken as true.[87] This rule is

3 Ill. 505; Belden v. Church, 23 Ill. App. 473. But under a plea of partial failure of consideration, it is competent for defendant to show by parol proof that a note was given in part for real estate, and in part for improvements which were to be made thereon by the vendor, but which were not made; and their value is the extent of the failure of consideration. Jones v. Buffum, 50 Ill. 277. So in an action by one partner against his copartner on a note given on settlement of partnership affairs, items accidentally omitted from the settlement are admissible only under a plea of failure of consideration. Johnson v. Wilson, 54 Ill. 419.

Failure and want of consideration.— Under pleas of failure and want of consideration, it may be proved that a note sued on, although absolute in its terms, was given as an indemnity to plaintiff against loss as surety. Laroque v. Russell, 7 Ala. 798. See also Chamberlain v. Painesville, etc., R. Co., 15 Ohio St. 225, holding that where defendant by way of defense to a note pleads in general terms that it is wholly without consideration and void, and plaintiff, without requiring a statement of the facts on which the defense is based, joins issue, any evidence is admissible on the trial which tends to impeach or sustain the consideration. And see Westbrook v. Howell, 34 Ill. App. 571, holding that in an action on a due-bill defendant can show, under a plea of want of consideration, that the indebtedness for which it had been given had been paid before the due-bill was made.

Turner v. White, 4 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 465, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,264.

Where denial is not filed.— In Indiana, in a suit upon a promissory note in the hands of an indorsee, where the execution of the note is denied but the denial is not filed, proof of the delivery of the note to the payee by the maker is not required. Miller v. Voss, 40 Ind. 307.

Admission of assignment.— Where in a suit against the drawer, accepter, and indorsers of a bill of exchange, it was averred that the last indorser assigned the bill without indorsement in writing and the answer of such indorser admitted the making of the assignment, it was held that no further proof thereof was needed. equally applicable to the allegation of execution,[88] indorsements,[89] and demand of payment.[90]

(II) Surplusage. Any part of the declaration or complaint which may be stricken out without destroying plaintiff's right of action may be treated as surplusage and need not be proved.[91]

c. Variance — (I) Allegations in Declaration, Complaint, or Petition — (A) Description of Instrument — (1) In General. In Florida it has been held that the provision of the statute (Thompson Dig. Fla. 348) which dispenses with proof of execution of bonds, notes, etc., unless the same be denied by the plea of the defendant under oath, does not apply to the indorsement or assignment of such instruments. New York.— Bedell v. Carll, 33 N. Y. 581, holding that since the holder of a negotiable instrument indorsed in blank need give no other evidence of title, unless his possession be impeached by proof of mala fides, in an action on such instrument an allegation in the complaint that plaintiff acquired title by gift from the payee is immaterial and need not be proved.

(2) Pleading According to Legal Effect of Instrument — (a) In General. In declaring upon a written instrument it is not necessary to set out its very words, but it may be pleaded according to its legal effect, and only its obligatory parts need be stated.[93] If, however, the instrument be declared on according to its legal effect, that effect must be truly stated, and if there be a failure in either mode an exception may be taken for the variance and the instrument cannot be given in evidence.[94]

(b) Immaterial Variance. A party is not bound to prove matters which are merely surplusage or immaterial averments, and if the proof does not correspond with such matters and averments the variance is immaterial and will be disregarded where the paper is described in effect.[95]

Where words are wrongly spelled in the original instrument it is not a material variance for the pleader in his petition and summons, in setting out a copy of the note sued

(c) Instrument in Foreign Language. Where the declaration or complaint describes the instrument sued on according to its tenor and effect, if it be in a foreign language, it may nevertheless be stated as if it were in English without noticing the foreign language.[96]

(3) Where Instrument Is Made Part of Declaration or Complaint. The general rule seems to be that when the instrument sued on is annexed to, and made part of, the declaration or complaint, there can be no variance between the allegata and probata, since the instrument will control the averments.[97]

(4) Words of Negotiability. In an action upon a promissory note, if it be declared upon as payable to plaintiff directly, when in fact it is payable to his order,[98] or if it is described as payable to his order, when in fact it is payable to him directly,[99] there is no variance.

(5) Place of Execution. A contract evidenced by a promissory note is transitory, and it is not necessary, in an action on such instrument dated at a particular place, to state the place of its date in the declaration;[1] and where the declaration alleges that an instrument was executed at a specified place, and the instrument produced in evidence is silent as to the place of execution, there is no material variance, and the allegation as to the place of execution may be treated as surplusage.[2] So according to the better doctrine where an instrument has been declared on as executed at a certain place, and the instrument itself, when produced in evidence, shows that it was executed at a different place the variance has been held to be immaterial.[3]

(6) TIME OF EXECUTION. In some jurisdictions where, in an action on a negotiable instrument, the declaration states that it was given at a particular time, this is not descriptive of such instrument, and a variance between it and the date of the instrument is not material.[4] In other jurisdictions, however, the time laid in the declaration is material, and where the action is brought on the instrument itself, it must be proved as laid, unless laid under a videlicet.[5]

(7) DESCRIPTION OF PARTIES — (a) MAKER OR DRAWER — aa. General Rule. Where the description of the maker or drawer of the instrument declared on, as set forth in the declaration or complaint, differs materially from the instrument itself the variance is fatal.[6]

bb. Idem Sonans. The courts, however, do not treat as fatal any slight and trivial variance, such as the omission or transposition of a letter, but the variance must be a substantial and material one, such as would render the instrument offered in evidence a different and distinct instrument from the one described in the declaration or complaint, to authorize the court to exclude it from the jury on the ground of variance.[7]

cc. Abbreviations or Contractions. The generally accepted rule is that where the drawer, maker, or payee of a negotiable instrument is described by his full name in the declaration or complaint, and abbreviations, contractions, or initials have been used in designating him in the instrument itself, there is no material variance, provided there is no attempt in the declaration or complaint to set out the instrument in hæc verba.[8]

dd. Principal or Agent. Where a negotiable instrument is executed by a person as agent or in a fiduciary capacity, the fact that the principal is described in the declaration or complaint as the drawer or maker of the instrument will create no variance, the pleader having the right to declare according to the operation of law on the contract.[9] On the other hand where a negotiable instrument is executed by a party individually, and is declared on as executed for and in behalf of a designated principal by such party, the variance is fatal.[10] So where a negotiable instrument is executed by a party as agent or in a fiduciary capacity, and is declared on as executed by such party in his individual capacity, it is a fatal variance.[1]

ee. Joint or Several Promisors. It is no variance to declare on a joint and several note as a joint note, or to aver that the makers promised to pay the money, this being its legal effect.[12] Conversely, where a note is described in the declaration as executed by defendant, and the note produced in evidence is shown to have been executed by defendant and another, there is no variance, the note being still that of defendant, although executed by another with him.[13]

(b) PAYEE. The name of the original payee of a negotiable instrument is an essential part of the description, and a misrecital is fatal. Thus where such instrument is declared on as payable to plaintiff, and the instrument introduced in evidence is payable to a third party, the variance is material, and the instrument

So where parties are declared against as joint makers of a promissory note, the production of a note signed at the foot by one, the name of the other appearing in blank on the back of the note, will prima facie support the declaration (Lincoln v. Hinzey, 51 Ill. 435); but where a declaration is on a joint note and the evidence shows a note by one party, the variance is fatal to a recovery (Hopkins v. Farwell, 32 N. H. 425).

may properly be excluded;[14] but it is not necessary for the declaration or complaint to describe the payee otherwise than as he is described in the instrument itself.[15] The failure of the declaration to aver the capacity in which the payee is to receive the money, or the purpose for which he is to apply it, where both are set forth in the body of the instrument sued on, does not amount to a material variance.[16]

(8) AMOUNT. In an action upon a negotiable instrument, the amount declared upon in the declaration or complaint should correspond with the amount stated in the instrument produced in evidence, and even the slightest variance in this respect has been held to be fatal.[17]

(9) INTEREST. Where the declaration or complaint makes no mention of interest and the note introduced in evidence bears interest the variance has been held fatal.[18] Conversely, where the declaration or complaint describes the note declared on as for a certain sum with interest and the instrument offered in evidence is silent as to the interest the variance is fatal.[19]

Omission of word "dollars."—Where a note was declared on for four hundred and forty-seven dollars and sixty-six cents, and the instrument offered in evidence corresponded therewith, except that the word "dollars" was omitted, it was held that there was no variance and that the word must be supplied by construction. (10) PLACE OF PAYMENT. In some jurisdictions the rule has been laid down that a negotiable instrument made payable at a particular place will not support a declaration or complaint upon an instrument described as payable generally.[20] In others, however, it has been held that a variance in the description of place of payment is not material, where defendant is not misled thereby, since a variance in description must be both material and misleading.[21]

(11) TIME OF PAYMENT. In many cases it has been held that the declaration or complaint must state accurately the time of payment of the instrument, and that even a slight variance in this respect between the declaration or complaint and the instrument itself is fatal.[22] In others, however, the rule is laid down that a variance between an allegation in a pleading and proof is not material unless it has actually misled the adverse party, to his prejudice, in maintaining his action or defense upon the merits, and that a slight variance between the declaration or complaint and the instrument declared on as to the time of payment is not fatal.[23]

(12) Mode and Form of Payment. As a general rule allegations as to the mode and form of payment of negotiable instruments should correspond with the proof and a material variance in this respect is fatal.[24] Where, however, the stipulation in a note as to the manner of payment is for the benefit of the maker, the rule is that if the maker in such case neglects to avail himself of the privilege inserted for his benefit, the note, according to its terms, becomes an absolute promise to pay money, and a complaint which so describes it conforms to its legal effect and is sufficient.[25]

(13) Consideration. The omission from the declaration or complaint of the words "for value received," where they occur in the instrument sued on, or the failure to allege the specific consideration stated in such instrument does not constitute a variance.[26] Conversely, an allegation in the declaration or complaint that the instrument was given for value received, where the phrase does not occur in the instrument itself, will not constitute a variance.[27]

Reason of rule.— In North Bank v. Abbott, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 465, 470, 25 Am. Dec. 334, the court said: "The principle of allowing some latitude in the mode of proof, where a presentment and demand are averred in the declaration, seems to be this; the plaintiff does not give in evidence matters strictly in excuse, but a qualified presentment and demand, or acts which in their legal effect and by the custom of merchants, are deemed equivalent to a demand."

of time and place of presentment when laid under a videlicet, and he is authorized to make his proof conform to the legal effect of the declaration.[33]

(B) Indorsement or Transfer — (1) IN GENERAL. While it has been held that in an action on a note by the payee, indorsements may be disregarded in describing the note,[34] yet where the declaration or complaint sets out an indorsement, and the instrument declared on does not correspond with the allegation, the variance is fatal.[35] In some jurisdictions, however, the transferee is allowed to fill up the blank indorsement to himself and to aver in his petition that it was made in that form, without making a material variance.[36]

(2) DESCRIPTION OF PARTIES. Where the declaration avers an indorsement to the indorsee by certain designation or name, a variance between such description and the instrument produced in evidence has been held to be fatal;[37] but a variance between the name of the indorser as set out in the complaint and that shown by the instrument offered in evidence is immaterial when the instrument set out in the exhibit corresponds with the latter,[38] and where the declaration or complaint only sets out the indorsement in substance and there is no attempt to describe accurately by what name or designation the order to pay plaintiff was made, there is no variance.[39]

Allegation of ownership.—Where plaintiff alleged in his complaint that he was the owner and holder of the note declared on, while the evidence showed that he held said note only as collateral security for money paid and advanced on the strength and credit of the same, it was held that he was the owner of the instrument to the amount for which the paper had been pledged to him, and that there was no variance. Striking out indorsements.— The owner of a negotiable instrument having the right to strike out all subsequent indorsements made merely for the purpose of collection may, in setting out the instrument in his declaration, omit altogether those indorsements which have been stricken out. Tennessee Bank v. Smith, 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 609.

(3) TIME OF. In an action by an indorsee upon a negotiable instrument, if the declaration or complaint avers that the indorsement was made before the instrument became due, and it appears in evidence to have been made after maturity, this is not a material variance.[40]

(4) IN ACTION AGAINST INDORSER. In an action against an indorser a special indorsement, which qualifies the contract or goes in discharge of the liability of the indorser, must be stated by way of averment in order to avoid a variance.[41]

(II) ALLEGATIONS IN PLEA OR ANSWER — (A) Non-Execution. A plea of non est factum is supported by proof that the note sued on when executed was for a smaller amount,[42] but a plea denying corporate execution is not sustained by a note signed by officers of the corporation who, by statute, are vested with authority to manage its affairs.[43]

(B) Want of Consideration. A plea of want of consideration is not sustained where there is evidence of any consideration, however inadequate,[44] or by proof that a consideration fraudulently represented to be good was really of no value;[45] but such a plea is sustained by proof that the note was given for a valueless article.[46]

(C) Failure of Consideration. A plea of total failure of consideration requires proof of the consideration as alleged,[47] and is sustained by proof that the subject-matter for which the instrument was given had no value[48] or by proof of the infirmity of the title of a third party to land for which the note in suit was given in payment and which plaintiff had procured to be transferred to defendant;[49] but not by proof of a partial failure.[50]

(D) Partial Failure. Partial failure of consideration must be proved to the extent to which it is pleaded.[51]

(E) Illegality of Consideration. A plea admitting a consideration but denying its validity is not proved by showing that there was no consideration for the instrument or that it failed.[52]

(F) Payment. Where defendant pleads an agreement by the payee to apply so much of his indebtedness to the former toward payment of the note as should be necessary for that purpose he may prove a debt of any amount;[53] but a plea of an agreement to accept in payment a note made by a third party to

Where the allegation was that payment was guaranteed in the words "payment guarantee," and the note offered in evidence contained the phrase "payment guaranteed," it was held that this description was not such as tended to mislead or surprise the adverse party, and hence that it was properly disregarded by the court. E. Evidence — 1. Presumptions and Burden of Proof — a. Execution and Delivery — (I) Execution — (A) In General. At common law a plaintiff suing upon a promissory note was bound to prove its execution by defendant or by some one acting by defendant's authority. Statutes have very generally changed this rule, however, so that when an action at law or a suit in chancery is founded on a promissory note or other written instrument the burden of proving its execution is not cast on plaintiff,[55] unless its execution is denied by proper plea.[56] In some jurisdictions where defendant pleads the general issue and verifies his plea by his affidavit, the burden is thrown on plaintiff of proving the due execution of the instrument.[57] In other jurisdictions, however, it is provided by statute that the denial of due execution must be specific in order to make proof thereof necessary at the trial.[58]

(B) Place of Execution. The place at which a promissory note bears date is held to be prima facie the place where the note was made[59] and this place is also presumed to be the place of the maker's residence.[60] Where the contrary is not shown it will be presumed that a note sued on in a state was executed in the state.[61]

(C) Time of Execution. If there be no date the instrument will be considered as dated at the time it was made.[62] If dated the date will be prima facie[63]

It is not incumbent on plaintiff to show the capacity in which defendant executed the instrument, where it does not appear from the instrument itself that it was signed by defendant in any other than his personal capacity (Williams v. Miami Paper Co., 36 Ill. App. 107), that defendant was a guarantor as alleged in the complaint (Boynton v. Pierce, 79 Ill. 145), or the christian names of plaintiffs or that they were partners (Salisbury v. Gillett, 3 Ill. 290).

Where a bill is dated and drawn on Sunday and the acceptance is not dated it will not be presumed to have been accepted on Sunday (Begbie v. Levi, 1 Cr. & J. 180, 9 L. J. Exch. O. S. 51, 1 Tyrw. 130), and where a note was shown to have been signed on Sunday, but not in the presence of plaintiffs, and it bore date on a different day, the burden was held not to be on plaintiffs to show that it was not delivered on Sunday (Flanagan v. Meyer, 41 Ala. 132).

65. By statute in some states the holder of a note purporting to be executed by an agent need not prove the execution or the authority of the agent, unless they are expressly denied in the pleadings (Moore v. Holmes, 68 Minn. 108, 70 N. W. 872; Tarbox v. Gorman, 31 Minn. 62, 16 N. W. 466; Brashear v. Martin, 25 Tex. 202), and in England the rule of the text is changed as to bank drafts by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 59, § 19 (Charles v. Blackwell, 2 C. P. D. 151, 46 L. J. C. Where the agent is an officer of an incorporated company, his authority as agent is sometimes to be presumed from his office. or bill of exchange was delivered, arising from possession of the instrument by the payee, may be rebutted.[72]

(B) Place of Delivery. In the absence of place of date and of other evidence of place of delivery the maker's residence is prima facie the place of delivery.[73]

(C) Time of Delivery. In the absence of evidence to the contrary it is presumed that a bill or note was delivered at the time it bears date.[74]

b. Drawing and Acceptance of Bill — (I) Drawing of Bill. The law merchant presumes that a bill of exchange is drawn against funds provided to meet it.[75] If, however, a bill is drawn without funds provided to meet it, the law will presume that the drawer had no expectation that it would be paid and consequently that he was not injured by want of presentment and notice, and such presentment and notice are therefore unnecessary as to him.[76] latter's papers at her death (Blanchard v. Sheldon, 43 Vt. 512). So if found among papers of a deceased person who is a stranger to it, and whose representative makes no claim to it, no delivery to the payee will be presumed, and delivery, actual or constructive, must be shown (Mahon v. Sawyer, 18 Ind. 73), and a note intended for a gift, and found among waste papers of the maker after her death, is not presumed to have been delivered (Blanchard v. Williamson, 70 Ill. 647).

P. 41, 8 Scott 271, 37 E. C. L. 512).

The want of funds is only presumptive evidence that the drawer had no reasonable expectation of its being paid and the burden of proof is on the holder to show that there was no reasonable expectation (Hopkirk v. Page, 2 Brock. (U. S.) 20, 12 Fed. Cas. No. 6,697) and that the drawer was not injured by the

(II) Acceptance of Bill — (A) In General. Every acceptance raises the presumption of funds in the drawee's hands applicable to the payment of the bill,[77] especially if the bill request the drawee to pay "if in funds."[78] As between the accepter and the drawer, indorser, or other holder, for whose accommodation the acceptance was given, this presumption may be rebutted, and the true relation of the parties to each other shown.[79]

Letter of request.— The presumption applies only in the case of a mercantile bill and not to a mere letter of request. Gillilan v. Myers, 31 Ill. 525.

It is also presumptive evidence that the drawer had a reasonable expectation that it would be paid; but the burden of proving such expectation is on the drawer himself, where it appears that he had no funds in the drawee's hands at the time the bill became due. Richie v. McCoy, 13 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 541.

If a bill is drawn against merchandise in the accepter's hands, notwithstanding the presumption of funds made against the accepter in favor of a holder for value, there is an implied contract on the drawer's part to indemnify the accepter, upon which he will be liable to the accepter if the goods received prove insufficient to cover the bill. Hidden v. Waldo, 55 N. Y. 294; Blackmar v. Thomas, 28 N. Y. 67. But to recover against the accommodated drawer he must first prove the insufficiency of the goods sold, that being his primary fund for reimbursement. Gihon v. Stanton, 9 N. Y. 476.

This presumption is rebutted if the drawing and acceptance are both for the payee's accommodation, under an agreement that the accepter shall look to the payee for indemnity (Thurman v. Van Brunt, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 409), and if a bill is drawn upon a letter of credit to enable the drawer to buy goods, this will overcome the presumption, and the accepter, knowing this fact, cannot hold a joint drawer who has signed the bill for the accommodation of his co-drawer (Turner v. Browder, 5 Bush (Ky.) 216).

ser,[85] and to acceptances.[86] In some jurisdictions even a non-negotiable note imports a consideration;[87] but this is not so in others[88] and was not so at common law.[89] On the other hand this presumption is not to be extended to the signature of a co-maker who signs a note after its delivery[90] and may be rebutted by any competent evidence.[91]

On proof of there being no original consideration for the paper, it has been held that plaintiff must show himself to be a holder for value; and, he having done so, the burden is then shifted back to the maker to show that he had notice of the want of consideration at the time of purchasing the paper. (N. A. 785, holding that where an indorsed check which has been accepted as payment of a debt is not duly presented for payment, and is not paid because of the failure of the bank on which it was drawn, the burden of proof, in an action on the original debt, shifts to the holder to show that the debtor was not injured by such delay. But see Bradford v. Fox, 38 N. Y. 289 [reversing 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 203, 16 Abb. Pr. (N. (c) Time of Demand. Where the hour of making demand is not stated in a notary's certificate of protest it will be presumed to have been made in reasonable business hours.[57]

(II) Protest and Notice—(A) In General. There is no presumption that notice has been given to the drawer or indorser and the burden of proof is on the holder to show that he has given notice or has failed only after due diligence.[58] The burden is also on the holder to show that the notice was given in due time.[59]

(B) Effect of Delay or Failure. A drawer of a bill will be presumed to have been prejudiced by want of notice of non-acceptance.[60] Injury will further be presumed from the fact of negligence in giving notice of dishonor,[61] especially if the accepter or maker was solvent at the maturity of the bill or note and afterward became insolvent.[62]

(C) Excuse For Delay or Failure. The burden of proving an excuse for an action against him on the original indebtedness.

Lack of funds.— In an action on a check, where plaintiff shows that there were no funds in the bank to pay it, the burden as to proof of injury or no injury because of laches in presenting the check or failure to notify the drawer of its non-payment is shifted from plaintiff to defendant. McClain v. Lowther, 35 W. Va. 297, 13 S. E. 1003. So if the holder shows that the drawer has himself drawn out the funds against which the check was drawn or that the drawer was solvent when the check was presented the burden is shifted on the drawer to show that he has sustained damage. Coghlan v. Dinsmore, 9 Bosw. (N. Y.) 453. whether notice has been given him or not;[67] but such promise is presumptive, and not conclusive, evidence, and raises a question of fact for the jury to determine.[68] By taking up a note after protest and giving an absolute bond for the payment of the money the indorser admits that he received notice and the burden of proving the contrary is afterward on him;[69] and a promise to pay part of the amount of a dishonored bill[70] or an offer to secure the holder if he would take half the amount[71] is also prima facie evidence of due notice. Notice may also be presumed from part payment after maturity,[72] but this presumption, although such payment is not contradicted, is not binding upon the jury.[73]

From such offer a jury may infer either due notice or waiver of laches (Columbia Bank v. Mackall, 2 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 631, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 873), and the jury may draw an inference of notice from part payment by the drawer or indorser (Horford v. Wilson, 1 Taunt. 12), and their verdict, finding a demand and notice on such evidence, will be sustained (Bibb v. Peyton, 11 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 275).

Security given by an indorser for the amount of the note, after its dishonor, it seems, raises a strong presumption of notice or a waiver of the want of it. Union Bank v. Govan, 10 Sm. & M. (Miss.) 333.

(E) Notice by Mail. Depositing in the post-office a properly addressed, prepaid letter, containing a notice of protest raises a presumption that the notice reached its destination by due course of mail.[74] The postmark on a letter is also prima facie evidence of the time when the notice was mailed,[75] although not conclusive.[76]

(F) Authority of Notary. The authority of the notary to give notice of dishonor is to be inferred from the fact that the bill was in his possession.[77]

(G) Residence of Indorser. The residence of a party to a bill or note is presumed, for the purpose of notice of dishonor, to be the same as it was at the time he signed the instruments,[78] although he may have removed from that place some time before without the knowledge of the holder.[79]

(III) Waiver — (A) In General. A waiver of demand and notice will not be readily presumed,[80] and the burden is on the holder of the instrument to prove it;[81] but if the words, "We waive demand on the promisor and notice to ourselves," appear in writing over the name of several indorsers on a note they are admissible as prima facie evidence of a waiver.[82]

Payment of postage.—Where a notary public's certificate shows that he has mailed notice of protest, a prepayment of postage as required by post-office regulations will be presumed. In order to charge an indorser, where it is proper to send notice of protest by mail, which was not received by due course of mail, the burden is on plaintiff to show that the notice was properly mailed. 82. Farmer v. Rand, 14 Me. 225, 16 Me. 453. So the signature of defendant on a note which appears to be an indorsement and waiver of protest, not denied in the answer,

(B) New Promise After Dishonor.[83] Some of the authorities hold that knowledge of laches will be presumed and that the burden is on defendant, who promises to pay after dishonor, not only to prove the laches, but his ignorance of it at the time the promise was made.[84] Others are to the effect that where there has been laches on the holder's part in demand or notice, the burden is on him to prove that a subsequent promise to pay, which would amount to a waiver, was made with knowledge of such laches on the part of the drawer or indorser.[85]

g. Days of Grace. In a suit on a bill or note governed by foreign law, the provisions of that law as to the allowance of days of grace will be presumed to be the same as those of the law merchant, in the absence of evidence to the contrary.[86]

h. Payment — (I) In General. The party alleging payment must bear the burden of proving it,[87] and if he pleads by way of payment of a certificate of and admitted at the trial, is prima facie evidence of both. Johnson v. Parsons, 140 Mass. 173, 4 N. E. 196.

Where an indorser, after protest of a note, said that he had received or seen the protest and would have to pay, but would try to save himself out of a bill of sale which he held from the maker covering almost all of his property, this will amount to presumptive evidence of due notice or a waiver of it. Long v. Crawford, 18 Md. 220.

83. As prima facie evidence of notice see supra, XIV, E, 1, f, (II), (D).

A promise as evidence of notice presupposes notice. A promise as waiver of notice presupposes laches. The former raises a presumption which may be rebutted; the latter is often conclusive by way of estoppel. Randolph Comm. Pap. § 1316, note 771.

deposit that he had paid a previous order given for the same debt by the payee of the certificate to another person he must prove such payment.[88] Payment on a note is an admission of the debt as then due; but if the time is material the party making payment must prove when it was made.[89]

(II) Lapse of Time. A demand note will be presumed to have been paid after the lapse of twenty years,[90] and this is true although the statute of limitations had not run because of the non-residence of the maker,[91] or although the payee had died after holding the paper eight years, and no administrator was appointed for twenty-one years.[92] The length of time that has elapsed since an alleged payment may be considered with other evidence by a jury in determining whether it was made.[93] If a payment is proved to have been made in a certain year it will be presumed to have been made on the last day of the year, in the absence of other proof as to the date.[94] But the inference of payment arising from mere lapse of time is not sufficient to overcome positive evidence that a note has not been paid,[95] and there is no such presumption from lapse of time against an alien enemy.[96]

(III) Possession by Maker or Accepter. Payment of a bill or note will

Where the maker of a note is the son of the payee and a member of his family, and might have acquired possession of the note as well without payment as with, the presumption of payment does not arise from his possession of the note. trator[2] or agent[3] of the holder; or where the possession was obtained by the unauthorized act of the holder's agent.[4]

(IV) Possession by Payee. A bill or note is presumed to be still unpaid while it is in the possession of the payee[5] or his personal representative,[6] and if it is alleged that a note was paid and left by inadvertence in the holder's hands, it will not be sufficient to show that the habits of the payee were generally careless in such matters.[7]

(V) Receipt or Indorsement Showing Payment. An indorsement of a payment on a note, whether of interest or prineipal, made at a time when the note is in force,[8] is prima facie evidence of such payment by the person legally obligated to pay,[9] but this has been held to be so only where it is the handwriting of time[18] is not conclusive but may be rebutted. The presumption of non-payment arising from possession by the payee may be rebutted also,[19] and if it appears from payment of interest that the note was not paid the presumption may be rebutted by showing that the interest was paid by mistake.[20]

(VII) EXTENSION OF TIME. Payment of interest in advance raises a presumption of an agreement for time so far as the payment extends.[21]

(B) Of Agent. An agent in possession has prima facie authority to receive payment and surrender a note,[25] but either possession or proof aliunde of express authority to collect is indispensable.[26]

i. Usury. The burden of proof is on a defendant who alleges that a note is usurious.[27]

2. Admissibility — a. Acceptance — (I) In General. An acceptance which is ambiguous may be explained by parol,[28] and where an acceptance is not dated, the actual time of giving it may be proved by parol.[29]

(II) Fact of Acceptance. Where, in an action on a draft accepted by defendant, the defense is that the acceptance was conditional on the doing of certain work by the drawer, evidence that at maturity defendant asked for an extension is admissible to negative such defense.[30] And evidence that an order addressed to a manufacturing corporation by a workman in their employ was received by the paymaster and treated by him as he treated all such orders drawn on the corporation by their workmen, is competent evidence of the acceptance of this order by the corporation.[31]

be admissible to defeat a bona fide holder for value having no knowledge of it.[33]

b. Accident or Mistake. Parol evidence is admissible in an action on a note for the purpose of showing accident or mistake.[34]

c. Authority of Agent. Where it is incumbent on the holder of a bill or note to prove the agent's authority as agent of the maker or indorser, this may be done by parol evidence;[35] and even though the bill itself shows the agent to have acted under a special written authority, other evidence is admissible to establish this authority.[36]

d. Consideration — (I) In General. The real consideration for a bill or note may be shown by parol, where it is admissible as a defense,[37] for example,

So if an acceptance be expressly conditioned on the completion of a certain contract of a given date, it cannot be shown by parol to have been conditioned on any other unfinished contract unknown to the payee at the time. Hunting v. Emmart, 55 Md. 265.

Thus the breach of a condition against negotiating a bill of exchange cannot be set up against such a holder (Merritt v. Duncan, 7 Heisk. (Tenn.) 156, 19 Am. Rep. 612), although it would be available against a holder with notice (Greer v. Bently, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1251, 43 S. W. 219).

(Tenn.) 266, holding that proof by plaintiff that a note sued on was by agreement to fall due at a certain date, but by mistake of the parties, produced by the fraud of defendant, it was made payable at a different date is inadmissible.

Mistake in indorsement.— In an action against an indorser, who claimed to be one without recourse, evidence by defendant that the note was secured by a mortgage, which he formally assigned when he indorsed the note, and that in such assignment it was expressly stipulated that no recourse should be had to him on the note and mortgage, was admissible, as tending to prove mistake in the indorsement. Evidence of agency.— Where an agent has executed a draft for his principal, the agent's statements as to a former draft, executed by him under similar circumstances and paid by his principal, are admissible as evidence of his agency (McDonough v. Heyman, 38 Mich. 334); and admissions on the principal's part of his authority to execute another similar acceptance are admissible in confirmation of other evidence showing a general authority for the acceptance in question (Llewellyn v. Winckworth, 14 L. J. Exch. 329, 13 M. & W. 598). But where the payee's indorsement has been made by an agent, the payee's admission in writing of his agent's authority is not competent evidence of that fact in an action by the indorsee against the maker. It is not admissible to show that a note given by A to B, in consideration of C's note to A and a debt due from C to B, was given only to facilitate the collection of C's debt, and was only to be paid by A when C had paid him. Gillett v. Ballou, 29 Vt. 296. So it has been held inadmissible to show that a note was given for the transfer of certain debts and was only to be paid out of the proceeds collected. Walters v. Smith, 23 Ill. 342. But in defense to a note containing in liable,[48] that the note was intended as a mere receipt for money placed in the maker's hands for a special purpose and was so used,[49] that it was to be paid out of a particular fund only,[50] that the consideration was in part an unperformed agreement,[51] or, on a note for land, to show a contract other than the deed, for the purpose of impeaching the note.[52] Nor can the maker of a note show that it was given for more than was due "to keep down a fuss."[53]

(II) Of Indorsement. As against his immediate indorsee, an indorser in blank may introduce parol evidence going to show the consideration of the transfer.[54] Thus the indorser may show that his indorsement was wholly without consideration;[55] that he was merely the agent of the indorsee[56] or indorsed for his accommodation;[57] that the consideration for the transfer has failed[58] or been diverted;[59] that the indorsement was intended as a receipt and given on payment of the note[60] or merely to effect a transfer;[61] as a measure of damages, that the real consideration was less than the face of the note;[62] or that it was intended as a security for certain payments, the balance being payable to the indorser after such payments were satisfied.[63]

e. Declarations and Admissions of Former Holder. Declarations against interest made by the owner of a note before he has parted with its title or possession and when he alone is interested are admissible in evidence,[64] at least as

(B) Proof of Execution — (1) NOTE WITH SUBSCRIBING WITNESS. The execution of a note should be proved by the subscribing witness if there be one.[68] If, however, such witness is dead, is out of the jurisdiction,[69] or does not recollect his signature,[70] the execution may be proved by other evidence. So the admission of the maker that he executed the note on which suit is brought does away with the necessity of calling the subscribing witness.[71]

In an action on a sealed note against the obligor's executor, testimony of a subscribing witness that he believes his name subscribed thereto to be his own handwriting and that he remembers having attested but one note for the obligor is competent to prove the execution of the note, although the witness states that he does not believe the signature of the obligor to be in that person's handwriting or that the paper he attested was a sealed one. Churchill v. Speight, 3 N. C. 515. So where a deposing witness exhibits a copy of a note sued on, and his name appears as attesting witness, and he says that he has seen the original, he so identifies it that he may be asked whether the alleged maker executed it. Hazzard v. Vickery, 78 Ind. 64.

Evidence that the alleged attesting witness, who at the date of the note was under twelve years old and an office boy of the payee, could not, six years afterward, recollect whether or not he signed as such witness is competent on the issue whether the note was signed in the presence of an attesting witness. See 7 Cent. Dig. tit. "Bills and Notes," § 1709.

Proof of absence.— Proof that an attesting witness to a note, when last seen, was engaged in business out of the state, coupled with a return non est inventus on a subpœna by a constable of the city in which the attesting witness lived before going out of the state, is sufficient to let in secondary evidence of the genuineness of the signature. Troeder v. Hyams, 153 Mass. 536, 27 N. E. 775.

Proof of handwriting of witness.— Where the maker of a note has made his mark to it and the witness to the note is out of the state (Reed v. Wilson, 39 Me. 585; Whitaker v. Bussey, 2 Nott & M. (S. C.) 374; Shiver v. Johnson, 2 Brev. (S. C.) 397. See also Blackman v. Stogner, Cheves Eq. (S. C.) 175) or dead (Chaffe v. Cupp, 5 La. Ann. 684) proof of the handwriting of the witness is sufficient.

Sufficiency of admission.— The maker of a note payable to A or bearer, and attested by a subscribing witness, was called upon for payment, but the note was neither shown to him, nor the amount or date of it mentioned. The maker acknowledged that he had given a note to A, and said that he would pay it at a future day. It was held that this was not an admission of the execution of the note,

(2) NOTE WITH NO SUBSCRIBING WITNESS. In the absence of any subscribing witness the execution of a note may be shown by admissions of the maker,[72] by proof of his handwriting,[73] or by circumstantial evidence.[74]

(c) Proof of Non-Execution — (1) IN GENERAL. In an action on a note, the execution of which is denied, evidence that at the date of the note other transactions took place between the parties which render it improbable that the note was executed and which are inconsistent with its execution is admissible.[75] which would supersede the necessity of proving it by the subscribing witness. Shaver v. Ehle, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 201.

See 7 Cent. Dig. tit. "Bills and Notes," § 1709.

Admission in affidavit of defense.— An affidavit of defense admitting that defendant made the note may be read in evidence in the same case by plaintiff, who is payee, to prove the making of the note. Bowen v. De Lattre, 6 Whart. (Pa.) 430.

Admissions of partner.— In an action brought against an alleged surviving partner, upon a promissory note alleged to have been signed by the deceased partner in the name of the firm, admissions by the signer in his lifetime that he signed the note are admissible. Adams v. Brownson, 1 Tyler (Vt.) 452.

Part payment.— If one makes a payment on a note purporting to be executed by him, promises frequently to pay the balance, and does not dispute the genuineness of the note, he will be presumed, in a suit thereon, to have executed it, in the absence of evidence to the contrary. Warren v. Able, 91 Ind. 107.

But an indorsement of payment upon a note, without proof of payment, is of itself no evidence tending to prove that the person purporting to have been the maker of the note had recognized its validity. Brown v. Munger, 16 Vt. 12.

Comparison of notes signed by mark.— Promissory notes found among the papers of an illiterate deceased person, purporting to have been signed by him with his mark, and which he had paid, are, on the trial of an action against his administrator upon another promissory note, also purporting to have been signed by the intestate with his mark, admissible in evidence for the purpose of comparing the marks thereon with that affixed to the note in suit. Little v. Rogers, 99 Ga. 95, 24 S. E. 856. But see Travers v. Snyder, 38 Ill. App. 379.

E. 263; Hays v. Morgan, 87 Ind. 231; Holmes v. Riley, 14 Kan. 131. See also De Arman v. Taggart, 65 Mo. App. 82, holding that where there is evidence that defendant made a note in controversy in a certain store, and that the paper used was taken from the proprietor's book of blank notes, such blank book is admissible in evidence to show that the form and character of the note in suit corresponded with the blanks.

Note withheld by defendant.— Where a promissory note upon which action is brought is wrongfully withheld by defendant, the testimony of one who has seen the note is admissible to show that the note is in the handwriting of defendant and bears his signature. Prescott v. Ward, 10 Allen (Mass.) 203.

Testimony of eye-witness.— It is not essential, where the execution of a note is put in issue, to prove its execution by an eye-witness. Melvin v. Hodges, 71 Ill. 422.

75. Hunter v. Harris, 131 Ill. 482, 23 N. E. 626.

Habits of alleged maker.— In an action on a note, where defendant denies that he executed it, evidence is admissible in his behalf as to his habit of giving notes; but it must be confined to his general reputation in that regard. Travers v. Snyder, 38 Ill. App. 379.

Statements of alleged co-maker.— The question being as to the fact of defendant's signature to a promissory note, the testimony of another person whose name was on the note that he himself had not signed it is

On an issue as to the execution of a note by defendant's intestate, evidence tending to show that such intestate did not owe any money to the person to whom the note was executed is admissible to show the improbability of its execution.[76]

(2) FORGERY. Where the defense set up is forgery, evidence as to the financial dealings of the parties is admissible as tending to show the probability or improbability of defendant having signed the note.[77]

(D) Time of Execution. Although a note bears a written date, the actual date of its execution may be shown by parol,[78] but parol evidence is not admissible to prove a mistake in date in a suit brought by an innocent purchaser and to his disadvantage.[79] admissible. Corser v. Paul, 41 N. H. 24, 77 Am. Dec. 753.

76. Carpenter v. Wilmot, 24 Mo. App. 589.

Pecuniary condition of parties.— On an issue as to the making of a note by an intestate it is not relevant that when it was given and when it became due he had a large sum of money lying idle. Bridgman v. Corey, 62 Vt. 1, 20 Atl. 273. So evidence that the deceased was "a man of property" and had money "loaned out" when he died is not competent to disprove his execution of a note, particularly as it was not shown that at any time from the execution of the note to his death deceased had money on hand. Pettiford v. Mayo, 117 N. C. 27, 23 S. E. 252. And in an action against a personal representative on notes of the deceased it is error to admit, as evidence of non-execution of the notes, the fact that the deceased several years prior to the dates of the notes received a large legacy of money. Taylor v. Gale, 14 Wash. 57, 44 Pac. 110. And the fact that the payee had no money to loan cannot be shown by his reputation for being "hard up" at the time the note was alleged to have been given. Bliss v. Johnson, 162 Mass. 323, 38 N. E. 446.

77. Nickerson v. Gould, 82 Me. 512, 20 Atl. 86. See also Gitchell v. Ryan, 24 Ill. App. 372, holding that evidence that defendant was not indebted to plaintiff is admissible, although there is no plea of want of consideration, as it tends to show that defendant did not execute the note. And on an issue as to whether plaintiff had signed a certain check, or whether it had been forged by the payee, evidence by the payee that a criminal intimacy between herself and plaintiff had been discovered by her husband, and that the check in question had been paid by plaintiff in remuneration, is competent to show a state of affairs which would render it probable that plaintiff had given her the check. Crane v. Horton, 5 Wash. 479, 32 Pac. 223. And see Stevenson v. Stewart, 11 Pa. St. 307.

Ability to commit forgery.— Where, in an action on a note, the defense is forgery, it cannot be shown that plaintiff had the capacity, skill, and appliances to commit the forgery. Costelo v. Crowell, 139 Mass. 588, 2 N. E. 698. See also Vaughn v. Wilson, 31 Mo. App. 489, holding that in an action on a note which one of the joint makers alleges was forged, evidence that his signature could be successfully imitated by the other joint maker is inadmissible. And see Stratton v. Nye, 45 Nebr. 619, 63 N. W. 928.

Similar transactions.— In an action on a note claimed by defendant to have been forged it is not competent for him to show that the payee had at other times and unconnected with the note in suit negotiated forged paper. Monitor Plow Works v. Born, 33 Nebr. 747, 51 N. W. 129. See also Hartford Bank v. Hart, 3 Day (Conn.) 491, 3 Am. Dec. 274; Dodge v. Haskell, 69 Me. 429; Benedict v. Rose, 24 S. C. 297.

(II) Delivery—(A) Conditional Delivery. As between the parties or others having notice, conditional delivery of a bill or note may be set up in defense and may be shown by parol evidence.[80]

(B) Time of Delivery. It may be shown that an instrument dated on Sunday was really delivered on another day and is therefore valid.[81]

g. Explaining Ambiguity. Parol evidence is admissible to explain an ambiguity apparent on the face of the paper,[82] especially where there is a disagreement between the note and a contemporaneous collateral mortgage for the same debt;[83] but parol evidence is not admissible for the purpose of explaining a patent ambiguity in a bill or note.[84]

h. Fraud — (I) In General. Parol evidence is admissible to show that the execution of a note was obtained through false and fraudulent representations.[85]

(II) Indorsement Procured by Fraud. Parol evidence is admissible to show that the indorsement of a note was procured by fraud.[86]

i. Indorsement. The regular and usual evidence of the transfer by indorsement of a negotiable note is by proof of the handwriting of the indorser.[87]

Duress.— Where, in an action on a negotiable instrument, plaintiff's title as a bona fide holder is impeached by evidence sufficient to raise any question on that point for the jury, defendant has a right to offer evidence of matter of defense which would be good against the original payee, such as the fact that the note was obtained from him by duress. Cortland First Nat. Bank v. Green, 43 N. Y. 298.

Fraud of agent.— Where an agent buys land with the money of his principal and takes notes for the price in his own name, it is competent for the principal to prove the fact by parol and assert title to the money. Andrews v. Jones, 10 Ala. 460.

87. Smith v. Prescott, 17 Me. 277.

Accompanying guaranty.— In an action on a promissory note, purporting to be indorsed by defendant, a guaranty signed by defendant on the same note is admissible in evidence of the genuineness of the indorsement. Cabot Bank v. Russell, 4 Gray (Mass.) 167.

j. Instrument Sued on. The note, when its execution is not denied, proves itself and may be offered in evidence.[88] The note is also admissible, although its execution is put in issue by proper plea, if there is any evidence, proper for the jury, tending to show that defendant executed it.[89] So proof of the genuineness of the signature authorizes the introduction of the note.[90]

k. Nature of Liability and Relation Between Parties — (i) In General. As between the parties liable upon a bill or note parol evidence is generally admissi-

Admissions of indorser.— In an action by an indorsee of a note against the maker, evidence of the admission of the indorsement by the indorser is inadmissible. Robertson v. Crockett, 1 Yerg. (Tenn.) 203. But see McKown v. Mathes, 19 La. 542; Powell v. Adams, 9 Mo. 766.

Parol evidence of the indorsement of a promissory note, without production of the note, is inadmissible, unless the note is not in the power of the party. De Pusey v. Du Pont, 1 Del. Ch. 77. So in a suit by the indorsee of a promissory note against the maker to recover the amount of the note plaintiff must prove the indorsement of the payee by introducing the note and not a copy in evidence. Hammond v. Freeman, 9 Ark. 62. But evidence that the name of the payee, indorsed on a promissory note, is the signature by which his business was transacted at the time of the indorsement, is admissible to prove the indorsement binding upon him, without proving it to be in his own handwriting. Erasure of indorsement.— In an action on a note, on which the indorsement of a part payment had been erased, the note may be read in evidence, without previous explanation of the erasure. Kimball v. Lamson, 2 Vt. 138.

Note containing omission.— In an action on a note payable "twenty-four after date," the note is admissible in evidence without other testimony, under an averment in the declaration that twenty-four months after date was the time meant by the parties, the jury being the judges of the fact of the time of payment intended. Corner v. Routh, 7 How. (Miss.) 176, 40 Am. Dec. 59.

Proof of the execution and required registration of an instrument obviates the necessity of proving the execution of the note attached to the instrument, which the latter was intended to secure. Steiner v. McCall, 61 Ala. 413.

Admission of signature.—Where a plea of non est factum has been filed to a suit on a note, the note is admissible in evidence on proof of defendant's admission that he signed it and without any explanation of its contents where no alterations appear on the face of the note. Gwin v. Anderson, 91 Ga. 827, 18 S. E. 43.

Proof of indorsements.— In an action on a note by the payee against the maker, the payee makes out a prima facie case by showing possession, and he need not therefore set out in the complaint or establish by evidence indorsements on the back of it in order to introduce the note in evidence. Anniston Pipe Works v. Mary Pratt Furnace Co., 94 Ala. 606, 10 So. 259; Howry v. Eppinger, 34 Mich. 29. But see Poorman v. Mills, 35 Cal. 118, 95 Am. Dec. 90; Youngs v. Bell, 4 Cal. 201, which hold that in an action by an indorsee against the maker, proof of the indorsement of the note is necessary to make it admissible, unless such proof is waived by defendant when the indorsement is offered. And see Newton v. Principaal, 82 Mich. 271, 46 N. W. 234, holding that where plaintiff's title to a note accrues through the indorsement of the payee's name by his alleged agent, the note is not admissible without proof of the agent's authority to make the indorsement.

Proof of handwriting.— In an action on a note, preliminary proof of the handwriting of the makers is sufficient to admit it in evidence. Irvine v. Lumbermen's Bank, 2 Watts & S. (Pa.) 190. But it is not necessary to give positive proof of the handwriting of the maker, in order to suhmit the note to the jury. A qualified expression of belief that it is his handwriting is sufficient. Watson v. Brewster, 1 Pa. St. 381.

Suit of indorsee.— This has also been held true at the suit of the payee's immediate indorsee (Browning v. Merritt, 61 Ind. 425) or at the suit of an indorsee after maturity (Levi v. Mendell, 1 Duv. (Ky.) 77; Seymour v. Farrell, 51 Mo. 95).

11. Watkins v. Kirkpatrick, 26 N. J. L. 84, where plaintiff was an indorsee of the payee after maturity, and defendant was allowed to show that he indorsed the note as a surety.

12. Bradford v. Prescott, 85 Me. 482, 27 Atl. 461.

Thus the indorser of a note before its delivery cannot show an agreement with the payee that he should only be liable as an accommodation indorser (Chaffe v. Memphis, etc., R. Co., 64 Mo. 193) or that he should not be liable at all (Gumz v. Giegling, 108 Mich. 295, 66 N. W. 48).

Even at the suit of a holder with notice of the character of the indorsement, such evidence is inadmissible to show that the indorser intended a joint making and not an indorsement. Vore v. Hurst, 13 Ind. 551, 74 inadmissible even against the payee to change the nature of the contract by showing it to be an original promise as joint maker,[13] to show that an indorsement and not a guaranty was intended,[14] or otherwise to explain such indorsement;[15] and an irregular indorser cannot show an agreement with the maker unknown to the payee, by which his liability was to be that of an indorser,[16] that the maker was only authorized to fill the indorsement with a contract of guaranty,[17] that the maker and indorser were to be liable jointly upon a joint consideration,[18] or that the indorsement was merely made by defendant as an officer of the corporation which made the note in order to show his approval of it.[19]

(iv) Indorsement Without Recourse. An indorser cannot show, as against a subsequent holder without notice, that his indorsement was intended to be without recourse and that he was not to be held liable,[20] but the words "without recourse," following the name of the first, and preceding the name of a second, indorser of a bill or note may, as between the original parties to the indorsement, be shown by parol evidence to apply to the former instead of the latter.[21]

Am. Dec. 268. So where the note was payable to the order of the maker, and indorsed by him above defendant, it is inadmissible to prove at the suit of the original holder that an indorsement and not a joint making was intended (Bigelow v. Colton, 13 Gray (Mass.) 309, 74 Am. Dec. 633. See also Dennis v. Jackson, 57 Minn. 286, 59 N. W. 198, 47 Am. St. Rep. 603), or that anything but an accommodation indorsement was intended (Heidenheimer v. Blumenkron, 56 Tex. 308).

1. Payment — (I) Fact of Payment. In general any facts tending to show payment of a note are relevant and admissible.[27] Thus payment of a note may be proved by parol testimony,[28] and where a note comes from the possession of the party seeking to enforce payment, all indorsements of payments thereon are evidence that such payments have been made.[29] Payment may also be proved by a separate receipt,[30] although the note stipulated on its face, "No credit allowed unless indorsed on the note at the time of payment."[31] It has been held, however, that books of account are not admissible to prove payments on a note.[32] So

32. Inslee v. Prall, 25 N. J. L. 665. But see Peck v. Pierce, 63 Conn. 310, 28 Atl. 524 (holding that on an issue as to whether defendant's testator had paid the note in suit, which was given as part of the price of land, entries in testator's account-book in his handwriting, charging him with the price of the land, describing it, and crediting him with certain items, the sum of which balanced said price, and one of which was the same as the amount of the note, although this latter was not expressly referred to, were admissible in connection with evidence that the note was given as part of the consideration, and that the various items of the consideration paid corresponded with the items in the account); Meyer v. Reichardt, 112 Mass. 108 (holding that where the maker and the holder of a note had mutually compared memoranda respectively made by them of part payments thereon, in an action on the note for the benefit of the estate of the deceased holder, such memoranda of the maker are admissible in his favor to prove payment).

The books of a firm are not admissible, the pecuniary circumstances of the maker and holder are not competent as evidence from which a payment may be inferred.[33]

(II) Medium of Payment. Evidence to show that a bill or note is payable otherwise than its terms indicate is inadmissible.[34] Thus it cannot be shown that it was intended that a bill or note should be paid in work,[35] in real estate,[36] in debts of other persons,[37] in goods,[38] or out of a particular fund.[39] So it is not whether supported by the testimony of the party who made the entries or not, to prove the payment of a note of the firm in an action on such note. Brannin v. Foree, 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 506. But see Jermain v. Denniston, 6 N. Y. 276, holding that entries made in the books of a bank, and in a bank pass-book, while a note belonged to the bank, are evidence in an action on the note, brought by one who took it after due, that it had been paid.

admissible to prove by parol that a certificate of deposit for so many "dollars" meant the depreciated bank-notes or other currency in which the deposit had been made,[40] or a currency used in the deposit and since then depreciated;[41] and it has been held that parol evidence is not admissible to show that other than lawful money was intended,[42] or that "lawful money" means "lawful silver money";[43] but it may be shown by parol that "current funds" are equivalent to money.[44]

be renewed at maturity,[49] or to show that a note payable one day after date was to be paid at a later day.[50] So the maker of a note cannot show that the payee agreed, at the time of making, not to bring suit for a specified time.[51]

m. Presentment, Demand, Protest, and Notice — (i) Certificate of Notary — (a) In General. At common law the notarial protest was evidence only in the case of a foreign protest of a foreign bill of exchange, except where it became admissible as secondary evidence on the death of the acting notary;[52] but by statute in many jurisdictions the notary's certificate as to demand of payment or notice of dishonor is prima facie evidence of the facts stated in it.[53] This been held to apply not only to actions directly upon the instrument, but to all others where its validity comes collaterally in question.[78] Facts occurring subsequent to the execution which destroy the title of the holder or avoid the instrument may, however, be proved by such a witness,[79] as may facts which do not impeach the original validity of the instrument.[80] So a party to a negotiable instrument may be received to prove that it was negotiated after it became due.[81]

3. WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY — a. In General. In actions on negotiable paper the production of it by plaintiff, with proof of the genuineness of the signatures and of the indorsements, entitles plaintiff, without any additional evidence, to recover, unless defendant makes out some satisfactory defense.[82]

St. 394 (holding that by production of the note plaintiff makes a prima facie case, and it then devolves on defendant to defeat the apparent right); Graves v. Bonham First Nat. Bank, 77 Tex. 555, 14 S. W. 163 (holding that in an action by the holder of a promissory note payable to bearer, against the maker, where the execution of the note is not denied by plea, the introduction of the note in evidence makes a prima facie case for plaintiff); Cummings v. Gassett, 19 Vt. 308; Waynesville Nat. St. 786, holding that where plaintiff in an action on a note introduced the note, which, with the indorsement of the payee's name and of others, was read in evidence, and notice of protest was admitted by defendant, as the law raised the presumption that the note was transferred to plaintiff before maturity, on testimony on behalf of defendant that he had made the note and given it to another to get it discounted and bring him the proceeds, which was not done, and that no value was ever received by him for the note, plaintiff was entitled to recover.

Action against indorser.— In a suit by indorsees against their immediate indorser for non-payment, proof of non-payment and notice is sufficient to sustain it. Bradshaw v. Hubbard, 6 Ill. 390. And in an action by an indorser who has paid the bill after judgment against a prior indorser or party to a bill of exchange, the damage sustained by plaintiff for the breach of the obligation of b. Execution and Delivery — (I) Execution. In an action on a note, proof of defendant's signature to the note declared on is sufficient prima facie evidence that the whole body of the note written over it is his act;[83] but it is not sufficient evidence of the execution of notes on which suit is brought to prove by a witness that he had formerly been in possession of notes which defendant admitted to be his genuine notes, that the notes in question were like those, and that the witness believed them to be genuine.[84] So evidence of the teller of a bank on which a check was drawn that no person of the name signed thereto had an account with the bank is prima facie evidence that the check was fictitious.[85]

(II) Delivery. A note is established prima facie by plaintiff producing it or accounting for its absence and by his proving its execution by the maker. An actual delivery of the note need not be shown.[86] defendant is shown, prima facie, by the judgment and its payment. Kelsey v. Hibbs, 13 Ohio St. 340.

Lost note.— On a trial by the court, an affidavit stating the substance of a lost note is prima facie evidence of the contents of the note, and supported by the oath of one witness will sustain a judgment. Cleveland v. Roberts, 14 Ind. 511.

83. Simpson v. Davis, 119 Mass. 269, 20 Am. Rep. 324. But see Steininger v. Hoch, 39 Pa. St. 263, 80 Am. Dec. 521, where it appeared that one executed a single bill, and opposite his name, on the left, in the place for the subscribing witness, the name of another was written, who was sought to be held as co-promisor, because the word "Witness" did not appear. It was held that the signature of defendant to the paper was not prima facie evidence that it was his promise, to go to the jury on proof of execution merely, and that it was error so to instruct the jury.

Lost note.— In a suit on a note purporting to be lost, where the plea non est factum is relied on, one witness is sufficient to prove the execution of the note, and to authorize a recovery. Albro v. Lawson, 17 B. Mon. (Ky.) 642.

84. Brown v. Piatt, 2 Cranch, C. C. (U. S.) 253, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 2,026.

Hall v. Woodward, 30 S. C. 564, 9 S. E. 684.

Admissions of partner.— In an action against partners on a note made in the firm name, the admission by one of the partners of the making of the note is not sufficient evidence to sustain a judgment against the other. Davidson v. Hutchins, 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 123.

85. People v. Eppinger, 105 Cal. 36, 38 Pac. 538. Y.) 478, where it appeared that a father while in the army left his child with the father's mother, to whom he gave some money. On the latter's death, a note was found among papers held by her as administratrix of her husband payable to the child. The father had been home on a furlough at about the date of the note. It was held that the finding of a sufficient delivery of the note was justified. But see Mills v. Husson, 63 Hun (N. Y.) 632, 18 N. Y. Suppl. 519, 45 N. Y. St. 802, holding that the mere production of a note thirty-five years after maturity, by the administrator of the payee, which note was not mentioned in an inventory of the assets of the testator filed eleven years thereafter, or proven as a claim in proceedings in bankruptcy against one of the makers thirteen years thereafter, and on which no proceedings were taken against the makers by the payee in his lifetime, or by his representatives after his decease, affords no proof of delivery of the note or its validity.

As to presumption of delivery from possession see supra, XIV, E, 1, a, (II), (A).

Delivery on performance of condition.— Several notes were given for the consideration money for a farm sold. The notes were deposited in the hands of a third person until the performance of a certain written agreement. The grantee took possession of the farm, the title to which was never disputed, according to agreement, and paid all the notes but one, in an action on which by the payee against the maker it was held that the jury might infer from the circumstances a delivery of the note to plaintiff, with the assent of defendant, and that the facts were sufficient evidence of the performance of the condition on which the note was deposited in the hands of a third person, or that defendant had waived the condition or dispensed with the performance. Grote v. Grote, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 402.

c. Consideration. Evidence of illegality of consideration of the contract on which the note in suit was based is sufficient if it produces the amount of conviction essential in civil cases. It need not remove all reasonable doubt as in criminal cases.[87]

d. Presentment, Demand, Protest, and Notice — (I) In General. Proof of demand and notice must be strict.[88] A mere probability that demand was made at the proper place[89] and notice given at the proper time[90] is not sufficient; but proof that a note was presented and protested for non-payment sufficiently shows that payment was refused,[91] and proof of notice is unnecessary where there is an express waiver.[92]

(II) Authority to Demand Payment. Possession of a note at the time

Note found in papers of deceased maker.— A finding that a note was signed by the maker, and was found among his private papers after his death, together with a special finding that the maker had declared that he had signed such a note and had left it in the bank for the payee's benefit, so that the latter would lose nothing in case of his death, does not warrant the conclusion that the note had been delivered. Purviance v. Jones, 120 Ind. 162, 21 N. E. 1099, 16 Am. St. Rep. 319.

87. Ware v. Jones, 61 Ala. 288.

Misrepresentations as to consideration.— Defendant in an action on a note is not bound to prove misrepresentations as to the consideration beyond a reasonable doubt, but only by a preponderance of evidence. Gordon v. Parmelee, 15 Gray (Mass.) 413. See also Reeves v. Graffling, 67 Ga. 512, holding that, under a plea to a suit on a guano note that the guano had not been inspected and branded, the fact of no inspection or branding need not be shown beyond a reasonable doubt. But see Punch v. Williams, 34 Wis. 268, holding that evidence that a note was without consideration, or given under a mistake as to the amount of the indebtedness between the maker and the payee, will not be sufficient to prevent a recovery thereon, unless it leaves no reasonable doubt as to the truth of the facts alleged.

and place named as the place of payment is evidence of authority to demand payment.[93]

(III) Waiver. The clearest evidence is necessary to show a waiver by indorsers of notice and protest.[94] Proof of an indorser's offer, in case the indorsee would send the note, etc., to waive demand and notice, on the back of it, does not establish such waiver as matter of law.[95]

e. Payment. Payment of a bill or note may be proved without actual production of the paper[96] and may be shown by circumstantial evidence.[97] In like manner proof of payment is often unnecessary.[98] Payment to a collecting agent cannot be proved, without producing the bill itself, by showing that he received it for collection, delivered it to his bankers, and received credit for a bill for the same amount.[99] So an entry to the credit of a depositor's personal account is not sufficient proof of payment by him as executor.[1] Whether the circumstances show or establish a payment is a question of fact; and the presumption is against the alleged payment, where the bill was not produced at the time and bears no mark of payment, and the books of the parties show no memorandum of the fact.

F. Trial[3]— 1. Conduct of Trial — a. In General. The details relating to the conduct of the trial of an action on commercial paper are, in the absence of rules of court or statutory provisions, largely within the sound judicial discretion of the court.[4]

b. Notice of Assessment of Damages. After appearance defendants in an action upon a promissory note or bill of exchange are entitled to notice of, and to be heard upon, the assessment of damages.[5]

c. Preliminary Proof and Offer of Evidence — (i) Admissibility of Instrument in First Instance. The instrument itself is properly admissible in evidence before proof of demand, protest, and notice;[6] of its consideration;[7] or of its acceptance, in case of an action against the drawee of a bill of exchange.[8] Nor is it necessary to prove the identity of the payee of an order with plaintiff, before the order is admitted in evidence.[9] But where the execution of the instrument is denied under oath, it is proper to exclude it from the jury until some evidence of its execution shall have been given.[10]

(ii) Offer to Prove Failure or Want of Consideration. An offer to prove failure or want of consideration, in defense to an action by the holder of commercial paper, must be accompanied by an offer to prove that plaintiff is not a bona fide holder.[11]

is not a bona fide holder. In such a case the burden of proof is shifted and plaintiff must show bona fides.[12]

d. Effect of Offering or Introducing Note in Evidence. Offering or introducing a note in evidence upon the trial without objection dispenses with the necessity of proving the signatures on the note[13] and cures any insufficiency of the complaint in the statement of the consideration.[14]

e. Proper order of proof.— "When the maker proves that the paper had its origin in fraud, or was fraudulently put in circulation, it is incumbent upon the holder to prove that he received it bona fide, before maturity, and for value. He is not required, however, to prove that he had no knowledge of the specific facts which impeach its original validity. When the general proof is made by the holder that he received the paper before due, bona fide and for value, it then devolves upon the maker to prove that the holder had actual notice of the specific facts which would render it originally invalid." law are, as in actions generally, for the determination of the court,[19] while a mixed question of law and fact should be submitted to the jury under proper instructions.[20]

b. Execution and Delivery of Instrument — (I) In General. The question of the execution and delivery of a bill of exchange or promissory note is for the determination of the jury, subject to the instructions of the court as to the law.[21] But whether admissions of indebtedness by the maker are sufficient to dispense with proof of execution and legal transfer to plaintiff is a question for the court,[22] as is the intention with which a party executed a note, whether to bind himself or as trustee for another.[23]

(II) Fraud in Procuring — (A) In General. Where the defense in an action on a bill of exchange or promissory note is that the instrument was procured by fraud, a question of fact is presented for the determination of the jury.[24]

(B) Negligence of Maker. The question as to whether the maker of a bill or note alleged to have been obtained by fraud and false representations exercised proper precautions before executing and delivering the instrument is one of fact for the jury under appropriate instructions[25] or for the court when trying the issue without a jury.[26] But in order that the question may be submitted there must be some evidence tending to show negligence on the part of the maker.[27] If, however, the facts are admitted it is a question of law.[28]

c. Consideration — (I) In General. Where the consideration of a note is disputed and there is conflicting testimony the jury must decide the point.[29]

(II) Failure, Illegality, or Want of Consideration. The question of failure or want of consideration,[30] or illegality in the consideration,[31] should be submitted to the jury if there is evidence tending to establish a defense based upon such failure, want, or illegality.[32]

(III) Performance of Contract Constituting Consideration. Whether a contract constituting the consideration for the execution or acceptance of commercial paper has been duly performed or not is a question of fact.[33]

d. Identification and Interpretation of Instrument — (I) In General. Where the identity of a note in suit is at issue its identification is a question of fact for the jury.[34]

(II) Determination of Amount. Where the figures in the margin of a bill or note and the amount as written in the body of the instrument conflict, by reason of the latter's being so obscurely written as to be uncertain and ambiguous, the determination of the amount intended is a question for the jury.[35]

(III) Determination of Time and Manner of Payment. Where it is doubtful from an inspection of the instrument when or in what manner it is payable, the time or manner of payment is a question of fact to be submitted to the jury;[36] but what is a reasonable time within which a note payable on demand is Taylor v. Jaques, 106 Mass. 291.

Where the maker is sued by an indorsee, and pleads that the note was given upon an illegal contract, and also that the note was not transferred until after maturity, all the evidence in respect to the contract between the original parties and the indorsement and delivery of the note to the indorsee should be submitted to the jury. Where notes were payable in "cash notes," and it appeared from the wording of the notes to be considered as payable, in questions between the indorsee and maker, is for the court on facts found by the jury.[37]

(IV) IDENTIFICATION OF MAKER OR PAYEE. Where an issue is raised as to the identity of the maker or payee of commercial paper it is a question of fact for the determination of the jury.[38]

(V) NEGOTIABILITY. It is the province of the court and not of the jury to decide on the negotiability of an instrument, unless in new cases where the law merchant is doubtful, when evidence of custom may be received.[39]

e. Title and Ownership of Instrument — (I) IN GENERAL. Where there is an issue as to the title to and ownership of the instrument in suit, the question should be left to the decision of the jury.[40]

(II) AUTHORITY TO SUE AND COLLECT. Where the authority of plaintiff to sue and collect is shown by the uncontradicted evidence of the owner, it is error to submit the question of such authority to the jury.[41]

(III) BONA FIDES OF HOLDER. The question whether plaintiff is a bona fide holder is one of fact to be submitted, under proper instructions, to the determination of the jury,[42] unless there is an entire absence of testimony tending to show mala fides.[43] Where all the facts are admitted[44] or where the question is whether notice is imputable from the face of the instrument itself[45] the question is one of law for the court.

(IV) GIVEN IN PAYMENT, AS SECURITY, OR FOR COLLECTION. Whether the instrument was transferred in satisfaction of a precedent debt, as security, or for collection merely is a question of fact for the jury.[46]

f. Indorsement. Controverted questions as to the indorsement of commercial paper are as a rule to be determined by the jury.[47] On the other hand the question whether the instrument in suit has been properly indorsed is one of law for the court and should not be submitted to the jury.[48]

g. Presentment, Demand, and Enforcement — (I) IN GENERAL. Under proper instructions from the court as to what is necessary to constitute a legal presentment or demand, it is for the jury to determine upon the evidence whether such a presentment or demand has been made or not.[49]

(II) Diligence to Charge Indorser or Drawer. While there is a considerable conflict of authority upon the question, some courts holding that due diligence to charge an indorser or drawer is a question of law only,[50] others that it is a pure question of fact,[51] the better view, and that supported by the weight of authority, is to the effect that it is a mixed question of law and fact, to be decided by the jury under the direction of the court upon a general verdict or to be decided by the court, where the facts are undisputed or are found by a special verdict.[52]

(III) Waiver. Whether the facts and circumstances proved amount to a waiver of presentment to and demand upon, or of attempted enforcement against, the parties primarily liable is a question of fact for the jury.[53]

request of both parties, that certain facts in evidence do or do not amount in law to a demand upon the maker of a promissory note so as to charge an indorser. h. Acceptance. What acts upon the part of the drawee of a bill of exchange are tantamount to acceptance is a question for the jury to determine under proper instructions.[54]

i. Payment. Where a defense of payment is set up it is a question for the jury to determine whether or not the transaction put in evidence to sustain the defense did in fact constitute a payment, either partial or in full.[55] It is also a question of fact for the jury, under proper instructions by the court, to determine whether a new note, delivered to and accepted by the holder of that in suit, was applied at the time in payment of such note, the evidence on that point being conflicting.[56]

j. Presumption of Dishonor. Commercial paper payable on demand is not presumptively dishonored until the lapse of a reasonable time after payment thereof may be legally demanded; and what shall be deemed a reasonable time is a question of law for the court, when there is no dispute as to the facts.[57]

See also Barbour v. Fullerton, 36 Pa. St. 105, holding that at what time a note, payable on demand, made in another state and governed by its laws, is to be considered overdue so as to let in a defense against an indorsee which would be available against the payee, is a question of fact for the jury under proper instructions.

An acknowledgment of liability and a promise to pay, made by an indorser after default by the maker, raise a presumption that he knew of the dishonor of the note; and if there is evidence to the contrary it is a question for the jury whether such presumption has court to determine what is a reasonable time for giving notice,[61] or the sufficiency, in itself, of a written notice.[62] Others have held them to be pure questions of fact.[63] Whether notice has been actually received or not is a question of fact to be submitted to the jury upon the whole evidence.[64]

Fraud.— Where fraud is set up in defense to an action on a bill of exchange or promissory note, it is the duty of the court, leaving the facts to the consideration of the jury, fully to instruct them as to the elements of fraud and as to its effect in the consideration of the instrument or in plaintiff's manner of obtaining it. Shepard v. Hall, 1 Conn. 329; Bowser v. Spiesshofer, 4 Ind. App. 348, 30 N. E. 942. Where, however, the only defenses are fraud and want of consideration, it is proper to charge that to defeat plaintiff's recovery it must appear that the payee obtained the note sued on through fraud as alleged, and that plaintiff had notice thereof before he bought the note. Richards v. Monroe, 85 Iowa 359, 52 N. W. 339, 39 Am. St. Rep. 301.

Where there is no evidence to rebut the presumption of ownership raised by the production on the trial of a note whose execution and indorsement are not questioned, it is error to refuse an instruction to that effect (Applegarth v. Tillery, 105 N. C. 407, 11 S. E. 509); but if the issue can be determined without any special instruction as to the law of ownership, it is error for the court to neglect to instruct the jury as to that law or as to what facts will constitute ownership (Barnes v. Peet, 77 Mich. 391, 43 N. W. 1025).

should be instructed as to what constitutes a sufficient demand of payment and notice of dishonor.[74]

5. VERDICT. A general verdict by the jury is sufficient. It is unnecessary for them to include specifically the various items aggregating the gross sum.[75]

6. JUDGMENT — a. By Default — (I) IN GENERAL. Judgment for plaintiff by default cannot be entered if a plea in bar has been filed and not disposed of.[76] A judgment by default final may be rendered, however, without the intervention of a jury to assess the damages.[77]

(II) PROOF NECESSARY. It is not necessary for plaintiff, on default, to prove the execution of the note sued on[78] or his ownership of it.[79] He must, however, produce it, or account for its absence.[80]

(III) MATTERS ADMITTED. Where judgment is taken by default, the material and traversable allegations of plaintiff's pleadings must be taken to be true.[81]

b. Capacity in Which Judgment May Be Rendered Against Obligors. Statutes in some states provide, where one of the parties sued is a principal and the other is a surety, for the rendition of judgment against each defendant in the capacity in which he signed.[82] Where this is true, an execution issued on the judgment should require the officer to exhaust the property of the maker before levying on that of a surety or indorser.[83]

But see Foote v. Sprague, 13 Kan. 155, holding that in an action on a promissory note against two persons, who executed the note apparently as joint principals, but who were in fact one a principal and the other his surety, and where the pleadings show this fact and the petition asks for a judgment against the surety only as a surety, and no issue is made upon the subject, and the surety does not ask the court to render a judgment against himself only as a surety, and it does not seem that the attention of the court was ever called to the fact that the surety was only a surety, it is not error for the court to render judgment against the makers of the note as though they were both principals. See, generally, PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

Conditions precedent.—A surety who would avail himself of the provision of the statute authorizing him to be certified as such in the records of the judgment must make his demand at the time the judgment is entered. Brigel v. Creed, 65 Ohio St. 40, 60 N. E. 991.

statute in some states judgment may be rendered, if plaintiff recovers, against such one or more of defendants as are found liable to him,[86] and the cause may be continued as to the others.[87] Statutes too sometimes authorize a joint and several judgment to be rendered on a joint note,[88] but a joint judgment against the surviving maker of a note and the personal representatives of the other maker cannot be sustained.[89]

d. Kind of Money in Which Judgment Should Be Rendered. If by its terms a note is payable in gold it is proper for the court to render judgment for gold.[90] It has also been held that if a note is payable in a particular kind of currency, a general money judgment for the amount of the note is erroneous.[91]

89. Nelson v. Humes, 12 Ill. App. 52. See also Churchill v. Trapp, 3 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 306, holding that where the executor of an indorser is jointly sued with the maker separate judgments must be entered against them.

dent, and the clerk should enter judgment in accordance with that intention.[92] A general verdict for plaintiff, coupled with a special finding which would render the instrument invalid in the hands of the original payee, will support a judgment for plaintiff.[93] A defective statement of a good defense will be aided by a verdict for defendant, and the court is not justified in ordering a judgment for plaintiff non obstante veredicto unless defendant's pleadings be totally defective in some essential particular.[94]

f. When Should Include Interest. In a judgment on a note bearing interest the interest should be computed and made a part of the judgment,[95] provided plaintiff has demanded judgment for interest in his pleading.[96]

g. Enforcement of Judgment. The purchaser of a note, upon which he has obtained a judgment against the maker, is not precluded from seeking satisfaction of the judgment by reason of the fact that he has not paid for the note.[97] If it is stipulated that the principal shall become due in default of payment of any instalment of interest, a judgment for principal and interest may be enforced instanter, and plaintiff is not restricted to taking out execution, as the several instalments of interest would have become due in case of no default.[98]

A special verdict that defendant executed the note, and that plaintiff purchased it before maturity in due course of business, without knowledge of any defense thereto, is sufficient to warrant a judgment for plaintiff. Sprinkle v. Taylor, 1 Ind. App. 74, 27 N. E. 122. But in an action by an indorsee against the maker, where the defense is such as would render the note invalid in its inception as between the original parties, a general verdict for defendant, coupled with a special finding that plaintiff had purchased the note before its maturity for a valuable consideration and without any notice or knowledge of any defense thereto, will not support a judgment for defendant. of damages which is recoverable in an action on the bill or note by the holder thereof.[2]

b. (II) After Judgment Against Maker. In an action against the indorser of a note, judgment having been obtained against the maker, the measure of damages is the amount of the judgment against the maker and the accrued interest and costs.[5]

(III) In Action by Bona Fide Holder. Where a negotiable instrument which is void as between the original parties reaches the hands of a bona fide holder for value before maturity, so as to exempt it in his hands from the infirmities to which it is subject as between the original parties, all that the holder can recover on it is what he or some prior holder through whom he derives his title paid for it with interest and costs.[6]

holder of the bill is entitled to recover the statutory damages, although the bill is not returned to the place where it was drawn.[15] The indorser of a bill of exchange is not entitled to recover from the drawer the damages incurred by its non-acceptance unless he has been obliged to pay them or is liable to pay them.[16] The person to whom a bill is remitted for the purpose of paying a precedent debt cannot recover statutory damages against the remitter.[17] The same rule applies where the bill was given only as collateral security to an obligation of higher degree, such as a bottomry bond;[18] and where a foreign bill is transmitted to a correspondent abroad for collection, such correspondent cannot recover statutory damages against his principal, although the principal is indebted to him and is bankrupt.[19] But a person who pays a bill supra protest for the honor of the drawer or indorser becomes the holder of the bill and is entitled to recover statutory damages.[20]

3. PARTY LIABLE FOR DAMAGES[21] — a. In General. A bill of exchange in form, drawn on one government by another, is not, and cannot be, governed by the law merchant, and is not therefore subject to protest and consequential damages.[22]

b. Drawer. An accommodation accepter cannot recover against the drawer the costs of making a useless defense in an action against him by the holder.[23]

c. Accepter.[24] The accepter of a bill of exchange is not liable to the payee or indorsee for damages caused by non-payment, but only for the amount of the bill, with interest and costs of protest.[25] But where the drawer has been obliged to pay a bill with statutory damages, he may prove the whole amount against the estate of the accepter under a commission of bankruptcy.[26] The indorser cannot recover from the accepter the costs of an action brought against him by the indorsee.[27]

d. Maker. An indorser of a promissory note cannot recover against the maker the costs of a judgment recovered against him as indorser. His claim upon the maker is upon the note itself and not for money paid;[28] for it is not necessary for the indorser to stand a suit in order to fix the liability of the maker or accepter.[29]

e. Indorser. Although a bill be drawn by a citizen of a state on another citizen of the same state, an indorser in another state is liable to statutory damages upon the dishonor of the bill.[30] Where the holder of a note has been defeated in an action against the maker on the ground of some infirmity in the original contract, he may still recover on the note against the indorser, but he cannot recover the costs incurred in his action against the maker.[31]

f. Guarantor or Surety.[32] In an action against a guarantor the measure of damages is as a rule the sum promised to be paid and interest from the time it was payable;[33] and the measure of damages for breach of guaranty of the amount due on a note, there being no guaranty of payment or collectability, is what the plaintiff has lost by the breach, which is the value of the judgment if one had been recovered against the maker.[34] Although the contract of a surety is for the payment of the whole amount secured to be paid by the note, the courts will go behind the contract and limit the liability of the surety to the amount paid, with interest, where the note was purchased at a discount;[35] and the same rule applies in a suit against an accommodation indorser who is in effect a surety.[36]

c. Rate — (i) Before Maturity. Where one contracts to pay a principal sum at a certain future time with interest at a specified rate, the rate of interest prior to maturity is governed by the terms of the contract.[51]

(ii) After Maturity — (A) Before Judgment — (1) Where no Interest Has Been Reserved. If no interest is expressly reserved, the instrument will draw interest after maturity at the legal rate at its date.[52] But such interest is in the nature of damages for the detention of the debt, and is not recoverable by virtue of any provision in the contract.[53]

(2) Where Specified Rate Has Been Reserved — (a) Generally. In Beckwith v. Hartford, etc., R. Co., 29 Conn. 268, 76 Am. Dec. 599, the damages for the detention of borrowed money beyond the contract period were assessed at the rate of seven per cent per annum, for the reason that the legislature had legalized in advance seven per cent as the rate of interest upon that particular loan at the request of the borrowers. In Adams v. Way, 33 Conn. 419, the damages were assessed at twelve per cent per annum, that being the statute rate of interest upon the loan in the state of Wisconsin where it was made. In South Carolina this rule applies if there is nothing in the contract to show a contrary intention. Briggs v. Winsmith, 10 S. C. 133, 30 Am. Rep. 46. Reasons for this doctrine.— In other words, where one contracts to pay a principal sum at a certain future time with interest at a given rate, the interest prior to the maturity of the contract is payable by virtue of the contract, and thereafter as damages for the breach of the contract, to be computed according to the rate prescribed by law. local law[56] allows it, the stipulated rate of interest attends the contract until it is merged in the judgment.[57] In any case if the parties have expressly stipulated for the conventional rate "until paid" the express contract is binding after maturity as well as before,[58] for the rate of interest specified in a note, to be paid after maturity, is prima facie the measure of damages to be recovered for the breach of the contract.[59]

if his money is paid to him by a given day no interest will be exacted; but if not then paid interest will be exacted at any lawful rate;[60] but where the payment of a sum of money is the act contracted to be done, no nearer approximation to the damages sustained for its omission can be arrived at than the legal rate of interest; and this is the rule of damage the law has fixed for delay in the payment of money.[61] Accordingly it has been held that where a note provides for a higher rate of interest after maturity as damages if it is not paid when due, such stipulation amounts to no more than a penalty, and should be disregarded as such;[62] and the effect is to reduce the interest after maturity to the statutory or legal rate.[63] But on the other hand it has been held that the increased rate of interest after maturity is not a penalty in a strict sense, but merely liquidated damages which may be recovered in case of default of payment at maturity, provided it would be a lawful conventional rate of interest in any case;[64] and a Further application of the rule.— A note providing for a lawful rate of interest from date until maturity, and for a higher but still lawful rate thereafter, is valid and will be enforced according to its terms. Hallam v. Telleren, 55 Nebr. 255, 75 N. W. 560; Crapo v. Hefner, 53 Nebr. 251, 73 N. W. 702; Omaha Home L. Ins. Co. v. Fitch, 52 Nebr. 88, 71 N. W. 940; Omaha L. & T. Co. v. Hanson, 46 Nebr. 870, 65 N. W. 1058; Havemeyer v. Paul, 45 Nebr. 373, 63 N. W. 932. But a provision for a lawful rate until maturity and if the note is not then paid a higher rate from the date of the note has been denounced as a penalty, so far as it provides for the higher rate before maturity. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Westerhoff, 58 Nebr. 379, 78 N. W. 724, 79 N. W. 731, 76 Am. St. Rep. 101; Hallam v. Telleren, 55 Nebr. 255, 75 N. W. 560; Upton v. O'Donahue, 32 Nebr. 565, 49 N. W. 267. In California, however, a provision for a higher rate in case of default is valid both before and after maturity. Finger v. McCaughey, 114 Cal. 64, 45 Pac. 1004; Thompson v. Gorner, 104 Cal. 168, 37 Pac. 900, 43 Am. St. Rep. 81. And the same has been decided in other jurisdictions. Wilkerson v. Daniels, 1 Greene (Iowa) 179; Parker v. Plymell, 23 Kan. 402.

Waiver of reservation.— The acceptance by the payee, from time to time after maturity, of interest at the lower rate, will amount to stipulation for an exorbitant rate of interest after maturity as liquidated damages for breach of contract has been considered valid, if the parties acted in good faith and there was no evidence of a design to evade the usury laws.[65] Again there is a difference of opinion as to the legal effect of an instrument which reserves the higher rate of interest from date until paid, with a provision for its abatement upon condition of prompt payment at maturity. According to one view the difference between the two rates is not a penalty, and the contract is to be enforced according to its literal terms.[66] But other authorities hold that the clause is the same in effect as if it had reserved the lower rate of interest, with a provision that if the indebtedness were not paid at maturity interest should run at a higher rate.[67] Again it has been held that where a note is payable at a specified time for a sum certain, which may be discharged by the payment of a less sum at any earlier date, the greater sum is not in the nature of a penalty, but is the debt actually due, and is recoverable if the less sum is not paid according to the terms of the contract.[68]

(B) After Judgment. After the rendition of judgment the debt bears interest at the legal rate until paid,[69] for by the judgment the express contract is merged into an obligation of record which is governed by the general law.[70]

(III) On Interest Coupons. Interest coupons which may be cut off and circulated independently of the bonds as negotiable promises to pay certain sums of money on certain days usually bear interest at the legal rate from their maturity until paid.[71] This, however, is upon the theory that such coupons are sepa-

a waiver of the condition in the note requiring the payment of a higher rate after maturity. Thompson v. Gorner, 104 Cal. 168, 37 Pac. 900, 43 Am. St. Rep. 81; Bane v. Gridley, 67 Ill. 388; Bradford v. Hoiles, 66 Ill. 517.

d. Time and Computation — (I) Reckoned From Date. Where a bill or note by its terms is payable at a future day with interest, the interest runs from the date of the instrument, and in the absence of words showing a different intention of the parties should be reckoned accordingly, for the paper would bear interest from maturity, even without the words "with interest."[88] And where it is stipulated that a note shall draw interest if not paid at maturity, the interest will be reckoned from the date of the note in case of default,[89] but not if the note is paid at maturity.[90]

(II) Reckoned From Maturity. If by its terms a note made payable on a future day is to bear interest after maturity it is error to reckon interest from the date of the instrument;[91] and if interest be not expressly reserved and the paper matures at a time certain or at sight it will draw interest from its maturity by operation of law without prior demand,[92] unless the non-payment has been occasioned by the negligence of the holder,[93] in which case the jury would be justified in refusing to allow interest.[94]

(III) Suspension — War. Where an instrument matures during a state of war, and the parties are alien enemies, it seems[95] that the running of interest after maturity is suspended during the subsequent continuance of the war, although interest is stipulated in the contract.[96] But the rule does not apply where during the war there was a known agent of the creditor appointed to receive the money and resident within the same jurisdiction with the debtor.[97]

(IV) The Mode of Computation — (A) Simple Interest — (1) No Payments Made. The proper mode is to compute from the time when the note begins to draw interest up to the time of rendering the judgment or decree.[98]

(2) Partial Payments Made. The payment is first to apply to the discharge of the interest due; if the payment exceeds the interest the surplus goes toward discharging the principal, and the subsequent interest is to be computed on the balance of the principal remaining due; but if the payment be less than the interest due the surplus of interest must not be taken to augment the principal. In other words interest continues on the former principal until the period when the payments, taken together, exceed the interest due, and then the surplus of payment is to be applied to the discharge of the principal and interest is to be computed on the balance as before mentioned.[99]

(B) Compound Interest. Where it is consistent with the course of dealing between the parties, or they have contracted so to do, they may make periodic rests in their account and charge interest on the balance thus struck, and that mode of charging interest is not unlawful on the ground of usury.[1] According to one view, where a note is made payable in a certain number of years, with interest payable annually, interest cannot be charged on the unpaid instalments of interest, unless an action to recover the interest[2] is brought before the principal falls due;[3] but on the other hand it has been held that where interest is payable annually or at other stated periods it bears simple interest from the time it falls due until paid, although in no case can the interest upon interest be made to bear interest.[4] A third view is that a valid agreement cannot be made in advance for the payment of interest on interest.[5] But a new note or other contract may be made for interest on arrears of interest without being open to the defense of

24. "Exchange" and "reëxchange."— The term "exchange" is used to designate the market value, in one country, of money to be delivered in another; and "reëxchange" means the loss resulting from the dishonor of a bill of exchange in a country different from that in which it was drawn or indorsed. Benjamin Chalm. Bills & N. art. 221.

25. The rate of exchange between two places is not exclusively regulated by the expense of transporting specie from one place to the other. The only correct rule is to ascertain the ordinary rate of exchange between the two places, and this is to be established by evidence the same as the value of any other thing. Balch v. Colman, 2 McLean (U. S.) 85, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 791. That is the sum paid for the dishonored bill, together with costs of protest and other damages, is not an indemity in the place where the bill was drawn. Those sums must be paid in the place where the bill was payable and if the holder is obliged to seek his remedy in the place where the bill was drawn or indorsed he is entitled to recover an additional sum, to be ascertained by the premium on a bill for the full amount drawn where of the country where it is payable, and such rate of exchange is a question of fact to be proved.[26] But if the holder had no occasion to transfer money from one country to another and was not obliged to put himself in funds in the place where the bill was dishonored, it seems that he is not entitled to reëxchange;[27] and it has been held that one to whom a bill has been remitted in payment of a precedent debt cannot, in case of protest, recover damages in lieu of reëxchange from the remitter.[28] Again, if a state of war existing between the two countries has interrupted the direct course of exchange, but an indirect course through a third country exists,[29] the bill must be paid by the drawer with exchange by the indirect course.[30]

b. Rate Fixed by Statute or Commercial Usage. In the United States the rate of reëxchange recoverable is generally fixed by statute, but the rates in the different states lack uniformity;[31] and many cases construing and applying similar statutes are to be found in the Canadian reports.[32] The sum thus allowed is the dishonored bill was payable and payable where the latter was drawn or indorsed, as the case may be, and which would sell where it is drawn for the sum claimed. U. S. Bank v. U. S., 2 How. (U. S.) 711, 746, 11 L. ed. 439, 453.

Redraft by law merchant.— By the law merchant, the holder of the bill may call upon the drawer or any indorser to make good the payment of the bill by drawing a sight bill, called a "redraft," for the sum necessary to realize at the place of dishonor the amount of the dishonored bill and the expenses consequent on its dishonor. Benjamin Chalm. Bills & N. art. 221; Suse v. Pope, 8 C. B. N. S. 538, 7 Jur. N. S. 166, 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 17, 9 Wkly. Rep. 15, 98 E. C. L. 538. The whole amount is called in law Latin "recambium," in Italian "recambio," in French "rechange," and in English "reëxchange." Byles, J., in Suse v. Pope, 8 C. B. N. S. 538, 7 Jur. N. S. 166, 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 17, 9 Wkly. Rep. 15, 98 E. C. L. 538. And although no redraft be made, the holder of the dishonored bill is entitled to recover as damages the amount which it would have cost him to purchase a redraft for the amount of the dishonored bill, together with interest and the necessary expenses of the transaction, at the actual rate of exchange on the day of dishonor. He must take other means to put himself in funds in the country where the bill was payable. Hence the right to 're-exchange,' which is the measure of those damages."

not given as a penalty for drawing without authority, but as commutation for interest, damages, and reëxchange. It is in truth a liquidation of the damages, not by the parties but by the law, fixing the compensation for the loss beforehand, to save time and litigation.[33] According to some of the American cases a fixed rate of reëxchange was established by commercial usage;[34] and in some of the English cases we find allusion made to the custom of allowing a fixed percentage by way of liquidated damages in lieu of exchange, reëxchange, and other charges, when bills are returned from the colonies dishonored; but this does not apply in the absence of an agreement, express or implied, to allow reëxchange.[35]

c. Liability of Accepters. It has been held in a number of cases that the liability for reëxchange or statutory damages in lieu thereof applies only to drawers and indorsers, and does not extend to accepters;[36] but it seems to be the better opinion that where a bill is dishonored, the drawer is entitled to recover from the accepter, or one who for sufficient consideration has agreed to accept, not only the amount of the bill and interest, but also all such reasonable expenses as may have been caused by the dishonor, including the expenses of reëxchange.[37]

S.) 711, 737, 746, 11 L. ed. 439, 453, McLean, J., said: "The bill under consideration having been protested at Paris for nonpayment, the holder under the general commercial law was entitled to a bill drawn at that place, payable in this city, for such sum as would pay the original bill at Paris, including costs of protest and other legal charges. This is reexchange, and it varies, as must be seen, with the fluctuations of commercial intercourse, influenced somewhat by local circumstances and the general state of the money market. In some instances, owing to peculiar circumstances, re-exchange has been found to exceed forty or even fifty per cent. To avoid so ruinous a charge, so uncertain a rule of damages, and one so difficult to establish by evidence, the State of Maryland, and almost all the other States of the Union, have fixed, by legislation, a certain amount of damages on protested foreign bills, in lieu of re-exchange." A bill is not affected by a statute changing the amount of damages recoverable in lieu of reëxchange passed after the drawing. Lennig v. Ralston, 23 Pa. St. 137.

d. On Promissory Notes. Promissory notes are by the law merchant not subject to the rules of exchange and reëxchange, although the parties may lawfully stipulate for the rate of exchange between the place of making and the place of payment.[38] It has been held, however, that the creditor is entitled to his money at the place of payment without deduction, and if he is obliged to collect it in another place he is entitled also to recover an additional sum sufficient to make it good in the place where it ought to have been paid.[39]

e. On Interstate Bills — (I) Rule Stated. Inasmuch as a bill of exchange drawn in one of the United States and payable in another is a foreign bill, it follows that the dishonor of such a bill will entitle the holder to reëxchange or statutory damages in lieu of the same.[40]

(II) Extent and Limits of Rule. It has been held that a bill drawn by a citizen of a state upon another citizen of the same state, although payable in another state, is not a bill upon the protest of which statutory damages can be recovered by the holder.[41] But if the bill be indorsed in a state other than that of the residence of the drawer and drawee, the indorser will, upon dishonor of the bill, be liable for statutory damages.[42] In such case, however, the statutory damages cannot as a rule be recovered unless the bill has been duly protested.[43]

6. Attorney's Fees — a. Accrual of Right to Recover. Inasmuch as stipulated attorney's fees are no part of the original debt, the right to them does not accrue until the payee incurs the liability, and then only to the extent of the reasonable value of the attorney's services actually performed or to be performed, which must be proved.[44] Consequently a proper tender of the principal and interest due on the note before an action is brought will deprive the holder of his right to recover attorney's fees.[45] But it is not necessary in all cases that an action should be brought on the note in order to entitle the holder to attorney's fees. Thus the proving of a contested claim against the estate of a deceased maker[46] or a lunatic[47] will be sufficient if the services of an attorney are required.

b. Amount of Recovery. If in a promissory note the parties stipulate for attorney's fees in case suit is brought the terms of the contract will generally

After dishonor.— A note contained the following: "In case suit or other action is instituted to collect this note or any portion thereof, promises and agrees to pay two hundred dollars in like gold coin for attorney's fees in said suit or action." It was held that the two hundred dollars attorney's fees were intended by the parties to be paid but once, and not for every action that might be brought to enforce separate payments of interest. When the maker of a judgment note pays into court, on the day of maturity, the full amount of the note, principal, interest, and costs, he is not liable on a stipulation in the note to pay five per cent "attorney's commission for collection," as he has obviated the necessity for an attorney's services. control the amount of the recovery.[48] The stipulation includes only the attorney's fees incurred in the trial court, and not those incurred by the holder in an appellate court to which the maker has carried the case.[49] If a note stipulating for attorney's fees does not state the amount of such fees to be allowed, evidence as to the amount should be given at the trial,[50] and a reasonable allowance will be made as compensation for the services of plaintiff's attorney.[51] The amount of such fees is a question for the court in the exercise of its equity powers, and is not a proper one for submission to a jury.[52]

53. But in Hubbard v. Harrison, 38 Ind. 323, it was held that the promise in a note to pay attorney's fees if suit be instituted on the note could be enforced against an indorser. And in Bank of British North America v. Ellis, 2 Fed. 44, it was held that an accommodation indorser is liable for the payment of a stipulated attorney's fee in case suit be instituted for the recovery of the debt evidenced by the note.

Where defendant assumes payment of a note executed by plaintiff, which provides damages is the amount paid for the note to the assignor, with interest, and the recovery can in no case exceed the amount due on the face of the note.[54]

d. In Same or Separate Action.[55] As a rule[66] such fees may be collected in an action on the note and included in the judgment; they are not contingent on the suit resulting in the collection of the debt.[57]

7. Costs of Protest. In an action against the accepter of a bill, the proper measure of damages includes not only the face value of the bill with interest, but also necessary costs of protest,[58] for the notarial expenses consequent upon dishonor are recoverable as special damages.[59] But only such expenses as are necessary are recoverable.[60] Consequently the expenses of a protest for better security cannot be allowed as part of the damages;[61] and commissions charged by an accepter supra protest are not a legitimate part of the damages.[62] So also in an action against the indorser of a bill or note the fees of protest are properly included in the assessment of damages;[63] but if he has received no notice of

for the recovery of attorney's fees if its payment be enforced by the legal holder by action, defendant is not liable for attorney's fees in an action by plaintiff to compel defendant to pay the note. Galvin v. Mac Min., etc., Co., 14 Mont. 508, 37 Pac. 366.

8. Costs of Another Suit. If the holder of a bill sues two or more of the parties thereto concurrently and is paid by one of them he may nevertheless proceed against the others for his costs.[67] But it has been held that although plaintiff has the right to bring several actions for the same sum he does it at his peril as to the costs; and if he recovers judgment and satisfaction in one action he cannot have costs in another action for the same demand.[68] The indorser of a bill is not liable for the costs of a suit commenced by the holder against the accepter, or for commissions paid on the collection of a part of the money from the accepter,[69] unless he requested the holder to sue the accepter and promised to pay the costs of the suit;[70] and conversely an accepter is not liable for costs incurred in a suit against the indorser.[71] An indorser of a note for value cannot recover against the maker the costs of a judgment recovered against him as indorser,[72] although an accommodation indorser may recover from the maker the costs incurred in resisting, in good faith and upon reasonable grounds, a recovery against him on his indorsement.[73]

The relief prayed was granted, and the maker was ordered to pay the costs both of plaintiff and of the holder of the note.

9. Partial Dividends — a. In General.[74] If the holder of a bill has received a dividend from the drawer's estate he is entitled to prove only the balance against the bankrupt accepter.[75] In like manner dividends from the accepter's estate must be deducted before proof is made against the drawer,[76] unless they have been paid out of the drawer's funds in the accepter's hands.[77] So also if the holder of a note has received a dividend from the maker's estate he is entitled to a dividend on the balance only from the estate of a surety or indorser.[78] The holder of a partnership note made payable to one partner and indorsed by him to the holder may prove it in insolvency against the estates both of the firm and the indorsing partner before any dividend is declared on either.[79]

b. In Case of Collateral. The holder of a note, to whom the insolvent maker has indorsed another note as collateral, cannot prove both notes against the insolvent estate,[80] and it has been held that the rule in equity is the same as in bankruptcy, and that the secured creditor can prove only for the balance of his debt after the collateral shall have been applied.[81] But the great weight of authority is strongly opposed to the rule that a creditor with collateral shall be thereby deprived of the right to prove for his full claim against an insolvent estate,[82] and creditors of an insolvent national bank cannot be required, in proving their claims, to allow credit for collections made from collateral securities held by them.[83]

10. On Notes Payable in Property. If a note is made payable in personal property at a valuation, the measure of damages, in case of breach, is the stipulated value of the property.[84] But the rule is not uniform and it has been held that the measure of damages is the market value of the goods at the time when they ought to have been delivered with interest,[85] while according to another view it is the highest market value of the goods from the maturity of the note until the day of trial.[86] The maker's liability is not in damages for the non-fulfilment of the contract but a mere duty to pay the money,[87] and the money may be recovered under the general counts.[88] As such a note is not negotiable it has been held that no action will lie for the money until the note is reduced to a money claim by a demand for the delivery of the property pursuant to its terms;[89] but this has been disputed.[90]

11. Where Collecting Agent Has Been Negligent. A collecting agent through whose negligence commercial paper has become worthless is prima facie liable for the face value of the paper, with interest;[91] but the financial circumstances of the parties liable thereon at the time when the agent should have acted may be shown in mitigation of damages, and then the recovery will be limited to the Extent of liability.— In receiving a note for collection, the agent assumes the duty of taking the proper steps to fix the liability of the indorser, and for a neglect of that duty he will be responsible to the extent of the damages occasioned thereby. If the maker be solvent so that the note can be collected from him the damages resulting from the discharge of the indorser will be merely nominal. Paper lost.— In an action against an express company for the loss of a promissory note which was delivered to the defendant company by plaintiff for the purpose of collection, and which was negligently lost by defendant, the amount expressed in the note is prima facie the measure of damages. actual loss sustained.[92] So too the fact that the creditor holds collateral security from which a portion of the sum due may be realized may be shown in mitigation of damages.[93]

12. Waiver of Damages. If the holder of a bill accepts payment of its face value after maturity he may afterward recover the interest reserved but no other damages.[94] If he has accepted the face value of the bill his claim is exhausted, either as a cause of action or a counter-claim.[95] If after the second part of a foreign bill of exchange has been protested the first part is presented and paid to the holder, with interest and costs of protests, the drawer is released from the payment of damages for the dishonor of the second part of the bill.[96]

13. Payable in What Currency — a. In General. Where a bill is payable in foreign money its value must be determined in the lawful currency of the forum according to the rate of exchange at the time of the trial.[97] Where the promisor agrees to pay a certain sum in bank-notes or other evidences of indebtedness which purport on their face to represent dollars and can be counted as such, the sum is expressed to indicate the number of dollars of the notes or evidences to be paid and not the amount of the debt or consideration.[98] A note payable in

b. Depreciated Currency. If a note is in terms payable in specie, the holder can recover no more than the face value of the note and interest thereon, although specie is at a premium at the maturity of the note.[1] If a bill or note is payable in currency generally it is to be presumed that lawful money was intended, and in the absence of evidence to the contrary it is proper to enter judgment accordingly;[2] but if it is expressly payable in a depreciated currency and is not so paid when due, the damages recoverable will as a rule be the legal tender value of the stipulated amount of such currency at the time of the breach with interest.[3] But the burden is on defendant to make out his position and show the extent of the failure of consideration,[4] and parol evidence is admissible for that purpose.[5]

If, however, the parties have fixed the rate of allowance for depreciation the terms of the contract will govern.[6]

c. Confederate Treasury Notes — Scaling Acts. When the Civil war closed, Confederate treasury notes became at once valueless and ceased to be current, but contracts made upon their purchasable quality, and in which they were designated as dollars, existed in great numbers. It was evident that great injustice would be done in many cases if the terms used were interpolated solely by reference to the coinage of the United States or their legal tender notes, instead of the standard adopted by the parties. The legal standard and the conventional standard differed, and justice to the parties could be done only by allowing extrinsic evidence of the sense in which they used the terms and enforcing the contracts as interpreted in the light of such evidence.[7] After the close of the war many of the Southern states enacted statutes,[8] commonly known as "scaling acts," defining and reducing the amount recoverable on contracts made in contemplation of the depreciated currency in circulation during the war and authorizing the introduction of parol evidence to show the real intention of the parties in that regard.[9] Inasmuch as such currency became worthless at the close of the war, it was generally held that the scale should be applied as at the date of the contract, for the value of the depreciated currency at that time was deemed to be what the parties had in contemplation in making their contract.[10] Upon this principle the holder could liable according to the law of the place where the bill was drawn.[19] The drawer by his contract undertakes that the drawee shall accept, and shall afterward pay the bill, according to its tenor, at the place and domicile of the drawee, if it be drawn and accepted generally; and at the place appointed for payment if it be drawn and accepted at a different place from the place of domicile of the drawee. If this contract of the drawer be broken by the drawee, either by non-acceptance or non-payment, the drawer is liable for payment of the bill, not where the bill was to be paid by the drawee, but where he, the drawer, made the contract, with such interest, damages, and costs, as the law of the country where he contracted may allow.[20] So also the damages which the drawee of a bill is to pay ex mora will be governed by the law of the place where the bill was drawn.[21] But ordinarily the contract of an accepter is governed by the law of the place where the acceptance was made, if the bill is payable there or if no place of payment is named in the bill.[22]

23. As to appeals generally see Appeal and Error.

Findings of fact.— Where the presiding judge appears to have been satisfied, if not with the correctness, with the legality, of the finding of the jury as to the genuineness of a note sued on, the appellate court will not interfere on account of any suspicions they may have that the note has been altered in amount. Dupree v. Price, 37 Ga. 235. So where, in an action on a note, an issue as to payment was submitted to the jury without instructions, and the finding was for defendant, and the testimony tended to prove the alleged payment, the judgment will not be disturbed (Elliott v. Treadway, 83 Mo.

2. Necessity of Raising Objection in Court Below. A defense to an action on a promissory note which was not made in the court below cannot be urged in App. 90), and the burden of proof being on the assignee of a note to show that he was an innocent holder for value, where the evidence is conflicting the finding against the holder will not be disturbed (Richardson v. Stone, 28 Nebr. 137, 44 N. W. 105). In an action on a bill there was no allegation as to the rate of interest, but verdict and judgment were rendered for a certain amount, as principal and interest; the amount being less than the sum for which payment was stipulated in the bill. It was held that in the absence of anything to show what interest, or that any in fact, was computed and included in the verdict, the judgment would not be disturbed on appeal. Rockmore v. Davenport, 14 Tex. 602, 65 Am. Dec. 132.

Harmless error, as in other cases, will not be ground for reversing judgment. Richardson v. Monroe, 85 Iowa 359, 52 N. W. 339, 39 Am. St. Rep. 301 (holding that where a defendant is shown to have executed a note in suit by his mark, it is not prejudicial error to allow him to state that he did not sign it, where it appears by his other testimony that he admitted the execution of the note, and merely meant that he did not write his name with his own hand); Reading Second Nat. Bank v. Wentzel, 151 Pa. St. 142, 31 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 33, 24 Atl. 1087 (where an indorser on a note having been discharged by want of protest thereon, a renewal note was made, to which his name was forged, and in an action against him on such renewal, the court charged that, if his indorsement to the original note was genuine, plaintiff might recover, notwithstanding the renewal note was a forgery, the jury found in favor of the indorser, and it was held that plaintiff could not complain of the instruction, although it was erroneous); Early v. Preston, 1 Patt. & H. (Va.) 228 (holding that, although a count in a declaration on a protested bill of exchange is demurrable, as failing to aver presentment and demand of payment, an appellate court will not reverse a judgment for error in overruling the demurrer, if the presentment and demand of payment are sufficiently alleged in the other counts, and no injury could have resulted to defendant from the error); Smith v. Ehnert, 47 Wis. 479, 3 N. W. 26 (holding that, where the signature of defendant is not put in issue by denial under oath in a suit upon a promissory note, so that plaintiff is not required by law to prove the same, specific errors in the admission of evidence offered by him for that purpose cannot be alleged by defendant to reverse the judgment); Knapp v. Runals, 37 Wis. 135 (where defendant claimed to have paid the note in suit to one with whom it had been left by plaintiff for collection, while plaintiff claimed that this third person had obtained possession of the note without his consent, and had acted throughout as defendant's agent, declarations by this third person were admitted in evidence against defendant's objection "for the purpose of showing how the note came into his possession," but not to prove that he was defendant's agent, and it was held that the admission of the evidence was not prejudicial to defendant).

Presumptions in favor of the correctness of the proceedings below will be indulged as in other cases. Prather v. Zulauf, 38 Ind. 155 (holding that a revenue stamp is no part of a note, so that the fact that it does not appear that the note in suit was stamped does not prove that it was not stamped; and that, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the presumption is that the revenue law was complied with, and the proper stamp affixed); McKinley v. Shank, 24 Ind. 258 (holding that where, in an action upon a promissory note, the note was described as payable to plaintiff, while the note filed with the complaint and given in evidence was payable to "A. Horace Lewis, or hearer," as the variance could have been cured by amendment in the court below the supreme court will on appeal regard the amendment as having been made); Haeussler v. Haberstroth, 7 Mo. App. 458 (holding under a statute allowing the recovery of damages only when the note sued on has been negotiated, that where, in an action by the payee, judgment for damages was recovered, the presumption will hold good on appeal, in the absence of a contrary showing, that to support the judgment evidence was given that the note was negotiated, although the complaint does not so allege, but is against one as maker who had indorsed his name on the back, there having been no objection taken below); Chesebrough v. Tompkins, 45 N. Y. 289 (an action against the maker of a note, where the holder claimed title under an indorsement of the payee's name, made by one claiming to be his agent for that purpose, and plaintiff was nonsuited on the ground of failure to show title in himself. It appeared that the only authority of such agent was in writing not produced, and a motion was made by defendant to strike out his oral testimony of authority and it was held, the case not stating what disposition was made of the motion to strike out, that it would be presumed, in support of the nonsuit, that it was granted); Kendall v. Page, 83 Tex. 131, 18 S. W. 333 (holding that a judgment for an attorney's fee, computed on the entire amount of the note, will not be disturbed on appeal, in the absence of a statement of facts, since the presumption is that every fact provable under the pleadings, and necessary to sustain the judgment, was proved); Wheeler v. Pope, 5 Tex. 262 (holding that, where the record shows that defendant was present, and withdrew his defense to an action on a note, and it does not the appellate court.[24] Thus where advantage is not taken in the court below of the insufficiency of a notice to charge the indorsers it cannot be done on appeal.[25] An indorser cannot, for the first time on appeal, urge that the indorsement was defective in form,[26] or that he was discharged by an agreement between the payee and the maker.[27] Nor can the defense that plaintiff was not a bona fide holder of the note in suit be placed upon grounds not distinctly pointed out in the trial court.[28] It has been held also that an objection that because the blank indorsement of the note in suit was not filled up before the day of trial plaintiff showed no ownership of the note and hence could not recover cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.[29] When the sufficiency of a complaint is first attacked in the appellate court, the question of its sufficiency has relation solely to the time at which judgment was rendered upon it and to the form in which it is found in the record.[30] If an essential averment is omitted, it is cause for reversal on the merits, notwithstanding a statute directing that no judgment shall be reversed, but for some cause affecting the merits of the judgment.[31]

3. Whether Instrument Sued On Is Part of Record. To make a note part of the record so that the court may notice it for any purpose, defendant must crave oyer of it, and a copy filed with the declaration is no part of the record, although appear that he objected to the judgment as entered against him, it will be inferred that he assented to the judgment, and such assent will hold him).

Objection that the declaration alleged a negotiable instrument, whereas the note in evidence was non-negotiable, cannot be urged for the first time on appeal. Jones v. Fales, 4 Mass. 245.

Objection that the lower court allowed one of several joint makers of a note sued together to sever in his defense and have a separate trial is no ground for reversal when no exception was taken below. Commercial, etc., Bank v. Lum, 7 How. (Miss.) 414.

Objection that the note was not filed with the petition will not be considered where no such objection was made in the trial court. Peake v. Bell, 65 Mo. 224.

Objection as to issue tried.— Where, in an action on a note, the complaint avers that the note was executed by defendant as maker, and by him delivered for value to the payee, who in turn indorsed it for value to plaintiff, and the answer admits these averments, but the case is tried on the theory that it is an open question whether the payee was the lender of the money or an accommodation indorser who acted as defendant's agent in procuring the note to be discounted by plaintiff, an objection after trial that the issue tried was different from that made by the pleadings comes too late. Union Bank v. Neuman, 59 Hun (N. Y.) 615, 12 N. Y. Suppl. 633, 35 N. Y. St. 422.

Objection as to effect of evidence.— In a suit on a note defendant pleaded a material and unauthorized alteration of the note, which was denied by replication. It was held that aside from the state of the pleadings the supreme court would not pass upon the legal effect of evidence showing defendant's subsequent ratification of the change, in the absence of charges of fraud directing the attention of the trial court below to that question. Capital Bank v. Armstrong, 62 Mo. 59.

Damages for frivolous appeal.— Where defendant, alleging the failure of consideration of a note, fails to make his defense in the lower court, the appellate court may adjudge damages against him for a frivolous appeal. Hawkins v. Wiel, 22 La. Ann. 579.

Such writing not being a promissory note, and no statement of the consideration being given, without which the action could not regularly be supported, is a cause for reversal upon the merits. "It is nomen generale, designating an office of a public or private nature, permanent or temporary; and although the term be not used in constituting the office, they may be nevertheless commissioners, if their duties be confined to a particular case, or class of cases. Thus we may have commissioners to make partition of lands, street commissioners, or commissioners of bankruptcy; and in this case we have commissioners to make appraisements, although the term be not used; and the word 'appraisers' is used in the act, not as any official, or technical appellation, but rather as descriptive of the duties which they were commissioned to perform." Lush, J. thought that they meant 'received into prison,' and on that based his judgment. But I cannot agree with him. I think that the words, both in common parlance and in legal phraseology, mean when the order is made under which the person is to be kept in prison."

I. DEFINITION.

Commons or common lands in a strictly legal sense may be defined to be those lands in which rights of common[1] exist.[2] But in its popular sense the word

1. Rights of common are defined and explained see infra, IV.

2. Sweet L. Dict. And see Anderson L. Dict. The term "common" by no rules of interpretation can be construed to mean a lot to be held by several as tenants in common, but as a lot in which several are to have common of some sort. Knowles v. Nichols, 2 R. I. 198.

Other definitions are: "A tract of ground, the use of which is not appropriated to an individual, but belongs to the public or to a number." Century Dict. [quoted in Goode v. St. Louis, 113 Mo. 257, 271, 20 S. W. 1048].

"An uninclosed tract of ground, the use of which is not appropriated to an individual, but belongs to the public or to a number." Webster Dict. [quoted in Goode v. St. Louis, 113 Mo. 257, 271, 20 S. W. 1048].

"Commons or waste lands" as used in 50 Geo. III, c. 122, § 87, was held to mean commonable lands, the ownership of the soil of which was in the lord of the manor, and not open fields over which certain persons had rights in severalty. Grand Union Canal Co. v. Ashby, 6 H. & N. 394, 30 L. J. Exch. 203, 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 673.

Distinguished from "uninclosed lands."— The word "common" as used in a statute has been distinguished from the words "uninclosed lands." Ferguson v. Miami Powder Co., 9 Ohio Cir. Ct. 445. For the meaning of the term "commons" as used in a stat-

"common" is used to denote pieces of ground left open for common or public use for the convenience and accommodation of the inhabitants of the town or municipality.[3]

II. HISTORY AND EXISTENCE.

Common lands are of ancient feudal origin,[4] but have not generally survived in the United States,[5] although formerly most common in England and other European countries.[6] Rights of common have been sustained in some of the states of the Union[7] and denied in others.[8] So too various specific lands have been declared to be common,[9] while the right of common has been denied as to

Common field lot or out lot defined as used in the act of congress of June 13, 1812, confirming titles to common lands in Missouri see infra, VI, D, 2.

3. Cincinnati v. White, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 431, 8 L. ed. 452 [quoted in Goode v. St. Louis, 113 Mo. 257, 272, 20 S. W. 1048]. The word "common" also denotes "an uninclosed piece of land set apart for public or municipal purposes in many cities and villages of the United States." Black L. Dict. [quoted in Goode v. St. Louis, 113 Mo. 257, 271, 20 S. W. 1048]. In most of the cities and towns in the United States there are considerable tracts of land appropriated to public use. These commons were generally laid out with the cities or towns where they are found, either by the original proprietors or by the early inhabitants. Bouvier L. Dict. The word "commons," as used in Wagner's Stat. Mo. p. 1314, § 1, relating to the incorporation of towns, means lands included in or belonging to a town which are set apart for public use. State v. McReynolds, 61 Mo. 203.

5. Although the right of common, with many of its old common-law incidents, was formerly recognized in this country, particularly in the middle and eastern states (Anderson L. Dict.), it has been said that it probably does not exist in any of the northern or western parts of the United States which have been settled since the Revolution (3 Kent Comm. 404. But see Ill. Const. (1818), art. 8, § 8). See also Van Rensselaer v. Radcliff, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 639, 649, 25 Am. Dec. 582, where it was said: "These common rights which were at one time thought to be essential to the prosperity of agriculture, subsequent experience, even in England, has shown to be prejudicial. In this country such rights are uncongenial with the genius of our government, and with the spirit of independence which animates our cultivators of the soil. In our state, however, we have the manors of Livingston and of Rensselaerwyck, in which these rights have existed, and to some extent do still exist."

III. CREATION.

Common lands may be created by government grant, either in general terms to the inhabitants[12] or by appropriation specifically for certain common purposes,[13] of lands only which the government owns,[14] or by appropriate words in a deed by a private party where it must clearly appear that the creation of right of common was intended.[15] A right of common, being a species of profit a prendre, can be created by prescription but not by custom, except in the ancient case of copyhold tenants who might claim under a custom.[16]

Such trustees were clothed by the charter with power to possess all the lands unappropriated to individuals before it was granted. It was held that such lands are common lands, and that the title thereto is in the town of Southampton.

Created by government grant only in "inhabitants."—A right of lopwood, lying within a manor, that is, a right in the inhabitants of a parish at certain periods of the year to lop for fuel the branches of trees growing upon the waste lands of the manor, cannot be created by custom or prescription, or otherwise than by crown grant or act of parliament. Dec. 687, where it appeared that the state, having laid out a town into lots, appropriated a tract out of the borders of the town for a common pasture, for the benefit of the owners of the lots, and afterward sold the lots. It was held that the tract so appropriated was common appurtenant.

15. Grant of land with common appurtenant insufficient.— After a right of common has been extinguished by unity of possession a new right is not created by a grant of a messuage and land with common appurtenant, although those who have occupied the tenement since the extinguishment have always used common therewith. See also Tubbs v. Lynch, 4 Harr. (Del.) 521, where it was held that the uninterrupted possession and enjoyment for forty years of vacant land, the title to which stood in the state, gave no rights of common, but afforded ground for a presumption of a grant by the state to the occupant and those under whom he claimed.

In Iowa the statute does not prohibit one who incloses land adjoining the close of another, and does not own any part of the division fence, from throwing any portion of such land open to common. Miner v. Bennett, 45 Iowa 635.

Government lands.— Concerning rights in a royal forest claimed by prescription, where, however, the claimant was defeated by proof that he took originally by virtue of an allotment made by royal commissioners of the land as appurtenant to which he claimed common see Mill v. New Forest Com'r, 18 C. B. 60, 2 Jur. N. S. 520, 25 L. J. C. P. 213, 86 E. C. L. 60.

Called corporeal hereditaments.— "So cattle-gates or stints, the rights of pasture of the inhabitants of a parish or other similar class over lammas-lands, &c., are not rights of common, though frequently so called, but shares in the vesture of land, and therefore corporeal hereditaments." Sweet L. Dict.

IV. NATURE AND SUBJECT-MATTER OF RIGHTS OF COMMON.

A. In General. A right of common is in nature an incorporeal hereditament of the kind called a profit,[17] running with the land to which it is annexed[18] and possibly divisible,[19] and cannot include a right to take the whole of the profits from the land.[20] A right of common is a right or privilege which several persons have to the produce of the lands or waters of another.[21] A grant in general terms of rights in common is held to give such rights accompanied by their usual limitations.[22] So rights in common may be limited by conflicting rights.[23]

17. Western University v. Robinson, 12 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 29; Abbott L. Dict.

"Common, or right of common, appears from its very definition to be an incorporeal hereditament: being a profit which a man hath in the land of another." 2 Bl. Comm. 32.

18. Western University v. Robinson, 12 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 29.

19. Nicholls v. Chapman, 5 H. & N. 643, 29 L. J. Exch. 461, 2 L. T. Rep. N. S. 568, 8 Wkly. Rep. 664, holding that whether or not there could be a right to common of pasture for a fraction of one animal need not be decided, but an allegation in a pleading of a right to three fourths of a right of common was unintelligible.

20. In the technical sense of the words a common (or right of common) is the right of taking some part of any natural product of the land or water belonging to another man in common with him. Therefore the right to take the whole of the product, or to exclude the owner from taking it, is not a common — although sometimes called a sole common — but an estate in land; "for it is against the nature of this word common, and it was implyed in the first grant, that the owner of the soyle should take his reasonable profit there." Coke Litt. 122*a* [cited in Sweet L. Dict.]; Rapalje & L. L. Dict.

21. "As a noun, [the word common] signifies the right of one person to take or use the product of lands the property of another. It is an incorporeal hereditament." Abbott L. Dict.; Anderson L. Dict.

"A profit which a man hath in the land of another; as to feed his beasts, to catch fish, to dig turf, to cut wood, or the like is a common." Burrill L. Dict. [citing 2 Bl. Comm. 32; 2 Stephen Comm. 3].

"In English law, [a common] is an incorporeal right which lies in grant, originally commencing on some agreement between lords and tenants, which by time has been formed into prescription, and continues good, although there be no deed or instrument to prove the original contract. . . . It is chiefly of four sorts; common of pasture, of piscary, of turbary, and of estovers. 'The ancient books,' it has been said, 'are more explicit on rights of common than the modern; probably on account of the great increase of inclosures.'" Burrill L. Dict. [citing Tyrringham's Case, 4 Coke 36*b*; Atkinson v. Teasdale, 2 W. Bl. 817, 3 Wils. C. P. 278]; Van Rensselaer v. Radcliff, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 639, 649, 25 Am. Dec. 582, where it is said: "Common or a right of common, is a right or privilege which several persons have to the produce of the lands or waters of another. Thus, common of pasture is a right of feeding the beasts of one person on the lands of another; common of estovers is the right a tenant has of taking necessary wood and timber from the woods of the lord for fuel, fencing, &c.; common of turbary and piscary are in like manner rights which tenants have to cut turf or take fish in the grounds or waters of the lord. All these rights of common were originally intended for the benefit of agriculture, and for the support of the families and cattle of the cultivators of the soil. They are in general either appendant or appurtenant to houses and lands."

Kinds of rights in common.— The right usually meant is common of pasture: the right of feeding beasts on another's land. There was also common of estovers: the liberty of taking necessary wood, for use of house or farm — house-bote, fire-bote, hay-bote, hedge-bote, etc.; common of piscary: the liberty of fishing in another's water; common of turbary: a right to dig turf; common in the soil: a right to dig for minerals, etc. All the species result from the same necessity — the maintenance and carrying on of husbandry. Anderson L. Dict. And see infra, IV, B et seq.

Rights not strictly common.— "Common is sometimes used to denote certain rights which resemble rights of common in the strict sense . . . , in giving a person the right of taking the profits of land in common with others, but nevertheless differ from rights of common in some essential point. Thus, the right of the lord of a manor to take profits from the waste of the manor, in common with the tenants, is not strictly a right of common, because the waste is vested in him, and no one can have common in his own land." Rapalje & L. L. Dict.

22. Benson v. Chester, 8 T. R. 396, 4 Rev. Rep. 708, holding that an ancient deed of feoffment granting the wastes of a manor to feoffees in trust to permit the tenants and inhabitants to use and enjoy the same, as they had formerly done, or been accustomed to do, must be taken to mean such a right of common as may by law exist, namely, a right of common restricted by levancy and couchancy.

23. The right of commoners in a common may be subservient to the right of the lord

B. Pasture — 1. In General. Common of pasture is a right in common with others to feed beasts on lands of another.[24] It is of four sorts, appendant,[25] appurtenant,[26] because of vicinage,[27] and in gross,[28] and is distinguishable from other rights of common in that it extends to the whole common and not merely to those parts where the product is found,[29] although it may be controlled by custom and may be held subservient to other rights of the owner of the common lands.[30]

2. Common Appendant. Distinguishing features of common appendant are that it is dependent on land only and must have existed from time immemorial,[31] and is confined to commonable beasts.[32]

3. Common Appurtenant. Common appurtenant as distinguished from other kinds of common of pasture is a landowner's right of pasturage independent of the propinquity of the lands, founded on a grant or prescription,[33] and is in the soil; so that the lord may dig claypits there, or empower others to do so, without leaving sufficient herbage for the commoners, if such a right can be proved to have been always exercised by the lord. Common appendant is a right annexed to the possession of arable land by which the owner is entitled to feed his beasts on the lands of another, usually of the owner of the manor of which the lands entitled to common are a part, and can be claimed by prescription only. Van Rensselaer v. Radcliff, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 639, 25 Am. Dec. 582. "This kind of common arises from the connexion of tenure, and is of common right; it must have existed from time immemorial and cannot now be created; it is regularly appendant to arable land only, and can be claimed for no beasts but such as are commonable, that is, beasts of the plough, such as horses or oxen, or such as manure the ground, as kine or sheep." Burrill L. Dict.

Common appendant and appurtenant distinguished.— "The estate here granted . . . [is] of that species which are denominated appurtenant, and not appendant, between which there are many essential differences. The former does not arise from any connection of tenure, and may be created by grant, or claimed by prescription; whereas the latter can only arise from prescription." Watts v. Coffin, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 495, 498.

The origin of common appendant is stated to be as follows: "This [common appendant] . . . was originally permitted, not only for the encouragement of agriculture, but from the necessity of the thing. For, when lords of manors granted out parcels of lands to tenants, for services either done or to be done, these tenants could not plough or manure the land without beasts; these beasts could not be sustained without pasture; and pasture could not be had but in the lord's wastes, and on the unenclosed fallow grounds of themselves and the other tenants. The law therefore annexed this right of common, as inseparably incident to the grant of the lands." 2 Bl. Comm. 33. For a learned treatise on the ancient origin of rights of common, suggesting inter alia that the distinction between common appendant and common appurtenant was caused by the statute of quia emptores see Origin Rights Common, 3 Law Quart. confined to beasts having some relation to the lands to which the right is appurtenant,[34] although it may extend to beasts not commonable.[35]

4. Of Vicinage. Common per causa de vicinage is a right of the inhabitants of adjoining towns to have their beasts stray interchangeably in the waste lands of each,[36] and can only be for cattle levant and couchant on the lands of such towns,[37] and is not confined to commonable beasts.[38]

5. In Gross. Common in gross is personal, unconnected with any ownership in land, and may arise by deed or by prescription.[39]

6. Without Stint. Common without stint is a right of common without limit to the number of cattle grazed,[40] which may probably exist as a species of common in gross granted to an individual only,[41] although the possibility of its existence has been denied.[42]

The fact that cattle are suffered without objection to run at large over the uninclosed woodlands of a new country, affords no ground from which to imply a grant."

"Common because of vicinage, or neighbourhood, is where the inhabitants of two townships, which lie contiguous to each other, have usually intercommoned with one another; the beasts of the one straying mutually into the other's fields, without any molestation from either. This is indeed only a permissive right, intended to excuse what in strictness is a trespass in both, and to prevent a multiplicity of suits: and therefore either township may enclose and bar out the other, though they have intercommoned time out of mind." 2 Bl. This is a separate inheritance, entirely distinct from any landed property, and may be vested in one who has not a foot of ground in the manor. 2 Bl. Comm. 34. C. Rights Other Than Pasture — 1. Digging. A common of digging is the right to take soil or minerals,[43] and carries with it, as a necessary incident, the right to enter upon the land and there do all that is necessary and usual for the full enjoyment of the right.[44]

2. Estovers. Common of estovers is a right to take necessary wood for the use of a house or farm from off another's estate.[45] Common of estovers cannot be divided and is extinguished by an attempt to divide it.[46]

4. Piscary. Common of piscary is the right of fishing in waters belonging to another.[48]

Use of building stone.— In Green v. Putnam, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 21, it is held that a grant of common in "building stones" includes all purposes "for which such material, in the progress of time and the arts, may be made useful. In this sense, it would not be a violation of the right, to appropriate the stone to the building of fences, bridges, arches, culverts, drains, curb-stones, monuments in cemeteries, and to the various ornamental uses to which it is usually applied." These botes or estovers must be reasonable ones; and such any tenant or lessee may take off the land let or demised to him, without waiting for any leave, assignment, or appointment of the lessor, unless he be restrained by special covenant to the contrary." 2 Bl. ## V. PROPRIETARY OF COMMON LANDS.

A. Who Constitute. Those constituting the proprietary must be certain and not general in number. Thus those inhabiting a certain neighborhood or village cannot acquire a right in common, either by grant[54] or by prescription;[55] and neither can the inhabitants of a nation.[56] But this object can be effected by a grant to a governmental division in its corporate capacity of rights in common in trust for the use of the inhabitants,[57] or to certain persons named, with their associates, for common purposes.[58] The personnel of the proprietary cannot be disputed after the lapse of a considerable period of time.[59] A statute

Wherever the beach exist in front of or below the field, there the right of taking the sea dressing extends."

(Mass.) 364 (where a grant to "that neighbourhood of the town from Duxbury-ward on the south side of the South river to the mouth of Green's Harbour" was held to be void on two grounds: first, that the "neighborhood" is not defined with sufficient certainty; and secondly, that some of the intended grantees were not capable of taking, not being in existence at the time of the grant. On this latter point it was said that the grant gave only an estate to those living in the neighborhood at the time of the grant, if it had any effect); Worcester v. Green, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 425.

"Inhabitants" construed.—It seems that a grant to the "inhabitants" of a parish lying within a manor of a profit a prendre out of the manorial waste means a grant to the inhabitants of houses lawfully erected within the parish, and does not extend to the inhabitants of houses which, through having been erected on the waste, illegally interfere with the right claimed. IV, c. 61, and 5 & 6 Wm. IV, c. 76.

58. Denton v. Jackson, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 320.

defining the proprietary will govern[60] and must supersede any by-laws of the proprietors.[61]

B. Incorporation — 1. Manner of. Incorporation of proprietors of common lands may take place by the provincial statutes,[62] by acts of congress relating to Indians,[63] or without statutory authority in the case of "the proprietors of townships," especially where subsequent statutes recognize such townships as corporations.[64] And it has been held that incorporation for the purpose of holding common lands may take place merely by a grant to the inhabitants,[65] or even to specific persons with their associates.[66]

2. Proof of. The validity of the organization of the proprietors should be proved by extrinsic evidence of all vital facts, except in case of an ancient proprietary whose doings have been long acquiesced in, when proof of the existence of a de facto organization is sufficient.[67]

C. Meetings and Proceedings — 1. In General. Where proprietors are by statute incorporated, the statute must govern their proceedings.[68] It has been said that where the meeting was called and held and no objection as to the regularity of the proceedings was made at the time, any anterior irregularity, provable only by parol, cannot vitiate the proceedings.[69] So action taken at a meeting

The inhabitants of the village of Cahokia, under the national grant and confirmation of commons, became the owners in fee, as a distinct community, and the various individuals who happened to be residents of the village at the time of such grant do not become joint tenants or tenants in common, but, as individuals, took no title whatever, acquiring merely such rights as would extend to other residents in the village. Out lots in Pennsylvania.— The Pennsylvania act of Sept. 11, 1787, empowered the supreme executive council to lay out and survey a town in lots, with a suitable number of out lots for the accommodation thereof, and to reserve out of the lots of the town so much as they should deem necessary for a court-house, jail, places of public worship, and burial grounds, and without the town, one hundred acres for a common pasture. The patent described the common as the common ground belonging to the town. It was held that the owners of "out lots" were not entitled to a right of common on the one hundred acres reserved. In the latter case it was said that the undivided common lands in the town of Hempstead, which were included in the tract granted in 1644 by the Dutch governor, and afterward, in 1685, by the English governor, belong to the town in its collective or corporate capacity, as common property, and not to individuals or the heirs of the surviving patentee. The Dutch grant was to six persons by name, with their associates, their heirs and successors, to build a town, and to erect a body politic or civil combination among themselves.

2. NOTICE OF — a. In General. Legal notice of meetings of proprietors must be given, otherwise any action taken at such meetings is illegal,[73] although the fact of notice need not necessarily appear by the records themselves.[74] After the lapse of a long period of time, and a long exercise of proprietary rights, due notice will be presumed to have been given.[75]

b. Form of Notice. The notice calling a meeting of the proprietors should ordinarily set forth sufficiently all matters which it is proposed to bring before the meeting,[76] and should be given exactly according to the statute[77] or the vote

Dolloff v. Hardy, 26 Me. 545.

71. A vote to raise a certain sum, under an article in the warrant for a meeting of proprietors, does not "exhaust the efficacy of the article." 76. Where proprietors, authorized by statute to direct the mode of calling meetings, vote that the petition for the warrant and the warrant shall contain each article to be acted upon at the meeting, no legal partition of the proprietors' lands can be made under a general article "to transact any other business said proprietors may think proper when met." Evans v. Osgood, 18 Me. 213.

The questions to be considered at a meeting of the proprietors of land who were organized into a proprietary, under Me. Acts (1821), c. 43, may be enumerated in the application to a justice of the peace for the calling of the meeting, and, if the application is annexed to the warrant, the enumeration will be as effective as if it had been particularly set out in the warrant itself. Williams College v. Mallett, 12 Me. 398.

What business is covered by notice.—Where a call for a meeting of the proprietors of the common and undivided lands of Nantucket, Massachusetts, notified the proprietors that the purpose of the meeting was to act upon the petition of one C "for land to be set off to him near Siasconset" (which was a part of the island of Nantucket, but having no legal, defined boundary), and the proprietors, at the meeting thus called, voted that the petion of C "for land near Siasconset be granted," and the lot layers laid out or set off certain lands as shown upon a map, which layout was accepted by the proprietors, it was held that the grant to C, which the meeting made, was fairly within the scope of the business of which the proprietors were notified by the warrant or call. Coffin v. Lawrence, 143 Mass. 110, 9 N. E. 6.

Substantial notice sufficient.— Since proprietors of common and undivided lands are quasi-corporations or bodies politic, the calls for meetings are analogous to warrants for town meetings, are to be governed by the same rules, and should be construed liberally; and a meeting may legally act upon any subject of which the warrant gives substantial and intelligent notice to the voters. Coffin v. Lawrence, 143 Mass. 110, 9 N. E. 6.

77. Evans v. Osgood, 18 Me. 213, holding that where the statute required that a proprietors' meeting shall be called "by a petition signed by twelve of them at least," a less number, although owning twelve shares, cannot legally call a meeting.

The statutory mode is not exclusive where the statute provides simply how the meetings may be called and is not superseded by a different mode established by a vote of the proprietors at a meeting regularly called; but a meeting may, in such case, be called in either mode. authorizing the calling of the meeting of such proprietors[78] and the warrant for the notice of the meeting.[79]

D. Records.[80] The records of the proprietors are presumed to be correct and statements therein contained cannot be controverted when they are, properly speaking, ancient;[81] but otherwise the records themselves are not competent to prove the validity of the proceedings therein set forth.[82] The records must show that the proceedings taken conformed to the statute.[83] Proprietors' records of deeds are not, as records, competent to prove the deeds.[84] The records may be legally made up by a clerk coming into office from minutes made by his predecessor,[85] and parol evidence is admissible to explain[86] but not to contradict them.[87]

E. Delegation of Authority. Unless acting under authority obtained at a legal meeting of the proprietary, individual proprietors or trustees cannot in any way bind all[88] or their successors,[89] although ratification by acquiescence may bind the proprietary.[90]

78. Where a proprietary vote authorized a meeting to be called by publishing a notice in a newspaper published in Hanover, if any; otherwise, in one published at Concord, a warrant requiring a notice to be published at Concord will be insufficient, unless there is evidence that no newspaper was published at Hanover. Goulding v. Clark, 34 N. H. 148.

79. If a justice, by his warrant, require notice to be published in a newspaper, and by posting in town, a notice by posting will be insufficient, although, by a vote of the proprietors, it would ordinarily be sufficient. Goulding v. Clark, 34 N. H. 148.

Construction of return of notice.— A return stating that notice of meeting had been given "by posting a copy in two public places," and "by inserting the same in . . . more than fourteen days previous" to the time of meeting "as the law directs," will be construed to mean that "posting" and "inserting" were both done fourteen days before the time of the meeting. F. Regulation of Proprietary. Proprietaries may be regulated by statute which is conclusive upon them.[91]

VI. TITLE TO COMMON LANDS.

A. In General. Title to common lands, although inchoate, is real property.[92] The word "title" includes the right of a commoner.[93] In New England when lands were held by proprietors title in fee was in the proprietary when incorporated,[94] on proper confirmation of the locations by it.[95] Title in common is taken subject to its authorized use.[96] Under a legislative grant the proprietors take only what is expressly granted.[97] Title may be divested by statutory process instituted by the state.[98] Property conveyed to proprietors cannot be regranted by the grantor, after disseisin, before the proprietors were capable of taking, without the consent of the proprietors.[99]

B. By Incorporation. The mere incorporation of proprietors of common lands, without any corporate act done, gives title to the common lands.[1]

C. Transfer of Title — 1. By the Proprietary — a. In General. The proprietors of common lands had authority in early times to alienate their lands by vote which, if duly recorded on the books of the proprietary, passed the title and constituted competent evidence of the transfer,[2] especially when accompanied by possession by the grantee.[3] If the grant was definite as to the boundaries of the tract granted then no further act was necessary to perfect title, but if the grant was in general terms then a return of the locating committee was necessary, specifying the boundaries of the premises,[4] which grant of title cannot be revoked, even at the same meeting.[5]

c. Sale Through Committee. Proprietors might by vote authorize a sale by a committee,[9] which vote was not itself effective to pass title,[10] but implied authority to give a deed,[11] which need not contain a recital of authority,[12] and on which one seal has been held sufficient, even where the committee consisted of more than one person.[13] The committee could delegate the execution of the deed.[14]

3. An entry in the books of the proprietors of common lands was thus: "August 13, 1742. At the request of Samuel Williams, Esq., granted to the rights originally William Phillips' half an acre of land on the ten acre division . . . between the said Williams' dwellinghouse and Thomas Gilbert's orchard." A subsequent entry in said books, dated Nov. 6, 1752, was thus: "Took an account of the lands that Major Samuel Williams had granted and laid out on the purchased rights he owns, and what land he bought by deed." At the close of this entry, after a description of other lands, was added: "Ten acre division, Aug't 13, 1742. On Phillips' right between his house and Gilbert's orchard, 80 rods." By a vote of the same proprietors, passed in 1736, a committee was empowered to allot the ten-acre division to the several grantees. It was held that the entry of Nov. 6, 1752, furnished evidence that the original grant was to Williams in his own right. Williams v. Ingell, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 83, 85, 86.

Lands in Missouri.— The common lands adjoining St. Charles, and granted to the inhabitants by the lieutenant-governors of upper Louisiana, in 1797 and 1801, are not inalienable, but may be aliened by the inhabitants in such manner as the laws of Missouri may prescribe, all dominion retained by the Spanish government having passed to the United States, and from them to the state of Missouri, by the statute of 1812. An act of the legislature, in North Carolina, after reciting that a certain tract of land, adjacent to Bath town, "was granted and surveyed for a common for the use of the said town, but the title thereof hath never been fully confirmed," declared "that the said land shall be, and hereby is appointed a common, to lie perpetually for the use and benefit of the inhabitants of Bath town, under such restrictions and regulations as are or shall be appointed for town commons; and that the inspection and immediate care of looking after the said common be in the commissioners of the said town for the time being." It was held that the tract of land itself, and not a mere right of common in it, was thereby granted to the inhabitants of Bath town, to be held for a town common; and this especially, where it appeared that a subsequent act provided "for fencing the town of Bath, and resurveying the common belonging to said town." In such cases, possession was the only thing to which they could look, and taking it for granted that those who of the United States,[26] which rights depend only on actual occupation at that date,[27] and do not need to be settled by a government survey or patent made either before[28] or after the confirmation,[29] or of the exercise of authority over it by the Spanish village authorities;[30] but are open in all cases to judicial proof,[31] the elements of which may be a government survey,[32] or certificate of confirmation, which are only prima facie evidence unless accepted,[33] or proof of user before Dec. 20, 1803.[34] The statute of 1812, if accompanied by an approved official survey, is equivalent to a patent,[35] which must, however, give way before

26. The construction of the act of congress adopted is "that the Act of 1812 is a present operative grant of all the interest of the United States in the property described in the Act; and that the right of the grantee was not dependent on the factum of a survey under the Spanish government. That the Act makes no requisition for a concession, survey, or permission to settle, cultivate, or possess, or for any location by public authority, as the basis of the right, title, or claim upon which its confirmatory provisions operate. No Board was appointed to receive evidence, or authenticate titles, or adjust contradictory pretensions. All these questions were left to be decided by the judicial tribunals." The act of 1824 (4 U. S. A certificate of confirmation granted by the recorder under the act of May 26, 1824, is prima facie evidence of title, under the act of June 13, 1812, as against the government, and persons claiming by a title subsequent to the latter act, but it is not sufficient to establish title to land lying within the approved United States survey of St. Louis common, as against one claiming title under the city of St. Louis, since in such case there must be actual proof of habitation, cultivation, and possession prior to Dec. 20, 1803. title by actual habitation, cultivation, or possession prior to Dec. 20, 1803.[36] In the absence of an official survey or other documentary title, title may be proved by proof of user of a definite tract prior to Dec. 20, 1803,[37] if it is also shown by whom the user was made[38] and that he had not abandoned his claim,[39] the statute of 1812 not confirming rights obtained after Dec. 20, 1803.[40] The effect of the act was to reserve from entry and sale all lands covered by it.[41] A government survey is binding on the government as to the location of the common lands included in the statute of 1812, and if the survey is agreed to, it is also binding on the occupier.[42] Failure to prove claims under the act of 1824 does not forfeit title confirmed under the act of 1812.[43]

b. Common Field Lots. What constitutes a common field lot or an out lot within the meaning of the statute is a question of fact for the jury;[44] but in general a "common field lot" is a tract of ground of a peculiar shape, usually from one to three arpents in front by forty in depth, used in common by the villagers for cultivation and protected from the inroads of stock by a fence which inclosed the commons and the village.[45]

3. PRIORITIES. A statutory confirmation of title takes precedence over all subsequent titles[46] and over subsequent confirmations of title[47] or a town location,[48]

36. Vasquez v. Ewing, 42 Mo. 247 (saying that an approved survey and list of lots under it may be defeated by proof of actual habitation, etc., as set forth in the statute); Vasquez v. Ewing, 24 Mo. 31, 66 Am. Dec. 694.

See also the same principles laid down as to the confirmatory act of April 29, 1816. McGill v. Somers, 15 Mo. 80.

"No formal act is necessary to constitute an acceptance [of a survey] but it may be inferred from a variety of acts and circumstances" and is a question for the jury. The acceptance of a survey estops the occupier from claiming common rights to any land outside the survey (Carondelet v. St. Louis, 29 Mo. 527; Carondelet v. McPherson, 20 Mo. 192), and the existence of valid private claims within the limits of the survey would not be inconsistent with such estoppel (Carondelet v. St. Louis, 29 Mo. 527).

VII. CONTROL, MANAGEMENT, AND USE OF COMMON LANDS.

A. Inclosure and Fencing.[51] Commons may be inclosed or "approved"[52] under the sanction of statute or custom, leaving sufficient for the use of the commoners,[53] by the lord[54] or any other owner of waste land[55] or the commoners themselves,[56] both in cases of common by grant as well as common appendant.[57] The statute may provide for the allotting to the commoners of inclosed lands in lieu of their rights of common,[58] or may regulate the fencing of such common field.[59] The commoner's view of the common may be entirely cut off by fences or hedges if only his cattle are still left free to enjoy the common as before.[60]

B. Misuser — 1. What Constitutes — a. In General. The common may be misused by a placing on it of cattle not commonable[61] or by the placing on it of cattle belonging to one who has no right of common;[62] by surcharging it;[63]

51. Inclosure of common lands as affecting title by adverse possession see Adverse Possession, 1 Cyc. 988, note 46.

52. Approving.— "By the statute . . . the lord of a manor may enclose so much of the waste as he pleases for tillage or woodground, provided he leaves common sufficient for such as are entitled thereto. This enclosure, when justifiable, is called in law 'approving,'— an ancient expression signifying the same as improving." 2 Bl. Comm. 34.

53. The burden of proof to show that sufficient waste is left for the commoners lies upon him who approves. Betts v. Thompson, L. R. 6 Ch. 732, 25 L. T. Rep. N. S. 363, 19 Wkly. Rep. 1100.

See also Duberly v. Page, 2 T. R. 392, holding that the lord has no right to inclose wastes of a manor, where the tenants of the manor have a right to dig gravel on the wastes. See also for a short statement of the work of the statutory commissioners on the inclosure of common lands in 1869 Brown v. Great Western R. Co., 47 L. T. Rep. N. S. 216.

The reason for allowing inclosures is stated as follows: "It would be very hard if the lord, whose ancestors granted out these estates to which the commons are appendant, should be precluded from making what advantage he can of the rest of his manor; provided such advantage and improvement be no way derogatory from the former grants." 3 Bl. Comm. 241.

Rights of strangers to a manor.— The lords of manors within a forest contended that they had customs to inclose the wastes within their manors with the consent of the homages of their respective manors. Other persons, strangers to the manors, had rights of common over the lands claimed to be inclosed. Held that the inclosures were bad as against the commoners. Sewers Com'rs v. Glasse, L. In an action for a surcharge of common the plaintiff need not show that he turned by plowing it;[64] by inclosing it without right;[65] or by taking manure from it.[66] It is not a misuse of the common for the owner to put in rabbit burrows, unless the common itself is destroyed.[67]

b. Structures. Structures, however, may be erected on a common consistent with its purpose,[68] as habitations for cattle-men on common of pasture,[69] or, it has been held, railroad structures on a village common.[70]

2. Effect of. Misuser of land dedicated in common causes a reversion to the donors,[71] unless the misuser does not render impossible the use of the land as contemplated,[72] or unless the donors are estopped to claim a reversion.[73]

C. Disposal of Income. The income from common lands may be disposed of by the proprietors[74] or by the court in accordance with statute.[75]

L. 757), even though persons are in it at the time provided proper notice is given (Davies v. Williams, 16 Q. B. 546, 15 Jur. 752, 20 L. J. Q. B. 330, 71 E. C. L. 546 [modifying Perry v. Fitzhowe, 8 Q. B. 757, 10 Jur. 799, 15 L. J. Q. B. 239, 55 E. C. L. 757]).

70. Under the act of 1828, incorporating the town of Columbus, and dedicating a certain tract as common, it was held that the common was not simply for pasture, but for the advancement of the town, and that the town might grant to a railroad the right of way across it, with the power to erect necessary depot buildings thereon, as the prohibition against erecting buildings must have been intended to apply only to temporary buildings for leasing. Crawford v. Mobile, etc., R. Co., 67 Ga. 405. The applicability of this decision to common lands may well be doubted in view of the fact that the doctrine of common lands has been virtually repudiated in Georgia. See Harrell v. Hannum, 56 Ga. 508; Davis v. Gurley, 51 Ga. 74. See also Goode v. St. Louis, 113 Mo. 257, 20 S. W. 1048. In this case it appears that in platting land, the proprietors designated a strip which was "to be and remain a common forever." In an action against the city to recover the strip because of misuser, the evidence showed that the only permanent structure thereon was a transfer railway track unauthorized by defendant, that the ground was used by the public for the exchange of merchandise, and that all obstruction thereon could be removed within ten days. It was held that defendant had not appropriated the land to purposes other than those implied by the term "common."

But see contra, People v. Park, etc., R. Co., 76 Cal. 156, 18 Pac. 141, where a railroad constructed in a park was held unlawful and a purprestur.

73. Where the donors of land abutting on a river as a common for nearly forty years, without objection, allow the city to expend nearly one million dollars in constructing wharves, etc., they are estopped in equity to obtain a reversion because of a misuser. 75. Every resident freeman of Bedford was entitled to turn out one head of stock annually upon certain commonable land. This right was transferable. A railway company took part of the land under the Lands Clauses Act, § 102; the compensation money for the extinction of commonable rights was paid into court. In a suit to ascertain the rights of all parties to the money it was held that the money ought to be reinvested in land to be held in trust for the freemen from time to time resident within the borough, and that in the meantime the money

D. Taxation. Proprietors of common lands could lay taxes on the lands[76] and only by statute bring a civil suit for their recovery,[77] or they might authorize the sale of the rights of individual proprietors for non-payment,[78] which sale must be in accordance with the vote of the proprietors[79] and must follow the statutory requirements,[80] as must appear in evidence to prove the sale.[81]

E. The Rights of Abutting Owners. Owners of lands abutting on commons have no right of way over them[82] except as expressly granted;[83] but they may have a right to have the common preserved as such,[84] although they may be by statute relieved of any duty to fence,[85] and are not responsible for allowing others to cross their lands to the common and there misuse it.[86]

F. Apportionment. Whenever the common is admeasurable it is apportionable,[87] but otherwise it cannot be apportioned among several so as to increase the burden upon the common lands,[88] and so where by operation of law a right in common devolves upon several, one cannot convey his right to an outside party, but all may jointly convey.[89]

from the proprietary is entitled to have partition of the share belonging to him.[90]

2. CONCLUSIVENESS AND EFFECT OF. A stranger to the proprietary cannot object to informalities in a partition acquiesced in by the proprietors,[91] and a mortgagee of a proprietor is bound by a proper partition.[92] A partition of premises to which a right of estovers is appurtenant destroys that right.[93]

B. By Vote of Proprietors — 1. IN GENERAL. Formerly proprietors of common lands could make partition passing title by vote without deed[94] or seal,[95] which partition was sufficient if clear as to parties[96] and boundaries,[97] although informal, and could set off certain tracts to certain proprietors as tenants in common.[98] It was necessary that the partition take place in accordance with the vote of the proprietors.[99]

2. THROUGH A COMMITTEE. C. By Judicial Proceeding — 1. In General. Common lands may be by statute liable to partition upon judicial proceeding.[4]

2. Effect of. The mere pendency of a partition suit does not nullify partition by the proprietors,[5] but judgment in a partition suit nullifies any partition by proprietors made during the pendency of the suit.[6]

3. Proof of.[7] A division without deed could be proved only by the records,[8] which must show action taken in accordance with the statute,[9] and which are presumptive evidence of title.[10]

D. Effect of Acquiescence — Estoppel. Acquiescence by proprietors for a considerable time in a partition made will estop such parties from objecting to its validity,[11] even in the case of infants or married women while under disability;[12] but only where there was a division in fact of the land, either by visible lines and monuments, or by possession under a claim of distinct and clearly defined parcels.[13]

IX. Extinguishment.[14]

A. In General. The closing of a common for a long period absolutely extinguishes it so it may not be thrown open again.[15] Where land appropriated to the public as common has been accepted by the public, or where individuals have purchased lots adjoining land so appropriated under the expectation excited by its proprietors that it should so remain the proprietors cannot resume their exclusive ownership.[16]

In case of conflicting surveys of common lands, where the persons claiming one of the parcels made partition of it among themselves according to metes and bounds, as fixed by one of the surveys, their action does not amount to such an acceptance of that survey as will preclude them from asserting the correctness of the other survey as against a stranger. Abandonment. A right of common may be extinguished by abandonment, to constitute which there must be a removal from or cessation of use of the common, with an intention to abandon,[17] as by devoting the land to the use of a highway;[18] but the yielding of some of the commoners to an inclosure of the common is not of itself an abandonment.[19] Abandonment is a question of fact for the jury.[20]

C. Unity of Possession. Common appendant remains unaffected by a purchase or lease of any part of the common lands by the commoner, but common appurtenant is extinguished by such purchase and suspended by such lease.[21]

COMMON LAW

I. DEFINITION AND NATURE.

A. Definition — 1. English Common Law. The term "common law" has been used in different senses.[1] In one sense it signifies that particular portion of the municipal law of England, which was formerly administered exclusively by the common-law tribunals, and is now administered by them concurrently with, and as modified by, equitable doctrines;[2] and in this sense the English common law includes the lex scripta or statute law as well as the unwritten law or lex non scripta.[3] Generally, however, when we speak of the English common law we mean the lex non scripta or unwritten law as defined by Blackstone — that portion of the law of England which is based, not upon legislative enactment, but upon immemorial usage and the general consent of the people.[4]

2. American Common Law. The common law in the United States[5] consists of the common or unwritten law of England as it existed in 1607, when the colonists from England settled in America, or in some states at a later date,[6] in so far as that law is applicable to the new surroundings and conditions[7] and has not been abrogated by statute;[8] also in most states of such English statutes enacted before their emigration or afterward and before the Revolution as were applicable and were adopted;[9] and of some local usages originating in, and coming down from, colonial times.[10]

Courts having "common-law jurisdiction." — In a California case, speaking of the act of congress of April 14, 1802, establishing a uniform rule of naturalization and conferring jurisdiction to issue naturalization papers upon state courts of record having "common-law jurisdiction," it was said: "The term 'common law jurisdiction' is capable of no other meaning than jurisdiction to try and decide causes which were cognizable by the Courts of law, under what is known as the common law of England. Our judicial system having been modeled chiefly after that of England, we have adopted the nomenclature which prevailed in her Courts. Hence, when we speak through our statutes and Courts of common law actions, proceedings at common law and common law jurisdiction, we mean such actions, proceedings and jurisdiction as appertained to the common law of England, as administered through her Courts." In re Connor, 39 Cal. 98, 100, 2 Am. Rep. 427.

4. 1 Bl. Comm. 67–73, where it is said: "The authority of these maxims [and rules of the common law] rests entirely upon general reception and usage; and the only method of proving, that this or that maxim is a rule of the common law, is by showing that it hath been always the custom to observe it." See Ill. Rev. Stat. (1899), c. 28, § 1; Ind. Rev. Stat. (1897), § 236; Kent Comm. 492; Smith Stud. Jurid. L. 92; Levy v. McCartee, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 102, 8 L. ed. 334 (holding that the statute of descents of New York of Feb. 23, 1786, providing that in all cases of descents not particularly provided for by the act "the common law" should govern, used the term common law in its appropriate sense, as the unwritten law, independent of statutory enactments, and that the term did not include alterations and amendments made in the unwritten law by British statutes prior to the American revolution); Jacob v. State, 3 Humphr. (Tenn.) 492; Forbes v. Scannell, 13 Cal. 242.

Chancellor Kent defined the common law as "those principles, usages and rules of action applicable to the government and security of persons and property, which do not rest for their authority upon any express and positive declarations of the will of the legislature." 1 Kent Comm. 469.

3. SEVENTH AMENDMENT OF UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION. In the provision of the seventh amendment of the constitution of the United States, that "suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury shall be otherwise re-examined in any Court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law," the term "common law" does not mean the common law of any particular state, but the common law of England, and in contradistinction to equity, admiralty, and maritime jurisprudence.[11]

B. Nature of the Common Law. The unwritten or common law, as distinguished from the written or statute law, is the embodiment of principles and rules inspired by natural reason, an innate sense of justice, and the dictates of convenience, and voluntarily adopted by men for their government in social and to protect their rights of person and property, and of citizenship generally, without awaiting the slow growth of a new system to be thereafter matured by legislation and judicial decision. They had already in their colonial state as subjects of Great Britain, an established jurisprudence in the common law of England. It was a system of jurisprudence to which our ancestors of that day were deeply attached. They had esteemed it throughout their colonial condition, to be their birth-right as English subjects, and their safest rule of conduct, so declaring it in several legislative acts."

relations.[14] The common law is not fixed and immutable except by positive enactment, like the statute law, but is flexible, so that it is always adapted to meet new and unexpected conditions,[15] and so that its principles will cease to apply when the reason on which they are founded ceases.[16]

II. SOURCES OF AMERICAN COMMON LAW.

A. English Common Law.[17] The greater part of the common law in the United States is derived from the common or unwritten law of England. This portion of the English law has either been expressly adopted[18] in most states by the constitution or by statute, or recognized by the courts as in force, except in so far as conditions render it inapplicable or it has been changed by statute.[19]

14. Smith Jurid. L. 92. See Jacob v. State, 3 Humphr. (Tenn.) 493, 514, where it is said: "The common law has been aptly called the 'lex non scripta,' because it is a rule prescribed by the common consent and agreement of the community as one applicable to its different relations, and capable of preserving the peace, good order, and harmony of society, and rendering unto every one that which of right belongs to him. Its sources are to be found in the usages, habits, manners, and customs of a people. Its seat in the breast of the judges who are its expositors and expounders." See also Kerner v. McDonald. 60 Nebr. 663, 84 N. W. 92, 83 Am. St. Rep. 550; Morgan v. King, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 9; People v. Randolph, 2 Park. Crim. (N. Y.) 174.

15. See Jacob v. State, 3 Humphr. (Tenn.) 493, 514, where it is said: "Every nation must of necessity have its common law, let it be called by what name it may, and it will be simple or complicated in its details, as society is simple or complicated in its relations. A few plain and practical rules will do for a wandering horde of savages, but they must and will be much more extensively ramified when civilization has polished, and commerce and arts and agriculture enriched, a nation. The common law of a country will, therefore, never be entirely stationary, but will be modified, and extended by analogy, construction and custom, so as to embrace new relations, springing up from time to time, from an amelioration or change of society. The present common law of England is as dissimilar from that of Edward III. as is the present state of society. And we apprehend that no one could be found to contend that hundreds of principles, which have in more modern times been examined, argued, and determined by the judges, are not principles of the common law, because not found in the books of that period. They are held to be great and immutable principles, which have slumbered in their repositories, because the occasion which called for their exposition had not arisen. The common law, then, is not like the statute law, fixed, and immutable but by positive enactment, except where a principle has been adjudged as the rule of action." See also Woodman v. Pitman, 79 Me. 456, 10 Atl. 321, 1 Am. St. Rep. 342; Morgan v. King, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 9.

16. See Kreitz v. Behrensmeyer, 149 Ill. 496, 502, 36 N. E. 983, 24 L. R. A. 59, where it is said: "The common law is a system of elementary rules and of general judicial declarations of principles, which are continually expanding with the progress of society, adapting themselves to the gradual changes of trade, commerce, arts, inventions and the exigencies and usages of the country." See also Beardsley v. Hartford, 50 Conn. 529, 541, 47 Am. Rep. 677, where it is said: "It is a well settled rule that the law varies with the varying reasons on which it is founded. This is expressed by the maxim 'cessante ratione, cessat ipsa lex.' This means that no law can survive the reasons on which it is founded. It needs no statute to change it; it abrogates itself. If the reasons on which a law rests are overborne by opposing reasons, which in the progress of society gain a controlling force, the old law, though still good as an abstract principle, and good in its application to some circumstance, must cease to apply as a controlling principle to the new circumstances." And see Kerner v. McDonald. 60 Nebr. 663, 84 N. W. 92, 83 Am. St. Rep. 550; Morgan v. King, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 9; People v. Randolph, 2 Park. Crim. (N. Y.) 174; Jaggers v. Estes, 2 Strobh. Eq. (S. C.) 343, 49 Am. Dec. 674.

The flexibility of the common law consists, "not in the change of great and essential principles, but in the application of old principles to new cases, and in the modification of the rules flowing from them, to such cases as they arise: so as to preserve the reason of the rules, and the spirit of the law." Spencer, S., in Rensselaer Glass Factory v. Reid, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 587, 628.

of such provision, prior to the settlement of the colonies, or in some states after such settlement and prior to the Revolution, where the statute was recognized as in force.[21]

C. English Decisions. It has sometimes been said that English decisions prior to the separation of the American colonies from England are a part of our common law, but this is not true. They are merely evidence more or less conclusive of what the common law was.[22]

E. Ecclesiastical Law. Some of the courts have declared the ecclesiastical law to have been a part of the common law of England, and as such to have been adopted, so far as applicable, as a part of the common law in the United States,[25] while others have held the contrary.[26] The true view seems to be that while those principles of ecclesiastical law based upon the union of church and state have no place in our jurisprudence, certain portions of the common law which, under statutes, were administered by ecclesiastical courts have been adopted by us.[27]

F. Law Merchant. So much of the law merchant as was of general application was adopted as a part of the English common law, and so much thereof as is suited to our conditions, and is not repugnant to our constitutions and laws is a part of our common law.[28]

Blasphemy is punishable at common law in this country, not on the ground that it is an offense against the christian religion, but because its tendency is to shock the moral sense of the community and provoke breaches of the peace. See State v. Chandler, 2 Harr. (Del.) 553; People v. Ruggles, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 290, 5 Am. Dec. 335; Updegraph v. Com., 11 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 394. And see BLASPHEMY, 5 Cyc. 710.

A contract to lease premises for a blasphemous lecture is illegal. Cowan v. Milbourn, L. R. 2 Exch. 230, 36 L. J. Exch. 124, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 290, 15 Wkly. Rep. 750.

"The maxim that Christianity is part and parcel of the common law has been frequently repeated by judges and text writers, but few have chosen to examine its truth or attempt to explain its meaning. We have, however, the high authority of Lord Mansfield and of his successor, the present chief justice of the Queen's Bench, Lord Campbell, (Campbell's Lives of Chief Justices, Vol. 2, p. 513,) for stating as its true and only sense, that the law will not permit the essential truths of revealed religion to be ridiculed and reviled. In other words, that blasphemy is an indictable offense at common law. The truth of the maxim in this very partial and limited sense may be admitted. But if we attempt to extend its application, we shall find ourselves obliged to confess that it is unmeaning or untrue. If Christianity is a municipal law, in the proper sense of the term, as it must be if a part of the common law, every person is liable to be punished by the civil power who refuses to embrace its doctrines and follow its precepts; and if it must be conceded that in this sense the maxim is untrue, it ceases to be intelligible, since a law without a sanction is an absurdity in logic and a nullity in fact." Andrew v. New York Bible, etc., Soc., 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 156, 182.

That christianity is not a part of the common law in the United States see Board of Education v. Minor, 23 Ohio St. 211, 246, 13 Am. Rep. 233, where it is said by Judge Welch: "We are told that this word 'religion' must mean 'Christian religion,' because 'Christianity is a part of the common law of this country,' lying behind and above its constitutions. Those who make this assertion can hardly be serious, and intend the real import of their language. If Christianity is a law of the state, like every other law, it must have a sanction. Adequate penalties must be provided to enforce obedience to all its requirements and precepts. No one seriously contends for any such doctrine in this country, or, I might almost say, in this age of the world. The only foundation — rather, the only excuse — for the proposition, that Christianity is part of the law of this country, is the fact that it is a Christian country, and that its constitutions and laws are made by a Christian people." "The law merchant first originated in custom among commercial men, who by common consent adopted such rules and regulations as they found the wants and necessities of commerce required; and as commerce was extended, it spread itself over the kingdom, till it became as universal as any principle of the common law. At first, the courts did not take judicial notice of it, but required proof to show what it was, when they would recognize and enforce it. Soon, however, it began to insinuate itself into the common law, by the courts taking judicial notice of it, till its fibres became so intimately interwoven with the body of the common law itself, that no one could draw the line of demarcation between the two; and the common law, ever improving and adapting itself to the requirements of commerce and the wants of the subject, finally, by progressive judicial decisions, the law merchant, or at least, that portion of it which was of universal application throughout the realm, was recognized by the courts without proof of its existence, and from that time forth, it became absorbed by and really constituted a part of the common law." Minnesota.— Const. Minn. § 2, declaring: "All laws now in force in the Territory of Minnesota not repugnant to this Constitution shall remain in force until they expire by their own limitation, or be altered or repealed by the legislature."

New York.— N. Y. Const. art. 1, § 16, declaring: "Such parts of the common law, and of the acts of the Legislature of the colony of New York, as together did form the law of the said colony, on the nineteenth day of April, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five, and the resolutions of the Congress of the said colony, and of the convention of the State of New York, in force on the twentieth day of April, one thousand seven hundred and seventy-seven, which have not since expired, or been repealed or altered; and such acts of the Legislature of this State as are now in force, shall be and continue the law of this State, subject to such alterations as the Legislature shall make concerning the same. But all such parts of the common law, and such of the said acts, or parts thereof, as are repugnant to this constitution, are hereby abrogated." See Furman v. Van Sise, 56 N. Y. 435, 15 Am. Rep. 441; Burtis v. Burtis, Hopk. (N. Y.) 628, 14 Am. Dec. 563.

West Virginia.—W. Va. Const. art. 13, § 5 (declaring that "the common law of England, so far as it is not repugnant to the principles of the constitution of this State, shall continue in force within the same, except in those respects wherein it was altered by the general assembly of Virginia before the twentieth day of June, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three, or has been, or shall be altered by the legislature of this State"), and § 6 (declaring that "the right and benefit of all writs, remedial and judicial, given by any statute or act of parliament made in aid of the common law prior to the fourth year of the reign of James the First of a general nature, not local to England, shall still be saved so far as the same may be consistent with the constitution . . . before the twentieth day of June, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three, and the acts of the legislature of this State").

32. Arkansas.— Sandel & H. Dig. (Ark.) § 600, providing: "The common law of England, so far as the same is applicable and of a general nature, and all statutes of the British parliament in aid of or to supply the defect of the common law made prior to the fourth year of James the First (that are applicable to our own form of government), of a general nature and not local to that kingdom, and not inconsistent with the constitution and laws of the United States or the constitution and laws of this state, shall be the rule of decision in this state unless altered or repealed by the general assembly of this state." See Hardage v. Stroope, 58 Ark. 303, 307, 24 S. W. 490.

California.— Cal. Pol. Code, § 4468, declaring: "The common law of England, so far as it is not repugnant to or inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, or the Constitution or laws of this State, is the rule of decision in all the Courts of this State." See Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 10 Pac. 674; Reed v. Eldredge, 27 Cal. 346.

Colorado.— Mill's Anno. Stat. (Colo.) § 4184, declaring: "The common law of England, so far as the same is applicable and of a general nature, and all acts and statutes of the British parliament, made in aid of or to supply the defects of the common law prior to the fourth year of James the First, (excepting the second section of the sixth chapter of forty-third Elizabeth, the eighth chapter of thirteenth Elizabeth, and ninth chapter of thirty-seventh Henry Eighth,) and which are of a general nature, and not local to that kingdom, shall be the rule of decision, and shall be considered as of full force until repealed by legislative authority." See Chilcott v. Hart, 23 Colo. 40, 45 Pac. 391, 35 L. R. A. 41; Herr v. Johnson, 11 Colo. 393, 18 Pac. 342.

Florida.— Fla. Rev. Stat. (1892), § 59, declaring: "The common and statute laws of England which are of a general and not of a local nature, with the exception hereinafter mentioned, down to the 4th day of July, 1776, be, and the same are hereby declared to be of force in this State: Provided, The said statutes and common law be not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States, and the acts of the legislature of this State."

Illinois.— Ill. Rev. Stat. (1899), c. 28, § 1, containing a provision similar to that in Colorado. See supra, this note. See Kreitz v. Behrensmeyer, 149 Ill. 496, 36 N. E. 983, 24 L. R. A. 59.

Indiana.— Ind. Rev. Stat. (1897), § 236, containing the same provision as in Colorado (supra, this note), except that it expressly excludes the common law and English statutes which may be inconsistent with the United States and state constitutions, the state statutes, and valid acts of congress relating to subjects over which congress has the power to legislate — an exclusion which would be implied if not expressed. See Holloway v. Porter, 46 Ind. 62; Stevenson v. Cloud, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 92.

Kansas.— Kan. Gen. Stat. (1899), § 7656, declaring: "The common law as modified by constitutional and statutory law, judicial decisions, and the conditions and wants of the people, shall remain in force in aid of the general statutes of this state; but the rule of the common law, that statutes in derogation thereof shall be strictly construed, shall not be applicable to any general statute of this state, but all such statutes shall

Missouri.— Mo. Rev. Stat. (1899), § 4151, declaring substantially the same as the Arkansas statute (supra, this note). See State v. Appling, 25 Mo. 315, 69 Am. Dec. 469.

Montana.— Mont. Pol. Code, § 5152, declaring: "The common law of England, so far as it is not repugnant to or inconsistent with the constitution of the United States, or the constitution or laws of this state, or of the codes, is the rule of decision in all the courts of this state." And see Mont. Code Civ. Proc. § 3452, declaring: "In this state there is no common law in any case where the law is declared by the Code or the statute; but where not so declared, if the same is applicable and of a general nature, and not in conflict with the Code or other statutes, the common law shall be the law and rule of decision." See Thorp v. Freed, 1 Mont. 651.

Nebraska.— Nebr. Comp. Stat. (1901), § 1675 (declaring: "So much of the common law of England as is applicable and not inconsistent with the constitution of the United States, with the organic law of this territory, or with any law passed or to be passed by the legislature of this territory is adopted and declared to be law within said territory"); and Nebr. Const. art. 16, § 1 (continuing territorial laws in force).

Nevada.— Nev. Comp. Laws (1900), § 3095, providing substantially the same as in California (supra, this note). See Vansickle v. Haines, 7 Nev. 249.

North Dakota.— N. D. Rev. Codes (1899), § 2691, subd. 4 (adopting the common law); § 2693 (declaring that "the evidence of the common law is found in the decisions of the tribunals"); § 2694 (declaring that there is no common law in any case where the law is declared by the codes).

Pennsylvania.— 1 Pepper & L. Dig. p. 106 (act of Jan. 28, 1777, § 2), adopting with specified exceptions the common law and such of the statute laws of England as had theretofore been in force in the province. Rhode Island.— R. I. Gen. Stat. (1896), c. 297, § 3, declaring that "in all cases in which provision is not made herein, such English statutes, introduced before the Declaration of Independence, which have continued to be practised under as in force in this state, shall be deemed and taken as a part of the common law thereof, and remain in force until otherwise specially provided."

South Dakota.— S. D. Anno. Stat. (1901), § 3401 (adopting the laws in force in the territory of Dakota); § 3401*a* (adopting the common law in any and all cases not controlled thereby); § 3404 (declaring that there is no common law in any case where the law is declared by the codes).

Texas.— Sayles Civ. Stat. Tex. art. 3258, declaring that "the common law of England (so far as it is not inconsistent with the constitution and laws of this state) shall, together with such constitution and laws, be the rule of decision, and shall continue in force until altered or repealed by the legislature."

Vermont.— Vt. Stat. (1894), § 898, declaring that "so much of the common law of England as is applicable to the local situation and circumstances, and is not repugnant to the constitution or laws, shall be law in this state, and courts shall take notice thereof and govern themselves accordingly."

Virginia.— Va. Code (1887), § 2 (declaring that "the common law of England, so far as it is not repugnant to the principles of the bill of rights and constitution of this state, shall continue in full force within the same, and be the rule of decision, except in those respects wherein it is or shall be altered by the General Assembly"), and § 3 (declaring that "the right and benefit of all writs, remedial and judicial, given by any statute or act of parliament, made in aid of the common law prior to the fourth year of the reign of James the First, of a general nature, not local to England, shall still be saved, so far as the same may consist with the bill of rights and constitution of this state and the acts of Assembly").

Washington.— Ballinger's Anno. Code & Stat. (Wash.) § 4783, declaring that "the common law, so far as it is not inconsistent with the constitution and laws of the United States, or of the state of Washington, nor incompatible with the institutions and condition of society in this state, shall be the rule of decision in all the courts of this state."

Wisconsin.— Wis. Stat. (1898), § 13, declaring that "such parts of the common law as are now in force in the territory of Wisconsin, not inconsistent with this constitution, shall be and continue part of the law of this state until altered or suspended by the legislature."

conditions and not changed by statute, have been adopted as a part of our common law,[92] as for example principles in relation to the property rights of married women,[93] liability of her separate estate for debts contracted by her,[94] and relief in equity against usury.[95] It has been held that whenever a right claimed under the rules of the common law is denied, governed, or controlled by the principles administered by courts of equity the latter will prevail over the former and it is the duty of the courts in administering justice to decide and render judgment accordingly.[96]

d. Time of Existence of Common Law. In some jurisdictions, but not in others, those common-law rules only which were in force prior to the fourth year of the reign of James I, when Virginia was settled, were adopted.[97]

2. English Statutes. In some states the constitution or statute adopted those English statutes only which were enacted prior to the fourth year of the reign of James I when the colony of Virginia was settled.[98] Other states adopted those enacted prior to July 4, 1776, or a date near that time, and which had been found applicable to local conditions and used and practised upon by the courts.[99] Others fixed no date, but adopted those which had been adopted and recognized as in force prior to the adoption of the constitution.[1] In the absence of express adoption the courts have recognized as in force statutes of a general nature enacted prior to the emigration of the colonists, and some which were enacted afterward and which had been recognized and acted upon.[2] In all states only those statutes which were of a general nature and applicable to our new conditions and surroundings have been adopted.[3]

3. Common-Law Remedies. The common law is in force in the various states of the Union, except in so far as it has been abolished by statute, as to the remedies for enforcing rights and redressing wrongs.[4] And the general rule is that an affirmative statute giving a remedy not known to the common law does not take away the common-law remedy.[5] When a statute gives a right without providing a remedy, the common-law remedy may be resorted to, if applicable.[6] Accordingly when a statute gives the power to issue a common-law writ, as a

4. Effect in Construction of Constitutions and Statutes. Constitutions and statutes are to be construed with reference to the principles of the common law.[8] And whenever a constitution or statute uses a word which has a well-known and definite meaning at common law, it is to be given the same sense in which it was understood at common law.[9]

5. Criminal Law. In most states the common law in relation to crimes and criminal procedure has been adopted or recognized by the courts as in force, except in so far as it has been abrogated or repealed, expressly or impliedly, by statute.[10] But it is in force only in so far as it is applicable to our conditions, a statute in defining a crime uses terms known to the common law, as "break" or "dwelling-house" in reference to burglary, etc., the terms are to be given their common-law meaning unless a contrary intention appears.[14] If a statute makes an act criminal, without prescribing any mode of prosecution or punishment, the common law prescribes prosecution by indictment and punishment by fine and imprisonment.[15]

B. In the Federal Courts — 1. In General. There is no common law of the United States as distinguished from the individual states.[16] A federal court, however, when it has jurisdiction of a cause under the constitution and laws of the United States, enforces the common law of the state in which it is sitting, and in determining causes the federal courts may and do resort to the common law and apply its principles in cases where it is applicable.[17] And the common law is resorted to in construing the constitution of the United States and acts of congress.[18] The code of constitutional and statutory construction which is gradually formed by the federal courts in the application of the constitution, and the laws and treaties made in pursuance thereof, has for its basis the common law, and constitutes a common law resting on national authority.[19]

2. Criminal Law. The federal courts have no common-law jurisdiction in criminal cases, for they can exercise such powers only as are conferred upon them by act of congress. No act can be punished as a crime against the United States, unless an act of congress has declared it a crime, and prescribed the punishment and the court which shall have jurisdiction of the offense.[20] But where an act of congress punishes an offense without defining it otherwise than by giving it a common-law designation, such as murder, larceny, robbery, etc., the courts look to the common law for the definition and elements of the offense.[21]

C. In the Territories. As a general rule by express adoption, the common law is the rule of decision in the courts of the territories of the United States, except in so far as it is inapplicable or inconsistent with acts of congress or of the territorial legislature.[22]

D. In the District of Columbia. The common law and early English statutes which were adopted by the constitution of Maryland[23] are in force in the District of Columbia, except in so far as they have been expressly or impliedly abrogated by act of congress.[24]

V. EVIDENCE AND PRESUMPTIONS.

A. Evidence of Common Law — 1. In General. In determining what the common law is the courts will consider as evidence, although not as conclusive, Blackstone's and Kent's Commentaries and other standard works on the subject;[25] and will examine and weigh the reasoning of the decisions of the state and federal courts down to the present time.[26] English decisions rendered prior to July 4, 1776, if they are clear and consistent, while they do not constitute a part of the common law, are usually considered conclusive evidence of what the common law is;[27] but those rendered after that date, while entitled to great respect, are not binding upon us.[28] The courts will also, in ascertaining the principles of the common law, consider English statutes amendatory or declaratory of the common law.[29] English decisions construing English statutes adopted in the United States, made prior to their adoption, or prior to the Revolution, but not afterward, will generally be followed.[30]

2. Common Law of Another State or Country. The common law of another state or country may be proved by the oral testimony of persons who are shown to be familiar with its jurisprudence,[31] or by the books of reports of cases adjudicated in its courts.[32] There are now express statutory provisions to such effect in some states.[33]

B. Presumption as to Existence. It is well settled in most jurisdictions that, in the absence of proof to the contrary, the common law is presumed to be in force, and to be the same as the common law of the forum, in those states which were originally colonies of England, or carved out of such colonies.[34] But 30. Cathcart v. Robinson, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 264, 280, 8 L. ed. 120, where it was said by Chief Justice Marshall: "The rule which has been uniformly observed by this court in construing statutes is to adopt the construction made by the courts of the country by whose Legislature the statute was enacted. This rule may be susceptible of some modification, when applied to British statutes which are adopted in any of these States. By adopting them they become our own as entirely as if they had been enacted by the Legislature of the State. The received construction in England at the time they are admitted to operate in this country — indeed, to the time of our separation from the British empire — may very properly be considered as accompanying the statutes themselves, and forming an integral part of them. But however we may respect subsequent decisions, and certainly they are entitled to great respect, we do not admit their absolute authority. If the English courts vary their construction of a statute which is common to the two countries, we do not hold ourselves bound to fluctuate with them." Distinguished from other cheats.— "But, whatever may be the rule and definition touching the common-law cheat, the statutes of England early began to distinguish between the different species of cheat, and to carve out a distinct offense for obtaining money or property by falsely personating another. Such an offense has been widely adopted in the American states. . . . The crime known to our statute is much the same as that constituted by 33 Hen. VIII, which extended the common-law cheat so as to include one accomplished through the use of a false privy token or counterfeit letter. The two offenses are defined, however, and made separate and distinct, by statute, so that there need be no longer a question, as under the common law, as to whether, in the false personation of another, the person engaging in the deceit is himself a false token." ## I. Nature and Elements of the Offense.

A. Definition. A common scold is a quarrelsome woman whose conduct is a public nuisance to her neighborhood.[1]

B. As Regarded by Courts. The rigor of the common-law punishment for this offense met with much disfavor by the courts at an early day, and its recognition as a public offense has been so limited that it has been argued that it is now obsolete;[2] but the courts have usually held it to be indictable as a common nuisance.[3]

C. Necessity of Continuity. This offense being but a species of nuisance, the element of continuity is essential. It is therefore necessary to prove the habit or practice of scolding.[4]

1. 4 Bl. Comm. 168; Jacob L. Dict.

Other definitions are: "A person addicted to the habit or practice of abusive language or vituperation, in places and modes rendering it a disturbance to the neighborhood, and a public annoyance." Abbott L. Dict.

"One who, by the practice of frequent scolding, disturbs the neighborhood." Black L. Dict. [citing Bishop Crim. L. § 147].

"A quarrelsome, brawling, vituperative person." Black L. Dict.

By statute.— In very few states of the United States has this common-law offense been recognized or modified by statute. Com. v. Foley, 99 Mass. 497, construing Mass. Gen. Stat. (1868), c. 165, § 28; and cases cited infra, note 2 et seq.

S. v. Royall, 3 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 620, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,202, in which case the court, per Cranch, C. J., said: "The offence is not obsolete, and cannot become obsolete so long as a common scold is a common nuisance." Contra, Com. v. Hutchison, 5 Pa. L. J. Rep. 321, 3 Am. L. Reg. 114 [overruled in Com. v. Mohn, 52 Pa. St. 243, 91 Am. Dec. 153] which denied the indictability, principally on the ground of the uncertainty of the punishment.

As to the unreasonableness of holding women liable to punishment for a too free use of their tongues the court, per Woodward, C. J., in Com. v. Mohn, 52 Pa. St. 243, 246, 91 Am. Dec. 153, say: "It is enough to say that the common law, which is the expressed wisdom of ages, adjudges that it is not unreasonable. . . . The argument drawn from the indelicacy and unreasonableness of such a prosecution of a female should be addressed, therefore, to the legislature rather than to the courts, for courts of justice who declare rather than make law, are insensible to all considerations of gallantry."

4. Baker v. State, 53 N. J. L. 45, 20 Atl. 858. To the same effect see Com. v. Foley,

D. Anger as an Element. To constitute this offense it is not necessary that the scolding be done in anger or turbulence.[5]

II. PROSECUTION FOR THE OFFENSE.

A. Indictment.[6] Inasmuch as the offense does not consist of a single act, but in a habitual course of conduct,[7] it is sufficient that the indictment charge one generally as a "common scold";[8] and the technical words "common scold" are usually held to be necessary.[9] It is usual[10] and in some instances held to be necessary[11] that the indictment conclude "to the common nuisance," etc.

B. Evidence — 1. ADMISSIBILITY. Upon the trial of one charged with being a common scold evidence of particular instances of scolding is admissible,[12] and in a trial for the analogous offense of "common brawling" such evidence was held to be admissible, although the words were used in defendant's own house and addressed to certain persons only.[13] Evidence of defendant's good reputation is admissible in defense of such action.[14]

2. SUFFICIENCY. In an action of this character it is sufficient to prove generally that defendant is always scolding[15] or using such language so publicly as to become a nuisance.[16]

C. Punishment. The punishment for a common scold is by fine and imprisonment at the discretion of the court, the old common-law punishment by the 99 Mass. 497, which case was, however, upon an analogous statutory offense.

Question for jury.— As to whether the scoldings of defendant have been of such frequency as to constitute a habit, and whether the habit has been exercised in such a manner as to disturb the public peace, are questions for the jury alone. Baker v. State, 53 N. J. L. 45, 20 Atl. 858.

5. U. S. v. Royall, 3 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 620, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,202.

6. See, generally, INDICTMENTS AND INFORMATIONS.

Forms of indictment for this offense may be found set out in whole, in part, or in substance in Com. v. Mohn, 52 Pa. St. 243, 91 Am. Dec. 153; U. S. v. Royall, 3 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 618, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,201; Rex v. Foxby, 6 Mod. 11; Rex v. Cooper, 2 Str. 1246; Rex v. Taylor, 2 Str. 849; Hawkins P. C. bk. 1, c. 75, § 5.

7. Baker v. State, 53 N. J. L. 45, 20 Atl. 858 [citing Hawkins P. C. bk. 2, c. 25, § 61].

8. Com. v. Pray, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 359; Baker v. State, 53 N. J. L. 45, 20 Atl. 858; U. S. v. Royall, 3 Cranch C. C. (U. S.) 618, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,201; Rex v. Urlyn, 2 Saund. 308; J'Anson v. Stuart, 1 T. R. 748.

Reason for rule.—As it is the general practice and not the particular acts which constitute the offense, the acts go to make up the evidence of the crime itself, and it is never necessary in pleading to set forth the evidence. Com. v. Pray, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 359. And see Hawkins P. C. bk. 2, c. 25, § 61, where it is said: "It is an Offence of a complicated Nature, consisting in the Repetition of divers Acts in Disturbance of the common Peace, all of which it would be too prolix to enumerate in the Indictment."

St. 243, 244, 91 Am. Dec. 153, where the indictment charged defendant with "intending the morals . . . of . . . citizens of this Commonwealth to debauch and corrupt, openly and publicly . . . , in the public highways, wicked, scandalous and infamous words did utter, in the hearing of the citizens, of the said Commonwealth and to their manifest corruption and subversion, and to the common nuisance," etc.

L. 228, 234, 39 Atl. 716], where it is said: "Here 'commune' is taken for 'people' so as 'tout le commune' is taken here for 'all the people,' and this is proved by the sense of the words, for Magna Charta was not granted to the commons of the realm, but generally to all the subjects of the realm, to those of the clergy and those of the nobility and to the commons also, and that 'commune' in this place signifieth 'people.' . . . So, 'a la commune' here signifieth not to the commons of the realm, but to the people of the whole realm."

Commune was the name given to the committee of the people in the French revolution of 1793; and again, in the revolutionary uprising of 1871, it signified the attempt to establish absolute self-government in Paris, or the mass of those concerned in the attempt. Black L. Dict.

"'Communicating' alone does not convey a definite meaning. There are many senses in which communication may be said to exist, as by telegraph, telephone, or conversation, between individuals, or by physical contact, or apparent uses, between inanimate objects. Opinion of English jurists.— "It has been sometimes said," observed Lord Ellenborough, "communis error facit jus; but I say communis opinio is evidence of what the law is; not where it is an opinion merely speculative and theoretical floating in the minds of persons, but where it has been made the ground-work and substratum of practice." L. 112, has been decided, and that we should not unsettle the law. I think, if we acted on this principle, we should be abandoning the proper functions of a Court of error. There are cases in which a decision originally erroneous has been so long acquiesced in and acted on that a return to the proper principle would greatly affect existing interests. This is peculiarly the case in questions of conveyancing law. There, the maxim applies 'Communis error facit jus.' But, when we find a modern decision which has been questioned at once, and has led to much litigation, we ought, as it seems to me, in a Court of error, to inquire whether it is consistent with principle, and, if we think it wrong, to overrule it. It has been forcibly observed by an American author of repute,— 1 Phillipps Ins. 393, n. 1,— that, to do otherwise, 'tends to reduce jurisprudence from a science to an aggregation of dogmas.'" Ch. 495, where it is said: "It is not upon slight grounds, certainly, that any court, either of law or equity, ought to loosen and unsettle that which has stood for so long a period as nineteen years. If it be true that even a prevailing error — what has been called a common or universal error — may be said to make the law, this at least may be allowed to be a sound foundation of the doctrine I am referring to, namely, that, unless a great and manifest deviation from principle shall have been committed, it may create much further mischief to reverse an individual case by way of correcting a slight error, if that error has been acted upon for a long series of years, than to leave it as it stands; more especially, if the opinion of lawyers and the decisions of judges have been ruled by it, and if, upon the analogies of that case, the same principle has been recognized and adopted in other cases connected with and relating to it."

Question for jury. — In the application of the maxim communis error facit jus, the inquiry is whether "the law is made." If the fact of the existence of a common error is to be submitted to the jury, and the jury finds its existence, then the court has no province but to complete the maxim and say facit jus. It had acquired and by the unwritten or common law it possessed and exercised certain rights of self-government and powers to acquire and to manage property for itself. By enactments of the Grand Ducal government its franchises and powers were recognized and confirmed to it. The public statutes, in providing that all the property of a community is the property of its citizens, as a corporation, or as a body, in fact, thereby invested the existing municipal body aggregate with an essential attribute of a corporation. This legislation would seem to have amounted to an incorporation by sovereign recognition and grant of powers and franchises. But whether chartered, or incorporated by statute or not, we are bound to consider the community as an artificial legal person. In Germany, in the eye of the law, it is a 'judicial person,' according to the evidence of the witness in this case, as under the Roman law, in the

Word as used in the constitution.— U. S. Const. art. 1, § 10, among other limitations of state power, declares that "no State shall enter into any Treaty, Alliance, or Confederation;" the second clause of the same section, among other things, declares that no state, without the consent of congress, shall "enter into any Agreement or Compact with another State, or with a foreign power." When, therefore, the second clause declares that no state shall enter into "any agreement or compact" with a foreign power without the assent of congress, the words "agreement" and "compact" cannot be construed as synonymous with one another; and still less can either of them be held to mean the same thing with the word "treaty" in the preceding clause, into which the states are positively and unconditionally forbidden to enter, and which even the consent of congress could not authorize. Distinguished from law.— Law "is also called a rule to distinguish it from a compact or agreement; for a compact is a promise proceeding from us, law is a command directed to us. The language of a compact is, 'I will, or will not, do this;' that of a law is, 'thou shalt, or shalt not, do it.' It is true there is an obligation which a compact carries with it, equal in point of conscience to that of a law; but then the original of the obligation is different. In compacts, we ourselves determine and promise what shall be done, before we are obliged to do it; in laws, we are obliged to act without ourselves determining or promising anything at all." 1 Bl. 72. As compared with "consideration" and "damages," "compensation," in its most careful use, seems to be between them. "Consideration" is amends for something given by consent, or by the owner's choice. "Damages" are amends exacted from a wrong-doer for a tort. "Compensation" is amends for something which was taken without the owner's choice, yet without commission of a tort. Thus, one should say, "consideration" for land sold; "compensation" for land taken for a railway; "damages" for a trespass. But such distinctions are not uniform. Abbott L. Dict. But compare Hays v. Briggs, 3 Pittsb. (Pa.) 504, 517, 22 Pittsb. Leg. J. 141, where it is said that the words "damage" and "compensation," as injury to another, in order that thereby the person damnified may receive equal value for his loss, or be made whole in respect of his injury;[73] the consideration or price of a privilege purchased;[74] equivalence;[75] something given or obtained as an equivalent;[76] the rendering of an equivalent in value or amount;[77] an equivalent given for property taken or for an injury done to another;[78] the giving back an equivalent in either money, which is but the measure of value, or in actual value otherwise conferred;[79] a recompense in value;[80] a recompense given for a thing received;[81] recompense for the whole injury suffered;[82] remuneration or satisfaction for injury or damage of every description;[83] remuneration for applied respectively to the lateral railroad and to the wharf or landing in the Lateral Railroad Law, mean practically the same thing. The word "damage" in this connection is a relative term with reference to possible advantages to the party otherwise damaged. The word "compensation" is absolute, and implies ex vi termini that the owner must be paid in money for what is taken from him. See also, generally, CONTRACTS; DAMAGES.

Compared with "salvage."— Compensation, larger or smaller, in the nature of salvage, is allowed by the court for services to property on the high seas, when such property is not in imminent peril, or perhaps in very little peril, of total loss. Whether this compensation is called "salvage," or simply "compensation," is really of no practical importance. The Mt. Washington, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,887, 4 Adm. Rec. 523. See also, generally, SALVAGE.

"Compensation" is a term of larger scope than "cost," and especially that "actual cost." In re Newton, 172 Mass. 5, 10, 51 N. E. 183, 185.

"Compensation" substituted for "value." — In Grand Rapids v. Grand Rapids, etc., R. Co., 58 Mich. 641, 648, 26 N. W. 159, the court said: "The statute in question has rightly discarded the term 'value,' sometimes used in similar statutes, for the term 'compensation,' which is the constitutional word, and means much more."

Distinguished from "profit."— Under the act of 1874, that no member of a life-insurance company shall recover any money as profit or otherwise, the court said: "Compensation for labor can not be regarded as profit, within the meaning of the law. The word 'profit,' as ordinarily used, means the gain made upon any business or investment — a different thing altogether from mere compensation for labor." Commercial League Assoc. v. People, 90 Ill. 166, 173.

May include "indemnity."—Although "compensation," in the popular sense, may be broad enough to include "indemnity," still, if the terms are used by the parties entering into the contract in a special or technical sense, they are to be so understood. Thus the term includes that equivalent in money which is paid to the owners and occupiers of lands taken or injuriously affected by the operations of companies exercising the power of eminent domain (Black L. Dict.); an equivalent for the value of land (New Jersey R., etc., Transp. Co. v. Suydam, 17 N. J. L. 25, 47, where the court said: "Anything beyond that, is more than compensation; anything short of it, is less. So their power is expressly confined to an equivalent"). This extinction takes place by operation of law, quite irrespective of the acts of the parties; and so complete is the extinction that one who pays a debt under such circumstances, notwithstanding the compensation which, pleno jure, had extinguished the cross demands, is obliged to proceed by an action termed 'conditio indebiti,' because the law regards him as seeking to recover a sum paid when nothing was due"]. ## I. DEFINITION AND NATURE.

A. Definition. A composition with creditors is an agreement made by a debtor, either in insolvent or in embarrassed circumstances, or by someone in his behalf, with two or more of his creditors, by which it is agreed on the one side that each of the creditors who enters into the agreement shall be paid a specified amount or a certain percentage (in either case less than the whole) of their respective claims, or that all or a specified portion of the debtor's property shall be applied toward the payment of those claims pro rata, while on the other side the creditors agree to accept in satisfaction of their claims whatever is thus proffered.[1]

1. This definition is much broader than those to be found in the authorities, but it is submitted that an examination of the requisites of a composition with creditors (see infra, II) will show that the usually accepted definitions are either incomplete or are too broad in their scope, as including either a compromise and settlement or an accord and satisfaction or both, from each of which a composition differs essentially. Compare ACCORD AND SATISFACTION; COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT.

Other definitions are: "An agreement between a debtor and various creditors, that he shall make certain stipulated partial payments, usually proportional, upon his debts, and that upon making these he shall be discharged from the residue." Abbott L. Dict.

"An engagement in which several of the creditors (not necessarily all, but a number) agree with the debtor, and in effect with each other, that the debtor shall be released on making the partial payments he proffers." Shinkle v. Shearman, 7 Ind. App. 399, 406, 34 N. E. 838.

"An agreement, made upon a sufficient consideration, between an insolvent or embarrassed debtor and his creditors, whereby the latter, for the sake of immediate payment, agree to accept a dividend less than the whole amount of their claims, to be distributed pro rata in discharge and satisfaction of the whole." Black L. Dict. [quoted in Continental Nat. Bank v. McGeoch, 92 Wis. 286, 310, 66 N. W. 606].

B. Nature of Agreement — 1. In General. A composition is a new agreement, and effects a novation of the original claim.[2] It is not only an agreement between the debtor and the creditors who enter into it, but is also an agreement of those creditors among themselves, each with the others.[3]

"An agreement made upon a sufficient consideration, between an insolvent or embarrassed debtor and his creditors, or a considerable proportion of them, whereby the latter, for the sake of immediate or sooner payment, agree to accept a dividend less than the whole amount of their claims, to be distributed pro rata, in discharge and satisfaction of the whole." Wilson v. Samuels, 100 Cal. 514, 518, 35 Pac. 148.

"An arrangement between a creditor and his debtor for the discharge of the debt, on terms or by means different from those required by the original contract or by law." 4 So. L. Rev. 639.

And compare Lanes v. Squyres, 45 Tex. 382; 8 Centr. L. J. 350. See also Bailey v. Boyd, 75 Ind. 125, 126, where a composition is defined to be an arrangement "between a debtor and creditor, whereby the debtor agrees to give, and the creditor to take, a less sum at a time fixed, instead of the original debt, according to its terms."

The definitions quoted are inaccurate and deficient. A composition need not be joined in by a considerable proportion of the creditors; two are sufficient (see infra, V, B, 1, a). It need not be an agreement to accept less than the whole amount of the debt; an assignment under which the creditors run the risk of losing a part of their claims is a composition, if accepted as such by the creditors, although they realize eventually the full amounts due them (see infra, II, A). And it is misleading to insert as a part of the definition that a composition must be upon sufficient consideration, as that would seem to imply that there must be an extrinsic consideration, whereas in a true composition the only consideration necessary is the intrinsic one created by the mutual agreements of the creditors who enter into it (see infra, II, F); and if there is an extrinsic consideration the transaction loses its nature as a composition and becomes an accord and satisfaction, or a compromise. Continental Nat. Bank v. McGeoch, 92 Wis. 286, 66 N. W. 606.

The object of a composition is to secure to the creditors an equal distribution of the debtor's assets, to relieve them from the strain and risk of a race for priority, and to secure the debtor from further pressure on the part of the creditors. Chase v. Bailey, 49 Vt. 71, 74, where it is said: "One of the principal considerations moving all the parties to a composition deed to enter into the same usually is, to secure the debtors, upon a surrender by them and division of their property equitably among the creditors, from future harassment by the creditors or any portion of them, and to leave the debtors free to form new business relations and enter upon new business enterprises." 4. Distinguished from discharge in bankruptcy.— A discharge discharges a bankrupt from his debts, whether there are or are not any assets for distribution. Under a compo-ation within itself,[5] and does not necessarily operate as a discharge of the original debt until performed,[6] while an accord and satisfaction depends for its validity upon an extraneous consideration and operates as a discharge and complete novation of the original claim.[7] A composition is also distinguished from a compromise, in that it will operate as the settlement of an undisputed liability, and applies in strictness only to money demands arising out of contracts, while a compromise is the settlement of a disputed claim and applies to claims and demands of all sorts.[8] A composition further differs from both an accord and satisfaction and a compromise in that it requires the concurrence of at least two creditors to make it binding,[9] while either of the other modes of settlement will be valid, although between a debtor and a single creditor.[10]

II. REQUISITES.

A. In General. In order to constitute a valid composition,[11] the debtor must be in embarrassed circumstances,[12] although it is not necessary that he be actually insolvent[13] or that the creditors should receive from his estate less than the full amount of their respective claims. It is sufficient that they run the risk of losing

5. See infra, II, F. A composition is said to be an exception to the rule that an agreement to take part of a debt in satisfaction of the whole is no legal satisfaction of the remainder. 7. See ACCORD AND SATISFACTION.

Agreements held to be compositions.— An agreement to assign stock in trade and outstanding debts to the creditors, who agree to accept the same in full satisfaction of their respective debts. Watkinson v. Inglesby, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 386. A delivery of property to trustees in satisfaction of the debts due various creditors upon a mutual written agreement among the creditors to receive the property as such and discharge the debtor. Bartlett v. Rogers, 3 Sawy. (U. S.) 62, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 1,079. In Robbins v. Magee, 76 Ind. 381, it was held that when a grantor, by an ordinary warranty deed, without conditions or limitations therein expressed, conveys land to certain grantees named in the deed, without indicating that the grant is to them as trustees and without any direction therein as to how the property shall be disposed of, but at the same time executes an agreement with the grantees which shows that they take the property as trustees, and as such are to sell it and apply the proceeds thereof to the payment of the grantor's creditors who may become parties thereto, the transaction must be regarded as a composition agreement between the grantor and his creditors and not as a voluntary assignment. In Crawford v. Krueger, 201 Pa. St. 348, 50 Atl. 931, the defendant proposed to his creditors that instead of using his money to procure a discharge in bankruptcy he should distribute it among them. The plaintiff, who was one of the creditors, assented, and authorized his attorney to act for him. He was told who the other creditors were, the amounts due them, and what they were to receive, and executed an agreement stating on what terms he would settle, which was to be shown to the other creditors. It was held that this constituted a composition.

When the transaction contains the elements of a compromise it will be held to be such rather than a composition. Graham v. Meyer, 99 N. Y. 611, 1 N. E. 143; Grabenheimer v. Blum, 63 Tex. 369; Continental Nat. Bank v. McGeoch, 92 Wis. 286, 66 N. W. 606.

13. In Castleton v. Fanshaw, Prec. Ch. 99, 24 Eng. Reprint 48, creditors who had compounded with the executors of their debtor, fearing a deficiency of assets, were denied relief, although it appeared that there were assets sufficient to pay them in full.

part by assenting to an assignment of the debtor's property for their benefit, although they eventually realize all that is due them,[14] or that they agree to an extension of time with the expectation of realizing their full claims in instalments.[15]

B. Advantage to Creditors. There must also be some advantage to the creditors in the settlement proposed, either in the distribution of the debtor's property, in fixed payments, or in the giving of security for the performance of the composition,[16] and consequently a mere extension of time without conditions and not under seal is not a composition, and irrespective of its enforceability as among the creditors themselves is not binding upon the creditors as between them and the debtor.[17]

C. Satisfaction of Debts. Although a composition is not an accord and satisfaction[18] it must contain all the elements necessary to give it the effect of such a transaction;[19] that is, it must operate until breach as a bar to recovery of the debt compounded.[20] A mere agreement to accept a composition therefore is an

14. Aiken v. Price, Dudley (S. C.) 50; Union Bank v. Rogan, 13 New South Wales 285. Contra, Reg. v. Cooban, 18 Q. B. D. 269. In Union Bank v. Rogan, 13 New South Wales 285, 291, a debtor assigned his estate for the benefit of his creditors by a deed to which they were parties, and by which they released the debtor from all debts owing by him to them. It was contended that this was not a composition, because there was no provision that the creditors should take less than twenty shillings in the pound. But the court held it to be a composition, saying: "It seems to me that in this case, although the property might be worth more than twenty shillings in the pound, nevertheless it was a composition. The debtor gave, and the creditors accepted, something which might fall short of payment in full. The creditors might get twenty shillings in the pound, and they might get considerably less. They took that risk. The deed under which they bound themselves to take that risk is properly called a composition deed, and the arrangement is properly called a compounding with the creditors."

Abandonment of a demand is not a composition. "To compound a debt is to abate a part, on receiving the residue." Haskins v. Newcomb, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 405, 408.

An agreement which is not one for the payment by the debtor of any sum or thing, and which does not purport and is not intended to operate as a release of the debtor, is not a composition. Wilson v. Samuels, 100 Cal. 514, 35 Pac. 148.

Henry v. Patterson, 57 Pa. St. 346.

Letter of license not an exception.— A letter of license (see infra, IV, B, 4) is only an apparent exception to this rule. Such an agreement is usually made in connection with a composition deed and as a part of the composition arrangement, and should always be under seal. But even if under seal a letter of license standing alone is not a composition, since it will not operate as a discharge or release of the debt. O'Brien v. Osborne, 10 Hare 92, 16 Jur. 960, 44 Eng. accord only, and if standing alone is no defense to an action on the original claim.[21] To make such an agreement operate as a composition it must, if between the debtor and a creditor, be part of a common purpose or understanding with other creditors;[22] and if between the creditors only must be accepted by the debtor either expressly or by acts.[23] But the agreement need not be executed; an executory composition is binding until breach.[24]

D. Mutuality — 1. Between Debtor and Creditors. In order to constitute a valid composition there must be mutuality of contract between the debtor or whoever proffers the composition and the creditors. A mere unilateral agreement which purports to bind only the debtor or someone who acts in his interest is not binding upon the creditors and cannot be enforced by them, unless they have accepted it;[25] while an agreement that in terms binds the creditors only cannot be enforced by the debtor, unless it has been accepted by him, even though Samuels, 100 Cal. 514, 35 Pac. 148. In O'Brien v. Osborne, 10 Hare 92, 16 Jur. 960, 44 Eng. Ch. 92, a debtor conveyed his life-interest in certain property in trust for creditors, parties to the deed; and the creditors in consideration thereof granted to the debtor license to reside and attend to his affairs in any place he might think proper, without suit or molestation in his person or his goods, chattels, and effects by any such creditors; and that in case of any suit or molestation by any of such creditors, contrary to the true intent and meaning of such license, the debtor should be wholly released and acquitted of the debt, and the deed might be pleaded in bar. It was held that this amounted only to a license by the creditor to the debtor to live unmolested and did not operate as a release of the debt or a discharge of the debtor's estate.

A contract which is not completed, but remains inchoate merely, will not amount to a composition; there must be a consummated contract. In Dolese v. McDougall, 182 Ill. 486, 55 N. E. 547 [affirming 78 Ill. App. 629], the creditors met and partly prepared a composition agreement which was never signed or acted upon. It was held that there was no composition.

the creditors may enforce it as amongst themselves.[26] But the agreement, even when written, need not be signed by the parties; it is sufficient if they assent to or act upon it.[27]

2. AMONG CREDITORS. In addition to the ordinary mutuality necessary to every contract, a composition must contain the further element of mutuality among the creditors themselves. That is, it must be entered into by them in reliance upon their mutual concessions, and in furtherance of a common purpose to secure their claims by compromise and settlement.[28] A series of separate and independent compromises with individual creditors, whether on the same or different terms, will not constitute a composition.[29] But if the common purpose be present, the Horstman v. Miller, 35 N. Y. Super. Ct. 29. In Crawford v. Krueger, 201 Pa. St. 348, 350, 50 Atl. 931, plaintiff was a judgment creditor of the defendant under a judgment entered in 1895. In 1898 the defendant began negotiations with his creditors for settlement. As a result of these negotiations the creditors with knowledge of each other's actions signed composition agreements, that of the plaintiff being as follows: "Pittsburg, Pa., Dec. 9th, 1898. To whom it may concern: This is to certify that R. C. Crawford, executor of Louisa M. Horn, in consideration of $100.00 to be paid him by O. E. Krueger, will satisfy the judgment of Louisa M. Horn vs. O. E. Krueger, at No. 352, May Term, 1895, D. S. B.; payment to be made within six months. T. J. Newlin, Attorney for R. C. Crawford, Ex." The agreements signed by the other creditors were of similar tenor. It was held that the facts showed a valid composition, Fell, J., who delivered the opinion of the court, saying: "The defendant owed a few thousand dollars, and had but a few hundred. He proposed to his creditors that instead of using his money to procure a discharge in bankruptcy, he should distribute it among them in discharge of his indebtedness. The plaintiff either personally or through an attorney who was fully authorized to act for him, assented to this proposition and agreed upon an amount for which he would give a release. He was told who the other creditors were, the amounts due them and what each was to receive in settlement. He was shown an agreement with one of them and was asked to sign a similar agreement to be shown the others. He prepared and executed an agreement addressed 'To whom it may concern,' in which he stated the terms on which he would settle. Manifestly the purpose in executing an agreement in this form was to promote a settlement, and it was given with the express understanding that it should be shown to the other creditors to induce them to settle, and it was shown them. This was not a separate settlement with a separate creditor, but a joint agreement between creditors, and a good composition."

Further statements of rule.— The true foundation of a composition deed is equality of provision for all the signers of the deed and that all shall stand in like condition. Lee v. Sellers, 81 Pa. St. 473. "The true ground on which it rests is that each creditor is induced into the composition on the supposition that all are to share and suffer in equal proportion — that there is to be an equality of loss and benefit." Per Brickell, C. J., in Henry v. Murphy, 54 Ala. 246, 253. "When a composition agreement is executed, the debtor professes and holds out to deal with all the creditors who enter into it, on terms of perfect equality." Per Craig, J., in Hefter v. Cahn, 73 Ill. 296, 301. In Ex p. Milner, 15 Q. B. D. 605, 612, 54 L. J. Q. B. 425, 53 L. T. Rep. N. S. 652, 2 Morr. Bankr. Rep. 190, 33 Wkly. Rep. 867, Brett, M. R., said: "In my opinion it is of the very essence of a composition of this nature [a common-law composition] that all the creditors who come differently.[33] And a mere equal distribution of assets is not the only thing required to preserve the necessary equality; the creditors must be put on the same basis in all respects, and any favor shown or advantage given to one or more will vitiate the composition, although the others receive their full share of the assets and are not prejudiced in any way except by the fact that all are not treated alike.[34] This principle, however, applies only where the agreement is silent; and if the other creditors assent each may secure for himself the best terms he can.[35]

F. Consideration. A composition is usually said to form an exception to the rule that requires a new consideration to support an agreement to accept part of a debt in satisfaction of the whole, and certainly no extrinsic consideration is required.[36] The exception, however, is more apparent than real. A composition in under it oblige themselves to each other, and the debtor obliges himself to every one of them, that, so far as he is concerned, all of them shall come in upon a footing of equality. This equality is implied by law from the very nature of the transaction, and, if it is carried out by means of a deed, then, unless there is something in the deed which is plainly to the contrary, equality between the creditors becomes an implied condition of the deed, and if any breach of this condition is committed by the debtor the deed becomes voidable by every creditor who has executed it. It appears to me that this is a general principle which is applicable to deeds entered into independently of any statute, equally with deeds entered into under the provisions of a statute. . . . Equality among the creditors is an implied condition of such an arrangement, and, if the arrangement is carried into effect by a deed, this becomes an implied condition of the deed, and, if this condition is not carried out, any creditor who has executed the deed is no longer bound by it, even if the breach of the condition takes place after his execution."

Applications of rule.— If different rates are paid to different parties there is no composition. Forster v. Bettes, 5 U. C. Q. B. 599. But the fact that judgment creditors are to be paid on the basis of their debts and costs is not an inequality that will avoid the composition. Evans v. Jones, 3 H. & C. 423, 11 Jur. N. S. 784, 34 L. J. Exch. 25, 11 L. T. Rep. N. S. 636. And a covenant to give to all creditors promissory notes for their compositions, "as soon as the deed should be delivered" to the debtor, signed and sealed by the creditors, does not render the deed invalid because of inequality of treatment. Peel v. Webster, 36 L. J. Exch. 188, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 598. When interest on the debt is paid without deducting the income tax, the debtor cannot afterward deduct that tax from the debt before calculating the composition. Ex p. Turner, 11 L. T. Rep. N. Further statements of rule.— The new consideration which enters into and supports such an agreement is the undertaking of the other creditors to give up a portion of their claims. Stewart v. Langston, 103 Ga. 290, 30 S. E. 35. The consideration for such an agreement is the mutual promise of the several creditors to take from their debtors something less or different than they were entitled to under their previous contracts with them. Schroeder v. Pissis, 128 Cal. 209, 60 Pac. 758. "An agreement to discharge the whole of a debt upon receiving payment of a portion is nudum pactum and not binding. But to this general rule there are some exceptions, one of which is a composition agreement where the creditors agree to take a portion of their debts in satisfaction of the whole. In such a case the agreement of each creditor is said to furnish a consideration for the agreement of every other creditor who becomes a party to the composition agreement. Each creditor enters into a new agreement with the debtor the consideration of which is the forbearance by all the other creditors who became parties to the composition to insist upon their claims in full." Per Earl, J., in Baxter v. Bell 86 N. Y. 195, 199 [reversing 19 Hun (N. Y.) 367].

Agreement to forbear merely.— There is an apparent exception to this rule in the case of an agreement merely to forbear, which is held by the weight of authority not to be binding, although entered into mutually by the creditors, unless there is some additional consideration, in the way of an advantage to the creditors. Pitts Sons' Mfg. Co. v. Commercial Nat. Bank, 121 Ill. 582, 13 N. E. 156; Henry v. Patterson, 57 Pa. St. 346. This doctrine, however, would seem to be without sound foundation; for if the mutual agreement of the creditors can form a consideration for what would otherwise be a mere nudum pactum, in one case, it certainly should so operate in all like cases; and in point of fact there is an advantage accruing to each creditor from the agreement of the others not to push their claims, thus granting an opportunity of satisfying the whole claim of each, if the debtor prospers. See cases cited supra, this note.

agreement is then no longer a composition but a compromise or an accord and satisfaction.[38]

III. VALIDITY.

A. In General. A true composition[39] rests upon a sufficient consideration,[40] and consequently if made in good faith and free from fraud is a valid contract and should be upheld and enforced.[41] It cannot be regarded as a fraud upon creditors if it affords all an opportunity of obtaining an equal composition for all their debts.[42] But any fraud, whether practised on the creditors by the debtor or by one creditor upon another, will invalidate the composition as to all injured parties.[43]

B. Execution. A composition agreement, even when in the form of a deed or other written instrument, need not be signed by the parties,[44] except when so

Policy of law to uphold rather than restrain.— "In entering into these compromise agreements, ordinarily, an important consideration operating upon the creditors is, the idea of relieving an unfortunate debtor from a cloud of debt that may perhaps otherwise overshadow his whole life, and paralyze all his future efforts at success; and this purpose can be accomplished only by all the creditors joining therein, and then by each being held thereto after it has been fully and fairly executed. We think that reason and good policy require that such agreements should be encouraged and upheld rather than restrained, as there is little danger that they will become too frequent, or result in mischief." Per Pierpoint, C. J., in Paddleford v. Thacher, 48 Vt. 574, 577. See also Diermeyer v. Hackman, 52 Mo. 282.

Thus when, in pursuance of a composition agreement, a corporation is formed to take over the debtor's property, which is transferred to it in good faith after notice to all the creditors and with the approval of most of them, and the stock of the corporation is transferred to another as collateral security, the transaction is not a fraud upon the creditors. required,[45] or in cases that fall within the statute of frauds.[46] And even when the agreement itself contains an express provision that it shall be void if not signed by all the creditors that condition will be satisfied if some of them accept it without signing.[47] The failure of some of the trustees to execute a deed of assignment will not invalidate it.[48] Nor will a composition be invalidated by the fact that blanks are left in the deed which are subsequently filled in,[49] or by the fact that a recited schedule is not attached.[50]
